If Congress does not act during this session, we may as well abandon our efforts in behalf of these most deserving patriots. Most of them are very poor indeed, and this pitiable may smooth and soften the last days of these few veterans who were prompt to answer the call of their country when brave men were much in demand. I have already this session introduced some fifty private bills to pension veterans of the Indian war from my district alone; and from my correspondence with them I know they are very poor, very feeble, and, in many cases, in a condition of actual suffering.

Mr. SNODGRASS. It is to pension the patriots who did the fighting.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to me for a moment?

Mr. KILGORE. I have promised to yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has five minutes of his time remaining. How much time does he yield to the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. KILGORE. Two minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I simply wanted to ask the gentleman who has called up this bill whether the time limit here is not reduced below that in any other service-pension law now on the statute book?

Mr. MOSES. It is not.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What is the reason for making it less than that required for a service pension for the war of 1812? There are a great many veterans who are unable to secure pensions because of their inability to prove the required length of service. Why do you make the limit less in this case than in relation to the war of 1812?

Mr. MOSES. It is not less. The soldiers have a fourteen-day limit. We put this on the same footing with the Mexican veterans, at $8 per month.

Mr. HERMANN. But you do not carry it up that far. You lack six years.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Did your committee take into consideration the possibility of this bill making a marked discrimination in our pension legislation in favor of men who served in the Indian wars and afterwards, perhaps, in the war of the rebellion on the Confederate side, as compared with men who enlisted on the Union side in the late war and afterwards, in any way, got into the Confederate service? In the latter case the service in the Confederate army is an absolute bar to a pension. No matter if the man had served three years in the Union Army and enlisted in the Confederate service to get out of prison, the existing law bars him absolutely; but now you make a new law by which a man on account of his service in the Indian wars becomes pensionable, although he may have served four years in the Confederate army.

Mr. MOSES. The same is true with regard to the act to pension the Mexican veterans. I will say to the gentleman from Maine that to rule out these men on the ground that they were in the Confederate service would bar a great many of them.

Mr. BUSHNELL. Oh, no; there are many who were engaged in the Black Hawk war to whom that statement would not apply.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am not now arguing the question whether any of them ought to be ruled out because they were in the Confederate service, but I do think that this bill makes a marked discrimination which the committee ought to have taken into consideration in reporting it.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER], who charged me awhile ago with sectionalism. I had not referred to this bill in any spirit of sectionalism. I am willing, at any time and under any circumstances, to do equal and exact justice between the people of all portions of this country. I referred to the South in connection with the bill because I knew that the Seminole war had been in the South, and the reference seems to be justified by the admission of the gentleman in charge of the bill that all the veterans who would receive pensions under this legislation were in the Confederate service.

Mr. BUSHNELL. But that admission was wrong. There are veterans of the Black Hawk war to whom it would not apply.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The admission may have been wrong, but the fact remains that the beneficiaries of this bill would be principally in the South. Now, I do not make this point upon any sectional ground. What I am seeking is to have justice done to the people west of the Mississippi River, the people of Oregon, of Washington, and of California, who rendered services in the different Indian wars in that part of the country which have been as valuable to this Government and to the cause of civilization as any that were ever rendered in the Seminole war or any other Indian war.

Mr. OATES. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say to him that I am satisfied that not one in fifty of these soldiers ever served a day in the Confederate army.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Well, I do not care whether they did or not. If they rendered service to their country I am willing to recognize it whether they afterwards served in the Confederate army or in the Union army. But I do believe honestly that the people of Oregon, Washington, and California, who rendered faithful and honest service in their Indian wars, and helped to develop this great nation west of the Mississippi River, are entitled to as much consideration and to as much pension as those who served in the Seminole war, or any other Indian war in the eastern or southern part of the country.

A MEMBER. What war do you refer to?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The Nez Percé war, and the wars all through that country in 1855, 1856, 1857.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. This bill does not militate against their rights.

A MEMBER. Bring in your bill for them.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Gentlemen may say, "bring in your bill," but unless the committee will report it and put it upon the Calendar how can we get such a bill passed? There was a bill for that purpose before the committee, and why did they not report it? We are only asking for equal and exact justice for those who rendered great service thirty-six years ago to the Union of these States. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MOSES] to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think we had better have the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—yeas 23, noes 124; less than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

Mr. BOUTELLE and Mr. REED. Let us have tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, only 28 voting in favor thereof.

The question was then taken on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill; and it was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

INDIANS ON COLVILLE RESERVATION.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the desk, with the amendments reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7567) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Indians residing on the Colville Reservation, in the State of Washington, with certain modifications, and to make appropriation to carry into effect the same.

Whereas Mark A. Fullerton, W. H. H. Dufur, and James F. Payne did, on the 9th day of May, 1891, conclude an agreement with the Indians residing on the Colville Reservation, in the State of Washington, which said agreement is in words and figures as follows, to wit:

"Articles of agreement made and entered into on the 9th day of May, A. D. 1891, at the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, by Mark A. Fullerton, W. H. H. Dufur, and James F. Payne, commissioners on the part of the United States appointed for the purpose and the Indians residing on said reservation.

"ARTICLE 1. The said Colville Indians residing and having their homes on the said Colville Indian Reservation, upon the conditions hereinafter expressed, do hereby surrender and relinquish to the United States all their right, title, claim, and interest in and to and over the following described tract of country on the Colville Indian Reservation in the State of Washington, viz:

"Beginning at a point on the eastern boundary line of the Colville Indian Reservation where the township line between townships 34 and 35 north, of range 37 east, of the Willamette meridian, if extended west, would intersect the same, said point being in the middle of the channel of the Columbia River, and running thence west parallel with the forty-ninth parallel of latitude to the western boundary line of the said Colville Indian Reservation in the Okanagon River, thence north following the said western boundary line to the said forty-ninth parallel of latitude, thence east along the said forty-ninth parallel of latitude to the northeast corner of said Colville Indian Reservation, thence south following the eastern boundary of said reservation to the place of beginning, containing by estimation 1,500,000 acres, the same being a portion of the Colville Indian Reservation created by executed order dated April 9, 1872.

"ART. 2 Each and every Indian now residing upon the portion of the Colville Indian Reservation hereby ceded and relinquished, and who is so entitled to reside thereon, shall be entitled to select from said ceded portion 80 acres of land, which shall be allotted to such Indian in severalty. No restrictions as to locality shall be placed upon such selections other than that they shall be so located as to conform to the Congressional survey or subdivisions of said tract or country, and any Indian having improvements may have the preference over any other person in and to the tract of land containing such improvements so far as they are within a legal subdivision not exceeding in area the quantity of land that he or she may be entitled to select and locate. All such allotments shall be made at the cost of the United States, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may from time to time prescribe.

"ART. 3. All Indians residing in the lands hereby ceded and relinquished shall have the right, if they so prefer under the direction of the Indian agent, to occupy and reside upon such portions of the Colville Indian Reservation not hereby ceded as are not occupied by or in the possession of any other Indian or Indians.

"ART. 4. Whereas the lands used and occupied for school purposes at what is known as the Tonasket School, on Buonaparte Creek, on said reservation, have been ceded and relinquished to the United States, it is agreed and stipulated that in lieu thereof the United States will provide for a school site and school purposes a tract of land conveniently and desirably located upon the Colville Indian Reservation hereby ceded, to contain 640 acres, and upon the same, at the cost of the United States, will erect suitable buildings for an Indian school and in all respects provide for the conduct, equipment, and maintenance thereof as Indian schools are now provided for, it being expressly understood and agreed that no part of the purchase money hereinafter mentioned of the lands hereby ceded is to be employed or expended in the erection of school buildings or in the maintenance of Indian schools upon said reservation. And it is further stipulated that in lieu of the sawmill, gristmill, and other mill property hereby ceded, the United States will provide a suitable and convenient mill site, and will thereon, at its own cost, erect suitable buildings and place all necessary fixtures.

"ART. 5. That in consideration of the cession, surrender, and relinquishment to the United States of all the title, claim, right, estate, and interest of said Indians in and to the tract of land above described, the United States will pay to the said Indians, the beneficiaries of this agreement, to be distributed per capita, the sum of $1,500,000, payable in five annual installments of $300,000 each, with interest thereon at 5 per cent after this agreement shall take effect.

"In all such payments each and every Indian aforesaid over the age of eighteen years shall receive and receipt for his or her share of said purchase money as the same becomes due and payable, and with respect to the share of each and every Indian aforesaid who shall be under eighteen years of age the same shall be invested, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for the benefit of such Indians, at a rate of interest not less than 5 per cent per annum, and the interest thereof, with so much of the principal as may be deemed necessary and proper, shall be paid annually to the father of such Indian so entitled and under the age of eighteen years, if living, and if such father be dead, then the same shall be paid to the mother, if living, and in the event the said mother be dead, then the same shall be paid to the Indian agent of the Colville Reservation for the use and maintenance of such orphan; and when such minors shall attain their majority, their shares in such purchase money, or so much thereof as may remain unpaid, shall be paid over to them, together with any interest that may be due thereon.

"ART. 6. It is stipulated and agreed that the lands to be allotted as aforesaid to said Indians, and the improvements thereon, shall not be subject, within the limitations prescribed by law, to taxation for any purpose, national, State, or municipal; that said Indians shall enjoy without let or hindrance the right at all times freely to use all water power and water courses belonging to or connected with the lands to be so allotted, and that the right to hunt and fish in common with all other persons on lands not allotted to said Indians shall not be taken away or in anywise abridged.

"ART. 7. It is agreed that the United States at its own cost will erect on the Colville Indian Reservation not ceded, at some point suitable and convenient to the Indians who may elect to remain upon the portion of the reservation hereby ceded and have allotted thereon as heretofore stipulated, a blacksmith shop, and furnish same with suitable tools and implements, and employ a competent blacksmith for the benefit of said Indians.

"ART. 8. And whereas it is believed that many of the Indians above the age of eighteen years, residing and having their homes upon the said Colville Reservation, are well advanced in industrial pursuits and economical training, and possess habits so well formed as to warrant an early payment to such Indians of their shares in the purchase money of the lands hereby ceded and relinquished, it is therefore specially agreed and stipulated that the United States will pay in two equal installments, with interest, the shares of all such Indians above eighteen years of age in said purchase money who will furnish to the Secretary of the Interior a certificate in due form from the Indian agent on said Colville Reservation to the effect that such Indian or Indians are of good character, of sober and industrious habits, and are suitable persons to intrust with the expenditure of money.

"ART. 9. It is stipulated and provided that such male adult Indians upon the Colville Reservation as do not, on account of absence or for any other cause, sign this agreement, shall, upon receiving their shares in said purchase money, execute and file with the Indian agent on said Colville Reservation a brief relinquishment, releasing to the United States all their right, title, interest, and estate in and to the lands hereby ceded.

"And it is further stipulated that in the event any of said Indians shall, after reasonable notice given, fail, neglect, refuse, or decline to receive and receipt for their shares in said purchase money, then and in all such cases, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, the share or shares of such Indians which are not claimed or called for shall become common property of all Indians on said reservation who conform to this agreement, and they shall share and share alike therein.

"ART. 10. At the request of said Indians it is agreed and stipulated that the school site referred to in article 4 of this agreement shall be located upon that portion of the lands hereby ceded which the Indians interested in said school may select. The sawmill and gristmill referred to in article 4 shall be located upon that part of the said reservation not ceded at such point as will be convenient to the Indians electing to remain on the ceded part of reservation.

"ART. 11. That in further consideration of the said cession and relinquishment of the tract of land set forth and particularly described in this agreement to the United States by said Indians and their chiefs or headmen, and upon the understanding that said chiefs and their people will faithfully perform this agreement, the United States, in addition to the purchase money aforesaid, will pay to Moses, chief of the Columbia tribe of Indians, the sum of $1,500 in cash; to Joseph, chief of the Nez Percés tribe, the sum of $1,000 in cash; to Barnaby, chief of the Colville tribe, the sum of $1,000 in cash; to Antwine, chief of the Okanagan tribe, the sum of $1,000 in cash; and to Arpaughin, chief of the Lake tribe, the sum of $1,000 in cash, from and after the ratification and approval of this agreement by Congress, at which time the same will go into effect.

"ART. 12. That this agreement shall go into effect from and after its approval by Congress.

"Witness our hands and seals the day and year first above written.

S. F. SHERWOOD.

E. C. THOMAS.

"I, Robert Flett, United States Indian interpreter for the Colville Indian Agency, do hereby certify, on honor, that the foregoing agreement was fully read and by me correctly interpreted, and that the contents thereof were fully explained to and fully understood by said Indians before the signing and sealing of the same.

"Witness:

"A. M. ANDERSON."

"ROBERT FLETT.

Therefore,
Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled: That said agreement be, and the same is hereby, accepted, ratified, and confirmed, except as to articles 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, which are changed and modified on the part of the United States, as follows: Strike out article 4, and in lieu thereof change article 5, so as to read:

"ARTICLE 4. That in consideration of the cession, surrender, and relinquishment to the United States of all the title, claim, right, estate, and interest of said Indians in and to the tract of land above described, the United States will cause the lands not required for allotments, or for other purposes for the use of the Indians, to be opened to settlement and entry by the proclamation of the President of the United States under the general laws applicable to said State: Provided, That each entryman under the homestead laws, before receiving final certificate and patent for the land covered by his entry, shall pay to the United States the sum of $1.25 per acre for each acre thereof. The proceeds of the sales of all of said lands under any of the land laws of the United States shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Indians, to draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, and such portions thereof shall be paid to said Indians in such sums and under such regulations as shall be deemed best for the Indians by the Secretary of the Interior."

Article 6 is changed so as to be numbered article 5. Articles 7, 8, 10, and 12 are stricken out, and article 9 is changed so as to be numbered article 6: Provided, That this act shall take effect only upon the acceptance of the modifications and changes made by the United States as to said articles of said agreement by said Indians, in manner and form as said agreement was assented to, which said acceptance and consent shall be made known by proclamation by the President of the United States upon satisfactory proof presented to him that the said acceptance and consent have been duly obtained.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying out the terms and stipulations of said agreement, the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, namely:

For the purpose of making the allotments on the lands by said agreement ceded, as provided in articles 2 and 5, including the necessary surveys, $35,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That said allotments shall be made in manner and form, and the titles thereto held and evidenced as provided in the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," as amended by the act of February 28, 1891, entitled "An act to amend and further extend the benefits of the act approved February 8, 1887, entitled 'An act to provide for the allotment of land in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States over the Indians, and for other purposes.'"

For payment to five chiefs as provided for in article 7, $5,500. In all, $40,500.

By unanimous consent, a second on the motion to suspend the rules was considered as ordered.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WILSON of Washington, it was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof; and the bill was passed.

BINDER-TWINE ON THE FREE LIST.

Mr. BRYAN. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6005) to place binding-twine on the free list.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act all binding-twine manufactured in whole or in part fromistle or Tampico fiber, jute, manilla, sisal grass, or sunn, shall, when imported, be exempt from duty.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts thereof inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. BURROWS. I think the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] does not intend to ask that this bill be passed under a suspension of the rules, with no proper opportunity for its consideration in the House and without any member of the minority of the committee having been notified.

Mr. BRYAN. The intention in making this motion is to pass the bill under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. BURROWS. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] will act as tellers.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. I object.

The tellers took their places; and after continuing the count for some time they reported—ayes 160, noes none.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, would a motion for a call of the House be in order? No quorum has voted.

Mr. BRYAN. I hope we shall be allowed to continue the count a few minutes longer; we need only a few more to make a quorum.

Mr. BURROWS. I make the motion for a call of the House. No quorum having voted, I think the motion is in order.

Mr. BRYAN. I think that will not be necessary. Gentlemen who are in the Capitol have been sent for, and are coming in every moment.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest that a motion for a call is not in order while the House is dividing. The tellers have not completed their count.

The count was continued a few moments, when the tellers reported—ayes 170, noes none.

The SPEAKER. The motion having been seconded, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] to control the fifteen minutes allowed for debate in favor of the motion, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] to control the fifteen minutes against it.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask the Chair to recognize in my stead the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], my colleague on the committee, who has had this matter more particularly in charge.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will do so. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to yield this time to anyone who desires to speak on our side of the question. This matter has been debated by a large number of gentlemen who addressed the Committee of the Whole in the discussion of the free-wool bill. I said at that time all that I cared to say, and am willing that these fifteen minutes be consumed by any gentleman on our side who may wish to speak.

Several MEMBERS (to Mr. BRYAN). Reserve your time.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, no one desiring to speak at this time on our side, I reserve the whole of the time until after gentlemen of the opposition have spoken.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska reserves his time.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that we are entitled to hear something from the other side as to why this bill should pass before we are called upon to answer anything that has not been said. I think the gentleman from Nebraska ought to use a portion of his time. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!" on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion—

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will call my attention at the expiration of ten minutes I shall be obliged, as I wish to reserve five minutes of my time.

I have never heard of any good reason for placing binding-twine on the free list that would not apply with equal force to every other article manufactured in the United States. We have already placed the raw material on the free list by the McKinley bill. We reserved a duty of seven-tenths of a cent a pound on binder-twine in that bill. This was far less protection than was reserved in the Mills bill, which was believed, by the country at least, to have started on the lines of free trade. Not satisfied with that seven-tenths of a cent per pound, our friends on the other side now propose to put this article on the free list. The seven-tenths of a cent thus collected on binder-twine amounts to 1 cent per acre for binder-twine used in binding grain. The only reason I have ever heard hinted at for this legislation now contemplated is, that our friends in the Northwest believe that it will be a sop for the farmers; that this little bill with its 1 cent an acre will appease the feelings that have been aroused among the farmers on account of making wool free, and tend to help the other side of the House in some way in the coming election.

Is there any excuse for the legislation proposed? Binder-twine sold two years ago at the factory at nearly 12 cents a pound. During all the season last year, from May to December, it sold at the factories all over the United States at 7½ cents a pound. Manufacturers and people who are experts in regard to this branch of business will show the House, as they have shown the Bureau of Statistics, that there is no profit on it at 7½ cents a pound even with the raw material free. But in addition to that, growing out of the binder-twine business, there have sprung up in the Western States manufacturing of binding-twine out of hemp. In the State of Nebraska there is a factory of this kind. Thousands of acres of hemp are raised there by the farmers each year and sold to this factory, helping to take the place of some other farm product, helping to diversify farm industries; and the people of Nebraska are not demanding this bill, if am to judge from letters and clippings from newspapers which come to me from that State.

In the State of Illinois there is also a large factory making the binding-twine from hemp raised by the farmers of that State. The farmers of Kentucky have been engaged in the same industry. So that now one-seventh of the total product of the binder-twine used in this country is made from domestic hemp. And every pound, I want to say, that is used in the United States is made here now even under the duty of seven-tenths of a cent per pound. But this condition is not to exist in the future, even with this small protective duty which amounts to barely 10 per cent, the smallest on the whole list of manufactured articles. You propose to destroy the industry. In Belfast they are reaching out for our trade. They are sending propositions to the people of this country. They are doubling up their machinery; they are increasing their facilities to be ready to compete with our own people with this small duty of seven-tenths of a cent a pound.

It is true that this year binder's twine has made a small advance at the factory. So has sisal, so has sun grass, so has manilla, and so have all of the foreign fibers out of which binder's twine is made shown a slight advance. Why, two or three years ago in Minnesota they concluded to undertake the manufacture of binder's twine in the State prison. They got the machinery last year and put it in operation, and alleging that they are furnishing binder's twine to their customers at cost, they have lately increased the price from 9 to 10 cents a pound, as the authorities say, for the purpose of giving 40 cents a day for the labor of the convicts.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. PAYNE. No, I have not the time. Why, a question like this to be discussed in fifteen minutes! A thing that has not been heard of in any tariff legislation in this House.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. PAYNE. I did not yield. I thought the gentleman understood that. It is alleged in the report of the committee—no, not alleged except by implication—that there is a trust or combination in this country.

Now, the fact is that the National Cordage Company makes 50 per cent of the binder's twine made in this country, and the fact is still further known that there are many factories outside of the National Cordage Company making 50 per cent more, or the balance of the binder's twine used here.

One large concern at Philadelphia, Fittler & Co., are making a large proportion of the binding-twine used in this country, and within the last few days—and I do not know but the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] wants to pass this bill before the final results are reached—it is announced in the newspapers that the National Cordage Company have gone to pieces and that one of the members of that company, owning a large interest, has withdrawn entirely from it. Perhaps the gentleman is in such haste because he fears it will disappear entirely, and that this nightmare he is holding up to the farmers of the country for the purpose of making political capital, for the purpose of catching the votes of the farmers, trying to hoodwink them, to cheat them, to buy them by this little sop of a cent per acre, will pass away from his vision and the delusion be lost to his party.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used ten minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BRYAN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] opposes the passage of this bill, nor am I surprised at the line of argument that he uses. It is the same old argument we have heard here for the last twenty years. Whenever a proposition has been made to strike down one of these protected trusts in the East in the interest of agriculture, the same objections are urged on the floor to the consideration and passage of the bill. First you demand a quorum, and second you demand the protection of the few men who are making binding-twine in the United States, and the enhancement of their profits at the expense of the farmers throughout the length and breadth of the wheat belt of the country, who are compelled to pay tribute to that trust at every harvest.

It is true that pending this bill, and pending the discussion of the tariff question even in the last Congress, the binding-twine trust, for reasons of its own, reduced by a fraction the price of binding-twine during harvest. But they have it in their power to put it up again any day in the year. They have an absolute and uncontrolled power over the price of binding-twine in the United States, and if this House should decline to pass this bill to-day, binding-twine will go up 4 or 5 cents a pound, not only at the factory but throughout the retail stores in the United States.

The gentleman says this is only seven-tenths of a cent protection; but that seven-tenths of a cent protection keeps out the competition of the world; and where is the farmer who raises wheat in the United States who gets seven-tenths of a cent protection on his wheat? That seven-tenths is a very large per cent of the price of this binding-twine; and if you could give to the farmers of the United States to-day the same percentage of protection that would amount to anything, and if it was available, the price of wheat to-day would be 25 per cent higher than it is. But the wheat-growers can not be protected; it is a commercial impossibility. We raise a surplus to ship to the consuming countries of the world, and we have to sell that surplus against the lowest-priced labor on earth, and in the open markets of the world. The wheat-grower must compete with all the pauper labor and the lowest pauper labor on earth, and he must sell the surplus that fixes the price of his entire crop in competition with that labor.

No protection can be accorded him, and yet he is bound by the price that this trust fixes upon an article which he is compelled to have. Such a demand has been made for the passage of this bill and the release of the wheat-growers of the country from the burden of this trust that the farmers' organizations of the State of Illinois and other Western States have offered thousands and thousands of dollars to any inventor in the United States who could invent anything that would rid them of the incubus of this trust; offering to pay any inventor in the United States a magnificent bonus for the discovery of any machine that will utilize the straw, or use any substance in place of this binding-twine, so as to rid them of the burden and tyranny of this trust.

I am satisfied that there is not only not a gentleman upon this side of the House who will vote against this bill, but there are a large number of gentlemen on the other side of the House who, if they heed the demand of their constituents, not only farmers but all the fair and intelligent people whom they represent, will vote for this bill also.

Mr. BRYAN. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STOUT].

Mr. STOUT. Mr. Speaker, whatever might be my action upon this bill if competition were free throughout the United States, I must certainly say that while the cordage business is controlled by a great trust I shall vote for the bill. It is a matter of current news that within the last week one concern which received $200,000 a year from the trust for shutting up their shop has withdrawn from it. If, then, one cordage factory can forego $200,000 a year, certainly there must be something more than 1 cent per acre in the profit upon binding-twine. I am here ready to vote a tariff reduction against any trust; and certainly a cordage combination which controls one-half of the product of the whole country needs this legislation to restrict the monopoly. I am in favor of the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON].

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that our Republican friends will not stand in the way of the passage of this bill. We have not been expecting very much from the Democratic majority of this House towards granting relief to the farmers, but, now that they seem in a liberal mood, and as the gentleman from New York has stated it is but a very small matter, seven-tenths of a cent, I hope the Republicans will not stand in the way of the passage of this measure, which is in the interest of the farmer.

It is a well-known fact all over the Northwest that under this small duty the cordage trust was built up, and in order to break up that trust or combination, the farmers were compelled to throw aside their binders and resort to the old way of binding grain of thirty years ago by binding it with the grain. It was so in Kansas. They actually had to lay their binders up in the fence corners and bind their own grain, because the binding-twine was so expensive that it did not pay to bind the grain with the twine. They had to use headers for cutting the grain and every device. That is the way we brought down the price of the binding-twine; and now here is a measure brought in that I believe will destroy this trust and combination that has forced up the price of twine before, and will do so again at the very first opportunity it gets. Therefore, I hope our Republican friends will not put themselves on record as opposed to this very small measure of relief to the agricultural classes of this country.

Mr. BRYAN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I regret that we could not have had more time for the investigation of this question. I felt that my Republican friends were right in regard to that matter at this time.

This is a question involving vital interest and of great importance to the agricultural classes of our country. The Republicans tell us they are the friends of the farmer. How shall we receive this statement? Would it not be correct to say they are his friends just so long as he can be used to their advantage? They will give him a crumb now and then. But is it not a matter of fact that under the operations of the tariff, as we have had it up to the present time, that the Government itself has never realized one dollar of revenue from the tariff on binding-twine?

Then is it not evident to all that the masses are taxed in the interest of the classes? In whose interest is the tax of seven-tenths of 1 cent? Is it not a bonus which the Government has levied on the agriculturists of our country, in the interest of its thirty-five manufacturers of binding-twine? Ah, says some one, that amounts to but little. That may be true when divided among the hundreds of thousands of farmers of this country. But that $700,000 tariff saved to the agriculturists of the West would have saved the homes of seven hundred farmers. May we not with equal justice claim that hundreds of thousands of our farmers have been bankrupted by the unjust legislation of the last twenty-five years?

You may think that we are not in earnest. You may think that you can browbeat and sneer at our present condition, and with jeers can tell us we are prosperous. But we want you to know that the leaven which has been used in the Western country has now permeated the agricultural masses of this whole country, and to-day we are prepared to vote intelligently upon this question as well as on the financial interests of our country.

We want it distinctly understood that the farmers are now demanding free binding-twine as their right. A vote against this bill will not be considered as in favor of the farmers of this country, but in favor of the monopolists. And every man who votes at this time with the syndicates that are combining to increase the price of this article, necessary to the farmers, will be regarded by them as voting in the interest of combines, monopolists, and trusts.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield to my colleague [Mr. COVERT].

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Speaker, my esteemed friend from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] has hazarded the opinion that no gentlemen upon this side of the Chamber would feel inclined to vote against this bill. I, for one, intend to vote against it, and it occurs to me that there are reasons sufficiently potential to induce many members on this side of the House to vote in opposition to the pending measure. My objection is leveled against the provision which makes binding-twine manufactured in whole or in part from jute exempt from duty.

This bill is supposed to be in the interest of the farmer: First, to give him cheap binding-twine; second, as an attack upon the trust or corporation manufacturing sisal and New Zealand fibers, though New Zealand hemp is not mentioned in the bill.

It is well known in legislative history that in 1890 a distinguished Senator from the State of Minnesota introduced a similar measure in behalf of the farmers. Upon being informed that jute binder-twine was not made by any trust or combination, that it was just beginning to be used as a substitute for more expensive twine, that it was sold at a much lower price than other twine, and was therefore a benefit to the farmers, the word "jute" was at once stricken from the bill. In that connection it was demonstrated that the establishments engaged in its manufacture had no community of interest whatever with any trust or combination among themselves. Each manufacturer acted independently in ordinary competition, and the result was the furnishing of this article at an exceedingly cheap rate to the consumer.

The same conditions prevail to-day. Very much that has been said by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] is void of application here. I defy any gentleman upon this floor to establish the fact that there exists to-day anywhere in this country a syndicate or trust among jute binder-twine manufacturers. Will the enactment of this measure help the farmer? Why, some few years ago the cordage mills advanced the price of binder-twine very heavily, and as a consequence the jute mills began to manufacture it from jute. At once the consumers felt the benefit of this competition and bought at cheaper prices. Jute should be stricken from the bill. It is claimed that if jute binder-twine is admitted free anything in the shape of a twisted band of jute can be admitted without duty, and every jute mill in the country will be most seriously affected.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that in view of the existing very low rate of duty upon this article the Ways and Means Committee have gone too far in seeking to place it upon the free list; and that to accomplish what at best would be seemingly a small good to the people of certain sections only, a very grievous injury is threatened to large and equally important industries and to the people generally of the entire country.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to add just a word to what I have already said. Under the competition now we have cheaper binder-twine than ever before. The gentleman from Kansas, in the supposed interest of the farmers, wants to strike down that competition by taking off the duty of 10 per cent; action which would drive the people who are outside of the Cordage Company out of the market and transfer the industry to Belfast or Hongkong. Drive them out, and what then? Then you have a monopoly formed of the importers, charging the old price that they charged years ago, and consigning your binders back to the "fence corners," of which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] has spoken, or somewhere else.

It is simply a question of whether you will keep alive the active competition in this article. Gentlemen talk about the National Cordage Company; do they not know that nearly all the manufacture of the Cordage Company is of rope and cordage and twine other than binder's twine, articles upon which there is a duty much larger than seven-tenths of a cent a pound? Yet gentlemen upon the other side do not tackle that duty, but devote all their energies to this one item. There is, there can be, but one object; they hope to deceive somebody out on the Western prairies into voting the Democratic ticket. This bill is not in the interest of the farmers, and it is against the interest of 5,000 employes engaged in the State of Massachusetts alone in the making of binder's twine in this country, and of 20,000 people who are dependent upon the daily labor of these employes for the wages upon which they live.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, just a word in reply. It seems that any attempt to reduce the tariff is always "trivial" enough in the eyes of our friends on the other side to justify strenuous opposition. We have heretofore called attention to the fact that they call it trivial to assist the farmers to the extent of 1 cent an acre, but do not call it trivial to assist a manufacturer of binder-twine to the extent of $20,000. In the State represented by the honorable gentleman who has just spoken [Mr. PAYNE] they have a binding-twine trust, they have a National Cordage Company, which, according to its own statement, presented to our committee, controls the majority of the output.

The gentleman may convince himself that it is right to oppose this bill. Those who vote against it may convince themselves that it is right to do so. But they have a more difficult task on hand when they undertake to convince 65,000,000 of people that they are right in standing between the farmers and the relief which they demand. It is admitted that there is a trust in this manufacture and the one person who withdrew from it, Mr. Goode, stated a few days ago that he had received $200,000 a year not to operate his mills, but as an inducement to close them, thus throwing the men out of employment. Yet I do not find my friend from New York worrying because those men are thrown out of employment.

If a trust shuts up a factory and throws its employes out upon the world, that is perfectly right according to Republican logic, but if the consumers demand the right to buy at lower prices, then we hear earnest objections from gentlemen upon the other side. They tell us that the effect of this legislation will not be to reduce the price, that the tariff has reduced the price. I ask them why it is that people who manufacture this article are so anxious to continue a system which they say reduces the price of that which they have to sell? We have listened too long to the men who levy these charges upon the farmers and who continually assert that they are the only friends of the farmer. It is too much like the parable of the fox, who, when the farmer undertook to build a fence around his chicken house, said: "You go about your business; we foxes will take care of the chickens; we are used to that sort of thing; we understand the chicken business; you can do something else." [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, the farmer has been allowing these men to attend to this business for him long enough, but he has now come to the point where he is going to attend to it himself, and gentlemen who represent farming constituencies upon this floor will have something more than child's play on their hands when they go back and undertake to explain to their constituents why it is that they are willing to refuse even the benefit of 1 cent an acre to this oppressed class. I do not care to consume more time. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to suspend the rules and pass this bill. Let us so vote that we can defend our action before our constituents. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Speaker, is an amendment in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 183, nays 47, not voting 98; as follows:

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

Mr. ANDREW (before the result of the vote was announced). Mr. Speaker, I would like to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall of the House, and did he fail to hear his name called?

Mr. ANDREW. I was not in during the second roll call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain the request.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. MANSUR with Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee.
 Mr. PARRETT with Mr. WAUGH.
 Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas with Mr. COGSWELL.
 Mr. ALDERSON with Mr. DOLLIVER.
 Mr. TURNER with Mr. BARTINE.
 Mr. PEEL with Mr. WILSON of Washington.
 Mr. PENDLETON with Mr. SMITH of Illinois.
 Mr. NORTON with Mr. SHONK.
 Mr. McMILLIN with Mr. BURROWS.
 Mr. McKEIGHAN with Mr. BROSIUS.
 Mr. LAWSON of Georgia with Mr. HOUK of Tennessee.
 Mr. BUNN with Mr. BELDEN.
 Mr. HARE with Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR.
 Mr. BANKHEAD with Mr. MILLIKEN.
 Mr. BENTLEY with Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania.
 Mr. WASHINGTON with Mr. O'DONNELL.
 Mr. GEISSENHAINER with Mr. WRIGHT.
 Mr. BOWMAN with Mr. TAYLOR of Illinois.

 Mr. STUMP with Mr. MORSE.
 Mr. BUNTING with Mr. PERKINS.
 Mr. COWLES with Mr. DOAN.
 Mr. CAMPBELL with Mr. KETCHAM.
 Mr. BRETZ with Mr. BRODERICK, except on the binding-twine bill.
 Mr. HARRIES with Mr. JOLLEY, except on the binding-twine bill and river and harbor bill.
 For this day:
 Mr. McKINNEY with Mr. CHARLES W. STONE.
 Mr. RUSK with Mr. RUSSELL.

Mr. AMERMAN with Mr. RIFE.

Mr. PIERCE with Mr. LIND, for two weeks from April 30.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota with Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois, until May 7, inclusive.

Mr. FITHIAN with Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois, until the 7th instant.

Mr. ENOCHS with Mr. DUNGAN, until the 4th instant, inclusive.

Mr. HUFF. Mr. Speaker, I observe that I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILSON]. If he were here I would vote "no."

Mr. PIERCE. I am paired with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND]. If he were present I would vote in the affirmative on this question.

Mr. BRYAN. My colleague Mr. McKEIGHAN is paired, and desires me to state that if he were present he would vote "aye" on this motion.

Mr. JOLLEY. Mr. Speaker, the pair which has been read between the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HARRIES] and myself, refers to all other bills except this and the river and harbor bill.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] is absent from the House to-day in consequence of the death of his brother.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. McMILLIN, indefinitely, on account of the death of his brother.

EXPENSES OF TREATY WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8503) making appropriations for expenses that may be incurred under the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, concluded at Washington, February 23, and April 18, 1892.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of $150,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the President to fulfill the stipulations contained in the treaties between the United States and Great Britain, signed on the 23rd day of February and the 18th day of April, 1892, in relation to the tribunal of arbitration at Paris.

SEC. 2. That the sum hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, with the approval of the President of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

There being no second demanded, the question was taken on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules are suspended and the bill is passed.

MILITARY POST, HELENA, MONT.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 5108) to establish a military post at or near the city of Helena, in Lewis and Clarke County, in the State of Montana.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the transfer and conveyance to the United States of a good and sufficient title to not less than 1,000 acres of land, without cost to the United States, situated at or near the city of Helena, in the county of Lewis and Clarke and State of Montana, and on or near a railroad, and constituting an eligible and suitable site for an army post, and to be approved and accepted by the Secretary of War for that purpose, then and thereupon there shall be, and is hereby established and located on said land a United States army post of such character and capacity as the Secretary of War shall direct and approve.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of defraying the expenses of locating said army post as aforesaid, and of constructing barracks, quarters, hospitals, kitchens, mess halls, stables, storehouses, magazines, defenses, and other necessary and suitable improvements and buildings, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be drawn from the Treasury and applied to said purposes under direction of the Secretary of War: Provided, That no part of said sum hereby appropriated shall be expended until the aforesaid tract of land shall have been conveyed to and accepted by the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BUTLER and Mr. HOLMAN demanded a second.

Mr. DIXON. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. BUTLER. I object.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. BUTLER and Mr. DIXON as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 160, noes 8. So a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Montana [Mr. DIXON] in support of the bill and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BUTLER] in opposition to it.

Mr. DIXON. I yield the time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE].

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is briefly this: In 1887 there was established what is known as Fort Custer, in the State of Montana. That post is 33 miles from any line of railroad. It is becoming so dilapidated that it is necessary to have extensive repairs made. The General of the Army, two other generals, and the Secretary of War have recommended the abandonment of Fort Custer, and have recommended the establishment of another post to which the troops and munitions of war from Fort Custer may be sent. They have selected Helena, in the State of Montana, because of its peculiarly desirable location. It is situated on two great railroad lines from the east to the west. It is situated within 120 miles of the Canadian border, on a railway line running north, and there is also a railway line running south from this point. It is also situated on this side of the great range of the Rocky Mountains.

But, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House particularly to the difference in cost between articles purchased at the present post and at Helena if this change shall be made. I hold in my hand a table that will show the difference between the expense in one year's time of certain articles and provisions necessarily used at Fort Custer and the price at which they could have been obtained at Helena had that been the post instead. During the last year the cost of oak wood at Fort Custer was $14 per cord and the total amount paid out on that account was $43,200. The cost of 1,750,000 pounds of oats, at $1.74 per bushel, was $30,450, and the cost of 1,700 tons of hay, at $16.85, was $28,645, or a total of $102,295. The same articles, at the market rates prevailing in the city of Helena, could have been obtained last year for $62,850, and there would have been a net saving to the Government in one year on these necessary articles used in that fort of $60,000.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman state the estimated cost of locating the barracks at this point?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The estimate submitted is $300,000; the bill is for an appropriation of $100,000. There is in this bill a provision which the War Department is now making in all such cases where the community desires or expects the establishment of a military post, and it is this, and I wish the attention of the House to it, because it is a very valuable consideration. That provision is that there shall be 1,000 acres of land at or near the city of Helena, to be donated to the Government for this purpose.

Mr. LANHAM. What disposition is made of the land now in use?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Fort Custer is to be sold. The lands are part of an Indian reservation. These lands which are to be donated are estimated variously at from $25 an acre up to $40 an acre. Taking $30 as the fair average, there is to be donated to this Government $30,000 worth of land toward the establishment of this post.

Mr. BAILEY. What makes that land valuable? Is it valuable for farming purposes?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is valuable for farming purposes partly, and the other thing that makes it valuable is its proximity to a large and growing city.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I ask the gentleman from Ohio what wisdom there is in withdrawing valuable lands from people who need them, and in devoting them to military purposes?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If there was any dearth of farming lands out in that extensive Northwest there might be some such objection to it.

Mr. BAILEY. But there must be a dearth, if they are worth $25 an acre.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Oh, no; that is not an excessive value for lands near a city that is growing as rapidly as Helena is. Then there is this further proposition, that if we do not abandon Fort Custer, we must repair it; and it is estimated that it will take $45,000 to repair Fort Custer, because of its remoteness from the railroad. The carrying of the materials 33 miles from the railroad by teams necessarily makes them very expensive.

Mr. LANHAM. Can the gentleman give any estimate as to the value of the present site of Fort Custer and as to what the land can be sold at?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I can not. I do not know that. The greater portion of it I believe belongs to an Indian reservation.

Mr. BUTLER. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio and myself do not differ except on one or two matters. Fort Custer is in a fairly good condition. I was there but a few years ago, and spent some time there as a member of a committee of the House. It is in fairly good condition, but would require, I have no doubt, some repairs to be made in a short time. The statement of the gentleman from Ohio is, of course, correct, that being some thirty-odd miles from a railroad, some of the supplies are materially more expensive; but this is offset somewhat by the fact that the teaming is performed by the Crow Indians, as has been the policy of our Government with reference to that fort and other forts and reservations, and this has been a good school of education to them. Still, that should not be taken materially into the account.

One item mentioned by my friend here to make up the excessive cost of furnishing supplies, over what it would be at Helena, struck me very forcibly, and that was the item of hay. There are in that region of country very fine bodies of prairie pasture land, some of the finest in the country, and I do not see how it would be possible that hay should be more expensive there than at Helena. On the contrary I should suppose it would be cheaper.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. This statement is from Gen. Merritt, in charge of that fort, and I suppose he states the matter correctly.

Mr. HOLMAN. I take it for granted there has been some mistake about that. Of course I feel very confident that hay would be more cheaply obtained right in the midst of it than it would be at an important town like Helena. But these are merely incidental matters, in the discussion of which I do not care to occupy the time of the House.

The main objection to this bill is this: Admitting that it is well enough to abandon Fort Custer and establish a new fort near Helena; admitting that, then what? This bill proposes to appropriate for the present year $100,000, out of $300,000, the estimated cost of the post.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There is no estimate of that kind except that the bill as it passed the Senate was for $300,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I take it for granted that $300,000 is the estimated cost, because it came from the Senate with that appropriation in it; but it is now a bill appropriating $100,000. The gentleman will observe that up to this time we have not got any title at all to any land for the purpose of making a site for this fort. We will pass at this session of Congress, as we did in the last Congress, more or less building bills to authorize the construction of public buildings, but the bills will not carry appropriations; and this, if gentlemen will reflect, is for manifest reasons.

These appropriations ought to go in a single bill and should go in the sundry civil bill, so that a member can see at a glance what amount of money has been appropriated for the expenses of our Government. Now, we have placed in the sundry civil bill $300,000 for fortifications, and we propose to increase that amount somewhat, though not materially, and we propose to add to that a provision that the money so appropriated may be used, as far as may be found necessary during the present coming fiscal year, in commencing the work at Helena and at Little Rock, Ark.

We have already passed a bill establishing a fort at Little Rock. It bore an appropriation of $75,000. That was the limitation, so far as I am informed. I said to the gentleman having charge of that bill, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY], that I did not think that appropriation should be made in that bill. I had no objection to the bill passing, authorizing the Government to receive the conveyance of the thousand acres from the State of Arkansas; that the title should be perfected in the United States, and that a provision ultimately should be made for the erection of the fort. On that suggestion the gentleman consented to strike out the $75,000 in the bill; so that it passed, authorizing the Government to accept the title to the thousand acres of land, and providing for the erection of a fortification at that point. Now, I ask the gentleman to place these two places on the same footing.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Now, right there; do you not know they are on a radically different footing. At the outset, do you not know that Little Rock gets a fortress worth $70,000 for this thousand acres at Little Rock?

Mr. HOLMAN. They stand on the same footing exactly as to the principle involved; that is to say, in both cases the Government is to accept the title to a thousand acres of land from the respective States; but in the case of Arkansas we have there, I believe, 30 acres of land at the old post, and we propose to do with that as we have done in hundreds of other cases, to give that piece of land to the city of Little Rock for a public park. So that that is the only difference. We give Helena nothing. We just take from them the conveyance to the thousand acres of land and agree to erect a fort thereon. In the case of Little Rock we accept this thousand acres, and on the perfection of the title in the Government we grant to them the old fort as a public park, and propose ultimately to erect a fort at that point.

Now, I think the appropriation should not be made at this time, and it ought not to be made until the title is vested in the United States in this thousand acres of land. Whenever the State of Montana shall have vested in our Government a title to a thousand acres of land, and Arkansas shall have done the same thing, then I am perfectly willing that an appropriate appropriation shall be made. And I repeat what I have already said, that we have in the sundry civil appropriation bill, a bill which is already on your Calendar, an appropriation of $300,000 for the purpose of erecting forts, and for the purpose of avoiding any misapprehension as to how that money shall be expended, there is a provision expressly authorizing the Secretary of War to use such sums as may be necessary for the erection of the forts which I have named. There has been a third mentioned, in Vermont, I believe, that was reported favorably.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am perfectly willing that the authority should be given to accept the donation. Let the acceptance of the donation be taken as a declaration of the purpose of Congress to authorize the construction of a fort, and let the appropriation come in in regular course on a regular appropriation bill.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The gentleman has said that he was perfectly willing, after the land had been donated by the city of Helena and of Little Rock, Ark., to make an appropriation after the title had been vested in the United States. Would not the gentleman extend his consent one line further? We are seeking the acceptance of the Government of a thousand acres of land at Spokane for the same purpose. Now, when we can get the title vested in the United States in that land, does the gentleman state that he is willing to let us have an appropriation?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think these military gentlemen are getting away beyond what is necessary in the erection and maintenance of these fortifications. I concede it is well enough to consolidate these forts, which would make the places better for the officers and their families. I think they should be thrown together in larger posts. Gentlemen must bear in mind that Fort Custer was erected for the purpose of overawing the Crow Indians, and Custer is on the line or border of that Indian reservation.

Mr. HULL. Does the gentleman say that it is the design of the Army to overawe the Crow Indians?

Mr. HOLMAN. No; but I have seen so many representations on the part of our public officers of this kind that I think you could always find something to complain of, and I believe that it will be found after you erect the fort at Helena that it will be well to keep a small force at Fort Custer, so that they may have a supervision of the Indians that may be in that immediate vicinity.

However, I put it on the other ground. I ask my friend from Ohio, in the interest of good legislation, of fair legislation, to put the Montana bill upon the same footing as the Arkansas bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. We can not do that; because Little Rock gets a tract of land worth $70,000, and we have no such tract to cede here.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, this is not a matter of dicker between the United States and these localities. These are supposed to be strategic points. I do not think these posts are necessary, but of course on that subject I yield my views to the heads of the Department. However, if the posts are necessary they should both stand on the same footing. You have passed one of these bills already and it has passed the Senate and been approved by the President. Now, I ask my friend, in the interest of fair legislation, to put this on the same footing as the other, with the understanding that the appropriation in the sundry civil bill shall be sufficient and shall contain a provision that when the title is acquired whatever money is necessary may be expended from that appropriation to commence the construction of these buildings.

I think that in common fairness you ought to agree to do this. That matter of appropriation did not go to my friend's committee, and, in the natural course of things, it ought not to have gone there. I have often tried to explain heretofore, and I think every gentleman understands, that it is very desirable to keep these appropriations together, especially if you intend to have economy. We put these separate bills through here without reference to what has been done in other portions of our legislation, and we are rapidly coming to the point when every one of us should pause and consider the state of our appropriations. We have indulged heretofore in an ardent hope that a record would be made by this Congress of which every member, whether Democratic or Republican, would be proud—proud that in the present exigency in our affairs there had been severe economy practiced.

But how can you expect to have severe economy when every bill that comes in here bears an appropriation, and when you draw upon the public Treasury in that unsystematic way, instead of grouping your appropriations together so that you can see on the face of one bill the whole amount of money that is disbursed for a given line of public service? I do not like to antagonize a bill coming from the Committee on Military Affairs, one of the most intelligent of all our committees, one of the most vigilant in guarding the public interests, a body composed of gentlemen every one of whom is eminently fit to occupy a position upon so important a committee; but I appeal to the chairman of that committee to allow proper legislation to take place in this instance, to the end that when we come to foot up our bills we shall not turn pale at the record that we have been making.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eight minutes left.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I thought this bill was fair legislation. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has informed the House that his committee are going to recommend an appropriation in the sundry civil bill for the benefit of the War Department, for the repair of posts, to the amount of $300,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no, not in that way. The terms are general.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The appropriation that he is thus offering to the House and the country is not one-half as large as is necessary for that purpose, not one-half as large as is necessary to take care of and properly repair the old posts, so that there certainly would not be a cent of it that could be used for the benefit of any new post. So much for that proposition. Now, this bill contains substantially one proposition which the gentleman suggests I ought to accept. It is embodied in this provision of the bill:

Provided, That no part of said sum hereby appropriated shall be expended until the aforesaid tract of land shall have been conveyed to and accepted by the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it makes the appropriation.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. What difference does that make if the money is not to be expended until the title is acquired?

Mr. HOLMAN. You will see that by and by.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. What difference does it make if this bill does say that the money is appropriated, when there is a proviso that none of it shall be expended until the title has become vested in the Government? Now, the gentleman makes a proposition as a business man that this House shall pass this bill without offering any inducement whatever to anybody to contribute this 1,000 acres of land. You would not find a citizen of Helena so blind as to contribute any portion of this 1,000 acres with the understanding that no military post was to be established there until some subsequent Congress might appropriate the money. The bill as it stands offers an inducement to contribute the land by making the appropriation, and that is the difference between the bill and the gentleman's proposition.

The gentleman appeals to us to put this bill on the same footing with the Little Rock bill, and I wish to point out the difference between the two cases. In the case of Little Rock the United States had a tract of land inside the city limits which was worth $70,000, which was donated to that city by the terms of that bill. Yes, the Little Rock bill disposed of Government property of the value of $70,000. It does not make any difference whether it is money or property given in exchange for the lands for future use, the bill conveyed to the city of Little Rock $70,000 worth of Government property as an inducement to furnish the 1,000 acres of land.

Now, the gentleman from Indiana says, let us put these two posts on an equality. How can you do it? There is no disposition anywhere to make a discrimination against one in favor of the other; but how can you put the two on an equality? There is no property at Helena to be ceded to the city in consideration of their furnishing this 1,000 acres of land.

The gentleman does not question the propriety of establishing a post at Helena. He could not well do that, because he has too much consideration and respect for the officials whose duty it is to investigate these things and decide upon them.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; but there is no hurry about this matter.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No one wishes to hurry. The location of a post at Helena is not a new idea. The War Department and the General of the Army have had under consideration for some time the establishment of a post at this peculiarly well-fitted location, this peculiarly strong strategic position, this position to which transportation is of easy access, and where the competition with regard to transportation is so strong that the United States Government would get much benefit from such competition.

Now, all there is in the opposition is this: The gentleman from Indiana wishes us to attempt to do something which will be almost a nullity. He proposes that we take away the inducement of the citizens of Montana to contribute this 1,000 acres of land, and then expect them to donate it to the Government. If you do that you might as well not pass the bill at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not your bill perfect without the appropriation, just as much so as a public-building bill?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. In that form there is no inducement to the citizens of Helena or to the State of Montana to furnish a single foot of ground. In public-building bills we buy the ground. There might come in another House even more economical than this in which someone might want to put this off still further than the gentleman wants to put it off. And so this post would not be established, although the War Department and three generals of the Army, as I have said, have recommended the abandonment of Fort Custer, have disapproved paying out $45,000 to repair that fort, and recommend the location of a new post at a point where, as I have said, the Government will save in one year $60,000 in the cost of transportation, while at the same time the post will be placed at a point from which troops can be sent in several directions upon several lines of railway. At Fort Custer they can only be sent over a wagon road 33 miles to a single railroad line.

Upon this state of facts the Committee on Military Affairs unanimously—and I thank the gentleman from Indiana for his high complacency to the intelligence, vigilance, and public spirit of that committee—the committee, after three careful examinations, after having before them two of these generals and questioning them, after investigating the matter thoroughly, decided that the post ought to be established at the point here proposed and that this bill ought to go through.

The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill,

The SPEAKER said: The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 143, noes 13. Mr. HOLMAN. I think that on a question involving $100,000 we should have a quorum.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I hope the gentleman will not insist on a quorum. A quorum is sometimes hard to get in this House.

Mr. BROWN. We will get one now, if we can.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will take their places as tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN (after a pause). Mr. Speaker, I will not insist further on the point of no quorum.

So, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

RECORDS OF VOLUNTEER ARMIES, ETC.

Mr. BELKNAP. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2305) to provide for the permanent preservation and custody of the records of the volunteer armies, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the division organized by the Secretary of War in his office for the preservation and custody of the records of the volunteer armies under the name of the record and pension division is hereby established as now organized, and shall hereafter be known as the Record and Pension Office of the War Department; and the President is hereby authorized to select an officer of the Army whom he may consider to be especially well qualified for the performance of the duties hereinafter specified, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint him in the Army to be chief of said office, who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a colonel, and shall, under the Secretary of War, have charge of the military and hospital records of the volunteer armies and the pension and other business of the War Department connected herewith; and all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the terms of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. PATTON. I demand a second.

Mr. BELKNAP. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PATTON] will consent to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PATTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PATTON] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BELKNAP] will act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 155, noes 17.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BELKNAP] to control the time allowed for debate in favor of the bill and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PATTON] to control the time against it.

Mr. BELKNAP. I reserve my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PATTON] is recognized. [A pause.]

Mr. DOCKERY. If no member desires to discuss this bill I hope we shall have a vote. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, we want to be heard on this question. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BUTLER] whatever time he wants.

Mr. BUTLER. Two or three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the principle embodied in this bill of making any civil office necessarily to be filled by a regular army officer. If this bill shall pass it will become illegal for any man from civil life to be appointed the head of the department created. I can conceive of no condition of things under which such appointment ought to be compulsory. I do not doubt that there are men in the Regular Army who can fill the place creditably and well; but that does not carry with it the thought that men from civil life, or from the volunteer service can not fill it equally well and satisfactorily. That is the first basis of objection to the bill, and I earnestly object to seeing any law passed by Congress whereby any man or particular set of men must be eligible to certain things of a civil nature when the class of men so specified have been educated almost entirely as military men. It is a wrong principle to establish in a Government like this.

But, sir, there is another reason why I object to this bill, and that is that every one who supports the bill declares that it is in the interest of Maj. Ainsworth. Now, whether that be true or not the bill remains objectionable. If it be true, then it is a fact that this same man has been already promoted ahead of his time, in comparison with other regular army officers, by ten or twelve years, and this is another promotion still ahead of the men serving twelve or fifteen years longer in the same line of the service. If it is not in the interest of Maj. Ainsworth, it is objectionable on the ground I have stated, namely, that it is made necessary that the office shall be filled by a colonel of the regular Army.

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. BUTLER. If I have time I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PICKLER. I am a little on the fence about this bill myself; but I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa if a few weeks ago he did not vote to make all of the Indian agents out of military officers?

Mr. BUTLER. Of course I did. But that is in no sense of the word a comparison with this bill nor to the principles involved in the civil service. Those officials were not the heads of bureaus or anything of the kind. They were merely ministerial agents established on the frontier among the Indians, whose duties consisted in looking after Government property and taking care of the Indians on the particular reservation. In such cases the services of a military man in time of trouble would become very essential to the Government.

But this office, at present in question, is purely a civil office, located in Washington, having nothing to do with trouble with the Indians, or any other hostile power, in time of war, or anything of that kind—solely a civil office.

Mr. PICKLER. I agree with the gentleman, and hope that the bill will be amended so as not to compel the appointment of a military officer.

Mr. BUTLER. If it were an appointment on the frontier, where Indians are to be dealt with, it would be an excuse for the suggestion made in the bill, and would offer some reason for making the appointment of a military man. But here is a civil department in the city of Washington, far away from trouble, where no question as to military necessity can apply, and hence I claim that the bill has not the merit of necessity, and is not in harmony with our institutions. It should not pass.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the gentleman allow me—

Mr. BUTLER. I believe my time has expired.

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that if there was a true understanding of this bill, the members present would not support it. I am satisfied that it is not understood, and I desire to have a report which I made on a House bill, a duplicate of this, a minority report in the Military Committee, read for the information of the House. I send it up and ask its reading.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. While this report is being sent up will the gentleman allow me to ask whether it is possible to have the bill so amended as to make this gentleman the permanent head of the Bureau of Pensions? Take him away altogether from this particular office and make him the permanent head of that Bureau. I can not vote for this bill, but I would like to support the other.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Well, this is in the same general, good direction.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Does the gentleman think the suggestion I have made could be carried out? [Laughter.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I understand not.

Mr. PICKLER. The office of Commissioner of Pensions is well filled by the present incumbent.

Mr. BOWERS. Not as well filled as Ainsworth's is.

Mr. PATTON. I ask to have the report read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6483) to provide for the permanent preservation and custody of the records of the volunteer armies, and for other purposes, reported it back with the recommendation that the bill do pass, and submit statements and arguments in support of same. Not being able to concur in this report, I beg leave to submit the following amendments and reasons therefor.

In line 9, after the word "select," strike out all up to and including the word "Army" and insert the following: "a person."

In line 12, after the word "to," strike out the word "appoint," and insert the word "place," and in the same line strike out the following words: "the Army to be chief," and insert in place thereof the word "charge."

Strike out all of line 13, and in line 17 strike out all after the word "there-with," including also all of line 18, and insert the following:

"For which he shall be paid an annual salary of $4,000, which amount is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The reasons for the amendments may be stated in brief as follows:

(1) It is not thought that this Bureau should be established in such a way as to make it illegal for its chief to be appointed from civil life, any more than bureaus in other Departments of the Government.

(2) It appears to be the understanding that the present occupant, Maj. Ainsworth, is to be appointed under the provisions of the bill as chief, with the rank of colonel. This promotion would be manifestly unjust to many army officers who are, to say the least, equally meritorious, having served faithfully in line, as soldiers and officers should serve.

It appears from the Army Register that out of the twenty-five majors of infantry all but six made their first appearance upon the military stage in 1861, and of the six exceptions five were appointed in 1862, and, on the other hand, Maj. Ainsworth was appointed into the medical department of the Army with the rank of first lieutenant in 1874, from twelve to thirteen years after those of his rank as now rated above. Five years later he was made a captain, and a little more than two years later he was raised to the rank of major. This last promotion dates from February 27, 1892; and now, before he has been accustomed to his new emblems of rank, it is concluded by some of his friends that promotion by one grade at a time is entirely too slow, and he should save the time and expense of uniforming with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and with one stride land in the place and rank of a full-fledged colonel.

While all this has been going on, his duties, which may have been important and well performed, have been but little more than clerical. The effect of such a line of promotion, in view of the injustice practiced upon officers in these discriminations, can not fail to have a bad effect on the officers who have suffered by it. The discipline and effectiveness of the Army requires that a regular line of promotion should be practiced and adhered to except for good cause.

By the provisions of this amended bill it is in the power of the President to appoint an army officer as the chief of the proposed bureau, if he so desires, but there is no cause given for his promotion on account of the performance of the duties of that office.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

D. H. PATTON.

BILL AS AMENDED.

A bill to provide for the permanent preservation and custody of the records of the volunteer armies, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the division organized by the Secretary of War in his office for the preservation and custody of the records of the volunteer armies, under the name of the Record and Pension Division, is hereby established as now organized and shall hereafter be known as the Record and Pension Office of the War Department; and the President is hereby authorized to select a person whom he may consider to be especially well qualified for the performance of the duties hereinafter specified and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to place him in charge of said office, and shall, under the Secretary of War, have charge of the military and hospital records of the volunteer armies and the pension and other business of the War Department connected therewith; for which he shall be paid an annual salary of $4,000, which amount is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. PATTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I understand the bill is in reference to Mr. Ainsworth, who has only had his rank as major since February last. He entered the Army in 1874 as first lieutenant and now occupies the rank of major, and it is proposed here to establish a bureau in which only an officer with the rank of colonel is entitled to preside, the object being to place Maj. Ainsworth over that department with the rank of colonel and in this way to give him the promotion from major to colonel and at the same time make a civilian ineligible to preside as the head of that bureau.

Now, I oppose it not only on the ground of the injustice to the line officers of the Army who are passed over by this promotion, but on account of the fact that it establishes a position which a person from civil life is ineligible to occupy. Now, this report which has just been read is really a substitute for the bill. It establishes the bureau just as it is asked to be established, but it does away with the authority given the President to appoint a major, and to make him a colonel in order to do it. Now, if this substitute is adopted in the place of the bill, everything will go on just the same. The major no doubt will be appointed, and his duties will be performed in the same manner, but he will not be promoted to be a colonel. I think that if this subject is properly understood, the House will see that the substitute embraces the proper action to take.

I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WAUGH].

Mr. WAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection in the world to the establishment of this bureau; but I am in favor of the amendment. This is a civil office, and there is no reason in the world which can be shown here why any one of 65,000,000 of Americans should not be eligible to that office.

Mr. PICKLER. That is right.

Mr. WAUGH. And I want gentlemen to be careful how they vote on this question. The precedent is a wrong one, elevating an army officer, not for conduct in the line of duty, upon the field, or for military services, but for civil service. Why, if you adopt the rule of promoting regular army officers for civil service, you will have all the army officers abandoning field service and coming here to Washington to seek civil positions; for through them they will hope to get promotions that they can not get in the field.

I am in favor of the amendment; and I want to say that the Fifty-second Congress can do no more manly act, if this selection is to be made from a class, than to select that man from the great volunteer army, and one of the men who helped to make that record.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There is nothing in the bill to prevent that selection.

Mr. BELKNAP. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill which has engaged attention in the House and Senate for the last four years. The purpose of it is to make permanent a bureau which already exists, and in order to carry out the purposes of that bureau it has been deemed important by all those who have considered the question, not only Congress, but the Secretary of War, the preceding Secretary as well as the present one, that this should be placed under an officer who will remain permanently in charge of it. Now, it is said that the purpose is to appoint Maj. Ainsworth to the office. This no doubt is true. Maj. Ainsworth has shown most remarkable ability in caring for and arranging the records of the volunteer soldiers of all our armies.

Mr. SIMPSON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. SIMPSON. Will not the effect of this be to establish a permanent bureau?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The bureau is already established, and has been in existence a great many years. It has been known as a division or bureau. It was organized by the Secretary of War in his office for the preservation and custody of the records of the volunteer armies.

Mr. SIMPSON. If it is already established, why do you wish to establish it again? It reminds me of the saying of the poet, that "Twice he slew the slain." [Laughter.] I understand that it will establish a new and permanent bureau.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. It will make permanent a bureau already existing, and this bill proposes to sanction this organization by law and to provide that it shall hereafter be known as the record and pension office of the War Department.

Mr. SIMPSON. For the purpose of giving places to some more political deadheads.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The gentleman is very much mistaken. So far from making political deadheads, the purpose of this bill is to as far as possible separate the pension business from political interference. The Secretary of War, Mr. Elkins, recommends the passage of the bill for this very reason. In his letter to Congress, dated March 1, Secretary Elkins says:

The chief of this office should not be a partisan; he should be a man of the highest character and purest integrity, beyond the reach of political pressure and not subject to change.

It is for the purpose of preserving the records of our volunteer armies of all our wars. They commenced with the records of the volunteers of the war of 1861-'65—

Mr. SIMPSON. I understand from the reading of the bill, if the gentleman will allow me, that this makes it a separate bureau, while it is now a bureau of the War Department only.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. It will still be under the War Department. It makes no change in that regard. Maj. Ainsworth has proceeded with the arrangement of the record of the soldiers of the war of 1861-'65, and has arranged the rolls of the soldiers of the Indian wars and the war of 1812, and now he is going back to the rolls of the soldiers of the Revolution.

The bill itself states that the officer appointed shall, under the Secretary of War, have charge of the military and hospital records. Gen. Schofield, in his letter of February 29, 1892, in referring to this bill, says:

I have the honor to report that this duty of the preservation and use of the records of the volunteer armies has of late years assumed very great importance. The business has been systematized in the War Department by the creation of the record and pension division, necessary steps taken to secure the preservation of these invaluable records and their prompt use for all legitimate purposes, without incurring the danger that before existed of their final destruction.

And in further referring to the subject, the general says:

The importance of this duty, in my judgment, fully justifies the creation of a permanent office in the War Department properly styled "The record and pension office," and the selection by the President of a competent officer, who, under permanent appointment, shall have the custody of those records. The rank of colonel would be an entirely appropriate rank for the officer in charge of this important duty.

Mr. WAUGH. Why is it that we want an army officer?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Because it is important to have it permanent; and your own Secretary of War, Mr. Elkins, states that the chief of this bureau should not be a partisan. We do not want a partisan in charge of records which involve the honor, the integrity, and the history of the soldiers who fought for this country and who have so assisted to make it the great country it is to-day. I will read from Secretary Elkins's letter of March 1, to which I have just referred. Mr. Elkins says:

Large experience is needed in dealing with the intricate and complicated details of the work, and if the office was held by uncertain tenure, much delay and confusion would result. So it is necessary that an officer of the Army be permanently in charge who shall be directly responsible to the Secretary of War as provided in the bill.

In order to show the absolute necessity of the bureau being permanently established I will read from the report of Secretary Proctor, in 1889:

The muster rolls are in a deplorable condition, dropping to pieces from time and use, and the record evidence they contain, of such great value to the public as well as to individuals, would soon have been hopelessly lost. The completion of the card-index system, however, will be pushed rapidly, and it promises to solve not only the question of the most expeditious and economical use of the rolls, but their preservation as well, as they will not then need to be used except in extraordinary cases. I have felt justified in going into the details of this work somewhat on account of its importance and its peculiar interest to the veterans of the war.

But, in further reply to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WAUGH], I call his attention to the fact that Secretary Elkins positively states that this bureau should be in charge of an officer of the Army. I again read from his letter to Congress of March 1:

An officer of the Army should be in charge of the office. It deals entirely with the records of volunteers of all wars. It has in its keeping records affecting the reputations of the living and the dead, and papers of the greatest value in guarding the doors of the Treasury against false and fraudulent claims.

A MEMBER. What assurance have we that the President will appoint Maj. Ainsworth?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I do not think there is a particle of doubt upon that question. In his last annual message the President said:

The great work done in the record and pension division of the War Department by Maj. Ainsworth, of the Medical Corps, and the clerks under him, is entitled to honorable mention. Taking up the work with nearly 41,000 cases behind, he closed the last fiscal year without a single case left over, though the new cases had increased 52 per cent in number over the previous year by reason of the pension legislation of the last Congress.

I will also call attention to the fact that under Maj. Ainsworth's management the expense of doing this work has been reduced to one-half the cost of similar work under persons who are not connected with the Army.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield to me for just one question? Now, I see that several gentlemen here, who are opposing the appointment of this officer, were extremely anxious to have Indian agents appointed from the Army. Can there be any serious objection to having an army officer take charge of the records of the Army?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The same arguments which were used in the advocacy of appointing officers of the Army as Indian agents would apply with much greater force here. In order to give the bureau its full value, it must have a permanent head; and as these records refer alone to the Army, there are many reasons why they should be in charge of an army officer.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Does the gentleman think that it is a proper course to go into the Army and pick out an officer and promote him by legislation?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The bill only provides that the President is authorized to select an officer of the Army whom he may consider to be especially well qualified for the performance of the duties specified, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to appoint him in the Army to be chief of said office. I will read again from the report or letter of the Secretary of War:

He should be a man of the highest character and purest integrity, beyond the reach of political pressure.

Mr. STOCKDALE. And there are not many below him to whom that would apply.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I am glad to be able to say that with some exceptions officers of the Army are men of very high character and very high integrity. I think the words used by the Secretary would apply very generally.

Mr. WAUGH. Do not many such men exist out of the Regular Army?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Yes, many, very many millions of such men.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Did not I understand the gentleman from Alabama to say in his argument that this is already a permanent department? I understand it is simply a division; and this bill undertakes to make it a permanent division?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. It is already established; it is not a new bureau.

Mr. SNODGRASS. It is simply a division now.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I do not think it has been called a division, but that is not important. The Secretary of War in his communications refers to it as a bureau, and especially informs us it is not a new bureau. In his letter of March 1 he says:

The record and pension office of the War Department is not a new bureau. The organization already exists by order of the Secretary of War, and the proposed legislation gives permanence to that organization.

It is very seldom that a measure is presented to Congress with such universal commendation as the one now before us. It is in the line of economy and efficient administration of very important duties.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BELKNAP. I yield now to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I earnestly hope that this bill will receive the favorable action of this House. After nine years' connection, more or less, with this great division of the Government, I feel it a privilege to be permitted to say a few words in support of this measure.

The system which that gentleman has inaugurated is a discovery, an invention, and he has manifested a genius which deserves much of his country. Evidence recently taken before the Committee on Appropriations shows that within the next calendar year at least one hundred clerks can be dispensed with in that division, and probably more.

Mr. DOCKERY. About six hundred, if my colleague will permit me to correct him in that respect.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. I did not so recollect it. [Cries of "That is right!"]

Well, six hundred; better still. Maj. Ainsworth himself did not give the exact number; but any increase of the expenses growing out of this legislation will be as a drop in the bucket to what will be saved by the efforts of this officer of the Government.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Our Government is equipped with able men, and I do not reflect on any of them when I say that I know no officer of the Government who is his superior, and I can name but few that are his equal. The work of the Government has been expedited to a degree that I can not name, and the soldiers of the Government interested in the prompt execution of the law owe him a debt of gratitude of which this bill can not be any evidence.

I have nothing more to add, Mr. Speaker, but to say that from close observation of his work, and from great familiarity with it, it is a tribute which I hope will be paid to this splendid officer.

Mr. BELKNAP. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] two minutes.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, the first objection made to this bill, is that it provides that the appointment shall be made from the officers of the Army. There is another portion of the bill which is objected to, and that is that this is a promotion in connection with the Army; but, if that provision were not in the bill it would still be open to the objection of providing for an additional officer. As it is, it provides something similar to what is provided for in many institutions, that is an officer is to have rank and allowances as colonel. So it is with the officer who has charge of the public buildings and grounds.

This bill contains no intimation whatever as to the particular officer who shall be appointed. It leaves that in the control of the President, but it requires that the one who is appointed shall have such qualifications as are usually found in an officer of the Army. Why? To deal with records that are peculiarly army records, to deal with matters which, if there should be any expert at all required, are matters for an expert to deal with. The Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia is a captain, but he has the rank and pay of a major, and there are several other instances to which I might refer. This is the report of the whole of the House Committee on Military Affairs, with the exception of the gentleman from Indiana. It is a report upon a bill that has passed the Senate because gentlemen understand that it is the Senate bill that is before them. This is the unanimous report of the House Military Committee, with one exception, in favor of the passage of the Senate bill.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I want to add one word to what has been said. This is a deserved tribute to an officer whose extraordinary skill and genius furnish the most marvelously rapid service that is furnished by any Department of the Government. By the passage of this bill Congress means to compliment Maj. F. C. Ainsworth, and in doing so perhaps its action in thus complimenting him may have some reflex influence upon the other Departments.

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this discussion be continued for twenty minutes.

Several members objected.

Mr. BELKNAP. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT].

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WAUGH] complains of this bill because it does not permit the appointment of a volunteer officer, and on Friday evening last he read some resolutions of the Grand Army of his State, so that he may perhaps feel instructed by those resolutions. Now, to relieve his mind I will read a dispatch from the assistant adjutant-general of the department of the Grand Army of the Republic in Indiana, which is addressed to George D. Davis, Washington, D. C., and is as follows:

The resolutions were indefinitely postponed.

To put the matter briefly, I will say that a dispatch of inquiry concerning these resolutions was sent to this officer. Evidently the gentleman [Mr. WAUGH] has been misinformed as to the action taken by the Grand Army of the Republic in the State of Indiana in reference to this subject.

Mr. WAUGH. I will simply say, Mr. Speaker, that the information I received was from the adjutant-general of the State inclosing the resolution to me direct.

Mr. BELKNAP. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes left.

Mr. BELKNAP. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that as a volunteer I would stand as strongly for the rights of the volunteer officers and soldiers as either of the gentlemen from Indiana; but, sir, this House, without regard to party, recognizes the man who should have this position without his name being mentioned in the bill. He has earned it by a service to the volunteer soldiers of this country which far exceeds in value that rendered by any other man since the close of the war. I hope this bill will pass by such a vote as to show all public officers that Congress appreciates good work, whether in the Army or out of it. One word more: This is a division of the War Department, where it is peculiarly appropriate that a regular army officer should be detailed for duty.

Mr. BELKNAP. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE].

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I want to say, in behalf of the officer in charge of this division, that it is the best organized, best conducted service in the Government of the United States at Washington. There is no trouble in finding there the record of any soldier who had a record in the Federal Army. The records that are now in the War Department are being rapidly destroyed, but Maj. Ainsworth has organized a system by which the records are being perfectly preserved and, as has been said here, there will be a very large force of clerks discharged within a year.

Mr. PATTON. Admitting all that you say, do you think that is a sufficient reason for promoting this officer to a colonelcy?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. I do, sir. I think it is a sufficient reason why Maj. Ainsworth should be promoted, and I go further. I go further than this bill goes, because I would name Maj. Ainsworth in the bill, and by legislation would put him in charge of that division.

Mr. PATTON. This bill amounts to the same thing.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I want to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question. If the bill passes and this division is made permanent, has the gentleman any security that Maj. Ainsworth will be appointed to the position?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Oh, no.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER (having put the question on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill). The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. PATTON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered; only 14 voting in favor thereof.

Mr. PATTON. I demand a division.

The question being again taken, there were—yeas 156, nays 15. So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the motion was agreed to, and the bill was passed. [Applause.]

EXPUNGING OF REMARKS OF MR. WALKER.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution reported by the Committee on Printing with reference to the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] be postponed for two weeks from to-day.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. OATES in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7624) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893.

The Clerk (resuming the reading of the bill) read as follows:

China: Consul at Amoy, $3,000; consul at Canton, $3,000; consul at Chin Kiang, $3,000; consul at Fuchau, $3,000; consul at Hankow, $3,000; consul at Tientsin, $3,000; $18,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move an amendment simply to correct an error in spelling.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 15, on page 11, strike out "Fuchau" and insert "Foo Chow."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. An amendment was offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN] which, by unanimous consent, went over until to-day. I ask that, if it be agreeable to the gentleman from Michigan, action on that amendment be delayed until we have progressed further with the bill.

Mr. CHIPMAN. My colleague [Mr. BURROWS] has requested me to let the matter be continued, and I accede to that request.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be passed over informally if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. BLOUNT] whether the paragraph relating to the International Union of American Republics has been passed over?

Mr. BLOUNT. It has been.

Mr. DOCKERY. To be returned to hereafter with the right of amendment?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HITT. I move to amend by inserting after line 17 on page 11—

Colombia: Consul at Colon, $3,000.

Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment, if adopted, will be to continue the salary of our consul at Colon at the present rate. The bill proposes to reduce this salary $500. The reason why it should be continued at the present figure is that the duties of the office are important and the post is one difficult to fill with a competent man. Colon is one of the most pestilential places on earth. The climate is so perilous that the duty of a consul there is in degree of danger like that of a soldier in time of war. That region is the birthplace and the home of the yellow fever; there the Chagres fever rages, and many an American has lain down and died from being exposed to the pernicious influence of that climate in the brief transit across the Isthmus.

During the last twenty-five years eight of our consuls have died there. One died during the present season. Since this bill has been pending in the House the President has been obliged to find a new officer. The post is one of much importance. It is a point through which the whole current of our countrymen going to the western coast of South America must pass. It is a shipping post of importance where a large number of our seamen need the services of the consul. The care and protection required by our countrymen at this post, the duties demanded of the consul as shipping commissioner, and all the manifold duties with respect to mariners, the number of men whose welfare and whose lives fall under his care, make it a place of importance.

It is a naval station. Added to the ordinary duties of a consul he has those of a dispatch agency. He receives the mails and distributes them for the western coast. He is compelled at night to meet the incoming steamer, going out in the noxious night air for that purpose. It requires a large expenditure for these extra duties. The officer there has earnestly and repeatedly appealed to the Department for an allowance of money beyond what could be given him under the present law and the regulations of the Department, so closely was he pressed for money; and yet this officer is selected for reduction.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up a great deal more time in the discussion of this bill, for I think the principle on which it is based has been thoroughly communicated to the House in the debate which has preceded the present discussion. I simply wish to call the attention of the House to the facts connected with this matter. The fees collected here are $1,519, and the salary proposed to be paid is $2,500. He gets a good deal more than all of the fees collected.

As to being an unhealthy place in which to live, it is only necessary to say that it is never vacant, and I imagine if some person was sent there from a section not liable to yellow fever we would have less trouble or death. We can not change the health of a place no matter what amount of salary we may give, and we have no trouble whatever in getting the position filled.

I ask for a vote.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HITT, it was rejected.

Mr. HITT. I now offer a further amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 11, after line 17, insert:
"Chile: Consul at Valparaiso, $3,000."

Mr. HITT. Valparaiso is reduced in the bill in the same manner as the last port mentioned. It is the place of most movement of our ships, most frequented by them on the west coast of South America, and, of course, many of our seamen are there every year, and they need the care and services of a consular officer. It is an office kept busy; some invoice business as shown by the invoice fees, $236.50; but the work is mostly connected with our shipping interests, and the important work of the consul is mainly in that line. His post and Callas have been considered the most important ones on that coast, and certainly ought not to be reduced. Last year, 1891, 30 American vessels arrived there; 497 seamen arrived; 533 departed; 112 were discharged; 2 deserted, and 2 died; the fees were $185.36; and there were 172 seamen in port at the end of the last quarter.

Without further remark I submit the amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I again call attention to the effort that is made to increase these salaries, and to the exact condition of this consulate and the business done. The fees collected here are only $236.50. We propose to pay him $2,500. So far as the duties to our shipping are concerned they are not and can not be very onerous. Of course, the duties are important; but we propose to pay this sum of $2,500 which, I think, is an ample compensation. I ask for a vote.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HITT, it was rejected.

Mr. HITT. I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 11, line 17, insert:
"Cuba: Consul at Matanzas, $3,000."

Mr. HITT. Matanzas, in Cuba, is a place with which we have a very extensive trade. The shipments are large. It is a place where our own ships are found in large numbers. There were 194 American vessels entered the port of Matanzas during the year 1891. There were 315 seamen in port from the last quarter; 2,592 of our seamen arrived at that port; 21 shipped; 12 discharged; 4 deserted; 377 in port at the end of the quarter. It is a place where the Spanish language and Spanish law prevail, and the embarrassments arising to our ships carrying cargoes there by the arbitrary infliction of fines upon shipmasters, owing to the complications of the Spanish law, keep them always in trouble. The consul, whose work in the protection and care of these vessels and their masters and seamen is not shown in a report of fees collected, for he gets none for these services, ought to be a man of wide knowledge, prompt in action, intelligent, and upright.

A ship may be fined three-fourths of the value of the cargo. The fines and exactions by the local officers have in many cases been a heavy burden to masters. All these things tend to discourage our trade, and must be met by the constant vigilance and care of a skillful, active, and thoroughly informed officer.

We should not have at such an important post a cheap or low-priced man, where the climate is not inviting, where the cost of living is high, where it is disagreeable to his family, and where the commerce with his country is very large.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, just a word. This officer collected in the matter of fees in the first three quarters of the year $472.50. One quarter is not yet reported, and he will get a proportion of that. We give him a salary of $2,500. So far as the number of seamen is concerned, that is not an indication of the number of cases at all, and as a general rule the service rendered to the vessels is not a very intricate matter. I think we could get a person who understood Spanish to perform the duties of that position for $2,500 very easily.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ecuador: Consul at Ecuador, $3,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend line 18, page 11, by striking out the whole of said line.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I will merely say that this is a committee amendment, to correct a clerical error. It provides for a consul-general who has already been provided for in another place.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Consul at Frankfort, $3,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk. It is simply clerical.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 23, page 11, by striking out the whole of said line.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia wish to discuss the amendment?

Mr. BLOUNT. It is an amendment agreed to by the committee and it is clerical in its character.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Great Britain: Consul at Belfast, $3,000.

Mr. HITT. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

On page 11, line 24, insert "Consul at Demerara, $3,000."

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, the amendment restores the salary to what it now is and has been for a long time. Demerara is a South American port of importance, the chief place of British Guiana, important both for exports from the United States and imports into the United States from that colony. It is a place where our own vessels run. The distance is not great across the Spanish Main. During three quarters of last year 59 American vessels arrived; 504 seamen; 14 were discharged; 57 were shipped; 36 deserted; fees, $920; 74 seamen remained in port. The commerce is large. The invoice fees, which the gentleman from Georgia always refers to, and which were $1,139 last year, do not show the amount of duty performed, imposed on behalf of our own vessels. These fees are merely for invoices which he verifies.

The post is an unattractive one, in an unhealthy tropical climate, that no man who belonged to this part of the world or was born to our climate would desire to live in—no man in any way fit to fulfill the duties of the place. I have no doubt that men could be obtained there who would accept the post for $300 a year, perhaps for $100. The natives down there are people who are idle at less rates than that; but they are utterly unfit, and a man who would be obtained at a lower rate would not fulfill the duties to be performed. He has an important trust as a sentinel of the Treasury, to watch and verify the invoices of goods sent here in very large volume. The protection of our citizens and our seamen is a grave duty, and I think the position should be continued at its present salary.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will ask the gentleman if the salary he proposes is not the same as that consul has had for a great many years?

Mr. HITT. The same salary.

Mr. DINGLEY. The same as under President Cleveland.

Mr. HITT. Yes; the same for many years. I simply propose to let it remain as it is.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the salary we propose is $2,500. The fees collected are $1,139. My friend says fifty vessels go there. Conceding that to be true, the service rendered to those vessels is not a matter that takes up such a vast amount of time or of labor, and I think the committee have recommended full compensation for the work done.

So far as the Administration of Mr. Cleveland is concerned we never had the power to make such reductions in the House. Legislation on appropriation bills was not permitted, and they were left as they had always been. In this House we have the right to legislate on appropriation bills, and we are exercising it.

Mr. DINGLEY. It would have been very easy to introduce a bill for that purpose, but I do not remember of any bill being introduced when you had the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not know, as I had no connection with the committee at that time. It might have been done, and it might not. I think, possibly, that there was some such bill reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. But that makes no matter. I do not care what there was done in Mr. Cleveland's time. I think the salaries we are recommending are sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Great Britain: Consul at Belfast, $3,000; consul at Glasgow, $3,000; consul at Bradford, $3,000; consul at Manchester, $3,000; consul at Ottawa, $3,000; $15,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I offer an amendment to that paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "consul at Ottawa $3,000," in line 2 on page 12, and in the third line strike out "fifteen" and insert "twelve."

Mr. BLOUNT. There is no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Consul at St. Petersburg, $3,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I send up a similar amendment to that line.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 12, line 5, strike out the whole of said line.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is a mere matter of the correction of a clerical error in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Italy: Consul at Rome, $3,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I send up an amendment for that line also.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 6, page 12, by striking out the whole line.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navigators Island: Consul at Apia, $3,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I send up another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 12, lines 9 and 10, by striking out the whole of said lines.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is a clerical error, Mr. Chairman.

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. On page 12, after line 12, insert:

Uruguay: Consul at Montevideo, $3,000.

Mr. Chairman, the city of Montevideo is the port for the greater part of that whole Republic, and the consul—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the eleventh and twelfth lines have not been reached.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

Mr. HITT. I will wait until the chairman has offered the amendment he desires to offer for the consulate Constantinople.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I send up an amendment to correct a clerical error.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 12, at line 12, by striking out the whole of said line.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITT. I propose an amendment to come in at line 12, on page 12:

Uruguay: Consul at Montevideo, $3,000.

That consul is one who has to perform all kinds of consular duty. There are many American citizens there, and especially merchants engaged in extending our trade; and he has to protect them. It is a large, growing, and prosperous city, and nearly all of the commerce of that Republic passes through it. Why, small as our foreign commerce is, seventeen of our ships visited that port during the last year, with all that that implies, the duty and labor that it brought to the consul.

The trade there runs up into millions. For one quarter of 1891 alone their exports to the United States were $876,696, and when a trade is so great as that, and a useful consul is doing what he can to promote it, it is wise to continue him in the good work. He is a valuable man, and gentlemen who have looked over the monthly reports from the consular bureau, which are distributed to us for our constituents, must have observed the interesting accounts of all the forms of trade in that country in which we can enlarge our business. Such an officer is useful to his country and its commerce. This is the only salaried consular officer we have for all that Republic of Uruguay, and it ought to be continued with just the same compensation as now.

Mr. COOMBS. What is the salary now?

Mr. HITT. The present salary is $3,000. By the bill it would be made $2,500. By the amendment it would be continued at the present rate. The fees collected at Montevideo are considerable, but if all the fees were put down, including that class that were collected before the passage of the Dingley act, but are not now, the aggregate would be very formidable. At present they are upon invoices only, and amount to but $890.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the salary proposed by the committee is $2,500. The contingent expenses which the consul is allowed amount to $888.51. He is allowed also $400 for clerk hire. His fees are only $897.50, which indicates not quite so large a commerce there as one would perhaps infer from the statement of my friend from Illinois. I know that we have a number of vessels going down there, and if it had not been for the passage of the Dingley bill there would have been an increase in the fees in that direction. But when you come to consider that out of nearly a million dollars in fees collected there has been a loss of only $80,000 in all, you see that the fees can not amount to a very large matter in this case.

Mr. COOMBS. The present salary is how much?

Mr. BLOUNT. Three thousand dollars. By the bill it is made $2,500.

Mr. COOMBS. Montevideo is a very large port.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not know how large the port is, but the figures I have been reading are from the official reports.

Mr. COOMBS. I know, but they do not tell much.

Mr. BLOUNT. Perhaps not; but that is somewhat strange, as we have a man there whose special business it is to make these reports, a man who is said to be a very fine officer. My friend from Illinois has just eulogized him highly.

Mr. HITT. I will say that my remark in relation to this officer was based wholly upon his reports. I do not even know his name.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, the market of Montevideo is one of the most active markets in South America—

Mr. BLOUNT. Before the gentleman proceeds I desire to say that the salary of this officer before the Dingley act passed was $2,000, and now we are proposing to make it $2,500—

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I was about to say that the port of Montevideo is one of the most important in South America. I have been doing business there myself for thirty years. Through that port we supply the back part of the Empire of Brazil with agricultural implements, tools, and articles of that kind, and the time is not far distant when we shall supply Bolivia through the port of Montevideo. I do not know of any point where a consul can do the commerce of the United States more good than at Montevideo or Buenos Ayres.

Mr. MALLORY. Do the figures which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] has given show the number of vessels sailing from Montevideo to the United States? I know that the number of vessels arriving there is stated, but do the figures show the number of vessels that come from there?

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir; the report does not show that.

Mr. MALLORY. Montevideo is a port of call, and a great many more vessels come from there to this country than go there from here.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no doubt of that, but still, with all that, the duties of the post are not very onerous.

Mr. MALLORY. I agree with the gentleman from New York, that this is one of the most important ports in South America, perhaps the most important, not excepting Buenos Ayres.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is very important, undoubtedly.

Mr. COOMBS. It is a gold port, and while Buenos Ayres has been year after year convulsed with financial disaster, Montevideo has always maintained its equilibrium. It is a favorite port for merchants to deal. The annual business of my house there is at least $400,000, and I am but one of a large number who export goods to that market. It is not only the goods that are consumed in Uruguay that go there, but also the goods that are destined for the back part of the Empire of Brazil; and we are now opening up a trade with Bolivia from the Atlantic coast.

Mr. SIMPSON. What does the gentleman mean when he speaks of a "gold port"?

Mr. COOMBS. I mean that its finances are always in good order.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that in 1884, before the Dingley bill passed, when all this business was done upon fees that was paid into the Treasury, the fees were less than the salary that we are proposing in this bill, and the salary then was only $2,000. I think the best test in a matter of this kind is not the opinion of gentlemen who happen to deal there as merchants, but the official reports of the consular office, which are the very highest evidence that can be obtained.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, in reply to what has been said here I will say that our exports to Uruguay have been increasing. In 1878 we sold her $1,016,000 and bought of her $1,133,000. In 1881 we bought $1,003,000 and sold her $1,314,000—a good year for our import trade. In 1889 we sold her $3,411,000 and bought $1,441,000. This is a quarter where our trade has been increasing of late. It is active now and I think that a wise lawmaker, such as the chairman of a great committee ought to be, would not desire to take any step that would tend to discourage this enlargement of American commerce. I submit a tabular statement showing the American shipping there for the year 1891:

MONTEVIDEO.

	March.	June.	Septem-ber.	Decem-ber.	Total.
Vessels arriving	4	1	5	7	17
Vessels departing	0	4	4	6	14
Seamen in port for last quarter ..	0	36	15	24	75
Seamen arriving	36	15	55	82	188
Seamen shipped	0	2	20	3	25
Seamen deceased	0	1	0	0	1
Seamen discharged	0	3	5	0	8
Seamen deserted	0	0	10	5	15
Seamen departed	0	35	51	79	165
Seamen in port at end of quarter ..	33	15	24	25	100
Fees received	$180.00	$150.50	$207.00	$283.50	$821.00

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HITT, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, $81,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to amend the line just read (line 13 on page 12) by striking out "81" and inserting "60."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Germany: Consul at Aix-la-Chapelle, $2,500; consul at Annaberg, $2,500; consul at Brunswick, $2,500; consul at Bremen, $2,500; consul at Chemnitz, $2,500; consul at Hamburg, $2,500; consul at Mayence, $2,500.

Great Britain: Consul at Birmingham, $2,500; consul at Demerara, $2,500; consul at Dundee, $2,500; consul at Dresden, $2,500; consul at Huddersfield, $2,500; consul at Kingston, Jamaica, $2,500; consul at Nuevo Laredo, $2,500; consul at Nottingham, $2,500; consul at Sheffield, $2,500; consul at Tunstall, $2,500.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to amend by inserting before the words "consul at Hamburg" the words "consul at Dresden, $2,500," and striking out the latter words in lines 17 and 18 on the same page.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to amend by striking out, in lines 20 and 21, page 13, the words "consul at Nuevo Laredo, $2,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITT. I move to amend by adding to the pending paragraph the following:

Consul at Athens, $2,500.

Mr. Chairman, by this bill the salary of our consul at Athens is diminished $500. The chairman of the committee [Mr. BLOUNT], in his speech during the general debate, intimated that he had selected this place for the reduction, because, from the smallness of the fees collected, it is apparently one of small trade. He was correct in assuming that the volume of trade is not great. Athens is not a manufacturing town; it is not a commercial city; but there is an intellectual commerce with Athens that distinguishes it from other cities. It is a place to which our countrymen go in large numbers, sojourning there a longer or a shorter time; and the Americans who go there are a class entitled to our highest respect for their motives and their character.

The duties of a consul in the first instance—the highest duties—are the protection and care of his countrymen, especially in lands where law is not administered with the same regularity and certainty as it is in countries like the United States and Great Britain. The civilization of the Orient is primitive. Much of Greece is a region of insecurity, and the consul's care is sought by almost every traveler. This statement is one to be noted. Few travelers from the United States passing through an English or a French city have any occasion to call upon the consul; but in the East they almost always go to the consul for guidance, for protection against loss, or against infringement of their rights.

This is what consuls were originally sent out for. There are few fees collected from invoices, and the hasty reformer and economist who only knows the fee standard of course selects such a post at once for reduction; but the duties of a consul are far wider in scope and higher in importance in protecting the rights of American citizens and caring for his country, its interests and honor, than in merely verifying the documents of trade. This celebrated city is the convergent point of travel to the Orient. It is dear to Americans. It is attractive to a free people as the ancient seat of free government. It is the birthplace of our best and noblest thought, associated with our early studies, with every man's reading, with the best instruments of man's culture. Our people know of it as soon as they know anything in life, and they love not only the immortal Athens of antiquity, but the Athens of to-day.

In Athens there is an archaeological school supported by contributions from the people of the United States, with a corps of professors and resident students. There is an interest felt among our people everywhere in the affairs of that famous little region of which we learn from the very beginnings of our education. The present consul is a distinguished and able man, who worthily discharges duties which are delicate and sometimes difficult, and which are incessant.

During the long, burning season of summer he is compelled by the meagerness of his income to remain always at his post. I understand he has not left it since years ago when he went there, for he has not had the money to get out of town even during the burning heat of midsummer.

We should not cut this post down. It is our only salaried consular office in all Greece—the only American officer in the kingdom. The minister has two other countries to attend to and he is often not at Athens; and in his absence for a portion of the year the diplomatic duties devolve in large part upon the consul.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, if there is in this bill a reduction which in my judgment is justified by the circumstances of the case it is that proposed at Athens. The salary under the present law is $2,500. The committee propose that this officer be paid

$2,000. The State Department is allowing him $541.78 for contingent expenses—I can not see why—and his fees are $8; that is all. So far as his duties as a consul are concerned they are summed up in the words "eighty dollars." Yet the gentleman claims that we ought to make his salary over $2,000.

Mr. HITT. At Piræus the amount of the fees is $202.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is an agency, and the work is done by another person.

Mr. HITT. But the agent there is appointed and employed by the consul, the place being actually in sight.

Mr. BLOUNT. That does not make any difference. The work actually performed by this consul yields in fees $8. The consular agent is appointed by authority of law; the consul is authorized to appoint him, and collections are made through these agents. There are two more places where there is an agency under this consul, and nothing done.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman from Illinois asserts that his duties are incessant and in the interest of our American citizens.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand my friend from Illinois to say so, but they are not duties that belong to him as a consul. It is true that people of wealth and leisure are in the habit of traveling a great deal in Europe, and they resort, many of them, to Athens. But the fact that there have been American citizens who have endowed literary institutions there, and made any other investments, either in the arts or in institutions of learning, has nothing whatever to do with the consular service. It does not devolve on us to make provision to meet the requirements of such questions as that. It is not in the line of a consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. That is not what the bill is provided for.

Why, Mr. Chairman, if we are to provide someone at these different points to tell these people of leisure and wealth where they will find the best hotel, or make suggestions to them about their baggage, or the best route to take to this or that point in Europe, I say if that is the purpose of our consular service, I concede that these gentlemen ought to have perhaps more pay. And if that is the object of the consular service I submit that there are places where there are no consuls at all, and we ought to see to it that there is somebody there for the purpose of meeting just such requirements as these.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I beg the indulgence of the committee for a few moments. If I understand the logic of my friend from Georgia, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, he proposes to reduce these salaries because of the absence of the ordinary commercial and consular business at this point.

Mr. BLOUNT. The want of any business known to the law. Mr. DOLLIVER. The consulate at Athens was not created for the mere purpose of carrying on our commercial relations with that city, but for the larger purpose of giving as far as practicable the conveniences of life to American travelers in that favorite capital.

I happen to know that the reason the Secretary of State patched out the meager salary now drawn by Dr. Manatt was because the State Department has not only recognized his efficiency in that service, but it has been furnished with information which would be ample and conclusive to any man who examines it that no man can live and support his family in any respectable manner there upon a salary of less than $2,500 a year. This man is one of the most famous scholars of our age.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is he from Iowa?

Mr. DOLLIVER. No, sir; he is the ex-chancellor of the University of Nebraska. He is the most thoroughly qualified and equipped Greek scholar in the world at this time. He speaks fluently the language of Greece. He has been of the greatest use to our citizens, especially the students of our colleges who have had the opportunity of visiting that country and familiarizing themselves with its history and its literature. His efforts in this direction have won him the regard and admiration not only of the casual American traveler, but of our most distinguished fellow citizens sojourning in Athens. I hold in my hand an extract from a speech made in that city by our greatest popular orator, Mr. Chauncey M. Depew, in which he said:

We rejoice that on this classic spot and with this rare environment we find our country represented by a consul who is both a scholar and a gentleman, whose standing, learning, and enthusiasm are in harmony and touch with the priceless treasures for mankind held in this ancient treasury of the choicest gifts from the gods to mortals.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that this man, who stands in some sense as the representative of American culture at the capital of old Greece, ought not to be starved out by this committee. The committee ought to give our consul at Athens at least the meager allowance that is necessary to support his family in comfort, and if the committee is not ready to do that, we had better abolish the office altogether.

Mr. PICKLER. He probably left a better salary to go there.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Undoubtedly. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask a division.

Mr. SIMPSON. I object; it is too late.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But I call for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the vote will be taken over again by a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 36, yeas 82.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HITT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, after line 23, insert:

"Consul at Victoria, $2,500."

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, Victoria is a port just north of Washington on our west coast, and it does a large business of quick interchange with San Francisco and all the ports on that coast. The imports the year before last were $4,387,000, and the exports $5,636,000. It is a very important position, and even judging it by the standard which the gentleman from Georgia sets up, which I do not admit is conclusive, the large volume of trade ought to entitle this consul to an increase. But there is a discretionary and especial duty with which he has been charged by the Department and the Secretary of the Treasury for some time in watching the coast and interior, suppressing smuggling especially, which is extensive, which requires vigilance. This is very important to the Treasury—fully as important as correctness in invoices.

More than that, Victoria is the place from which the sealing fleet that has been preying upon our seals in Bering Sea sets out, and that officer, in all the recent negotiations, has been charged with extra and with gravely important duties; and his reports, as many of you have seen in recent months, attracted the attention of the whole country. In the arbitration which is approaching, the information which will be required of this officer will be of the gravest importance, and he should be a man worthy of a fair salary.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, this is about on a par with the others, and I will not take up the time in debating it. The salary proposed by the committee is $2,000. The fees only show $1,594, and in addition to that the State Department has allowed him for contingent expenses $729.29 and $640 for clerk hire. I think we are allowing a pretty good amount to that place.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, after line 23, insert:

"Consul at Leith, $2,500."

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, Leith is the port of Edinburgh. A great many Americans are there. Many of them belong to the class of our people who have means, some, in fact, are wealthy people—the class whom the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] evidently thinks should be excepted from those Americans entitled to a consul's protection. Those people may not require a high-priced consul to wait upon them, but there are a great many people in this country of an excellent class, not rich at all, who have come from Scotland, who have business in reference to estates and interests there, and who, when they return to their mother country temporarily, often require the aid of a consul; it is the proper duty of the Government to have an officer to care for its citizens and their interests.

There is also large trade there. Our own ships go there in considerable numbers. The shipping fees, which would have been turned in, amount to $2,847, or more than the salary; but by reason of the law they are not received by the consul. The exports to the United States from that port alone the last year, I have returns, were nearly $900,000. It is an important business, and a respectable man ought to be there and he ought to be paid in a respectable fashion.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, we pay this person by our bill, $2,000. He collects $1,941, and the State Department allow him in addition to his salary $1,062.08 for contingent expenses, and for clerk-hire $640.

I wish to say that this is a part of Great Britain, and the United States has in Great Britain thirty-two consuls while Great Britain has in the United States nine consular officers. If you look over the map of Europe you will find that we are exceeding all the first-class nations in the matter of our consular service. We are spreading it everywhere. There is more indication of extravagance in that regard by this country than by any country in Europe. I shall take occasion hereafter, if these efforts are persisted in, to make an exhibit showing how enormous our consular service is compared with the service of European countries.

Mr. DOCKERY. This man is now paid $3,200 to collect $1,900.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman would appreciate the need which an American consul has for clerk hire above a British consul, if he would remember that the invoices are quadruplicate, and the papers are voluminous, while the British consul, that being a free-trade country, has very little in the way of such clerical duties to perform in protecting his country against frauds on the tariff. The contingent expenses allowed by the Department are themselves proof that the officer had to have this aid in order to accomplish the extensive work with which he was charged, and instead of it being a payment to him, it is only an indication of the greater volume of business at the office. The man ought to be of a character commensurate with the position and responsibilities.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will get away from a free trade country. I will go to Germany. We have twenty-one consuls there, three commercial agents, and fifteen consular agents. Great Britain has in Germany fifteen consuls. I am satisfied that the compensation is full and ample, and I think the committee are also satisfied of that fact.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Spanish Dominions: Consul at Matanzas, $2,500.

Mr. HITT. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

On page 14, line 4, insert "consul at Cienfuegos, $2,500."

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, Cienfuegos, Cuba, is a port from which we are making large importations. The fees collected last year on all the invoices were $1,300. We have also a large number of our seamen there who need the care of the consul; and as I made some explanation awhile ago of the complexities over which the consul is required to watch, such as the masters of vessels are liable to in Cuban ports or places where the Spanish law or usages prevail, I will not repeat it.

Perhaps I should add, these complex Spanish laws and regulations enable the petty officials, who have little or no salary, to wring their pay from strangers in fines, exactions, and personal contributions. And vessels entering those ports are forced to employ this man, that man, and a third man, what may be utterly superfluous, but it is a part of the system practiced. If a master of a ship fails in one of these items of requirements under the Spanish law or in a petty particular in his papers, the ship is seized and fined by the Spanish officer who is in charge of the port. Now, to look after the interests of our trade there is a duty which requires an intelligent and watchful officer. These troubles that I speak of arise chiefly in the matter of cargoes of exports from the United States to Cuba.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the salary that is proposed is $2,200 and the fees are $1,292.50, besides there is an allowance of $638.04 of contingent expenses and $400 for clerk hire.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Spanish dominions, consul at Matanzas, $2,500.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment there.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, after line 4, insert:

"Consul at Santiago de Cuba, $2,500."

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, this is a port to which we send a great variety of articles under the conditions which I have just explained. The volume of our purchases from that port last year was almost exactly $6,000,000, and over that trade this officer was charged with the duty of watching that there be no losses in the national revenues from that vast sum of commerce. His duty is also to inform the merchants of this country of opportunities for enlarging the trade in Cuba through that port, and to protect and promote in every way the interests of our Cuban trade.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the amount allowed this officer for contingent expenses was $919.30, for clerk hire $400, the fees collected were $1,400 with proposed salary of $2,500. We propose a salary of $2,000, which is in the neighborhood of nearly $3,500, with the fees added to it.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, $80,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to make an amendment there.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 11, page 14, by striking out "eighty thousand dollars," and inserting, "seventy-seven thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars."

Mr. BLOUNT. That is the correct total, Mr. Chairman.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Africa: Consul at Tangiers, $2,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to offer an amendment there. The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend page 14, line 16, by striking out the whole of said line.

Mr. BLOUNT. This is a clerical error.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Colombia: Consul at Barranquilla, $2,000.

Mr. HITT. I desire to offer an amendment there.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14, after line 18, insert:

"Costa Rica: Consul at San José, $2,000."

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, this post at Costa Rica is of considerable importance. Mr. Secretary Bayard established it after inquiry. There is no great amount of trade there, but it is the capital of the country; we have no minister there, and the work of the consul is very often of a somewhat diplomatic character. There are very large investments of American capital there, especially in mines, and these investments are safer and are more valuable by having an officer there to represent the American authority and American law.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Great Britain: Consul at Cardiff, $2,000; consul at Chatham, $2,000; consul at Cork, $2,000; consul at Dublin, $2,000; consul at Leeds, $2,000; consul at Dumfermline, $2,000; consul at Hamilton, Ontario, $2,000; consul at Leith, $2,000; consul at Port Stanley and St. Thomas, $2,000; consul at Sherbrook, $2,000; consul at Toronto, $2,000; consul at St. John, New Brunswick, $2,000; consul at Sidney, $2,000; consul at Victoria, $2,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 3, amend by inserting after "Great Britain" the following: "Consul at Belize (British Honduras), $2,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to amend on page 15, line 15, by striking out the whole of the line reading, "Honduras, Belize, $2,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

"Consul at Tegucigalpa, $2,000."

Mr. HITT. By another part of this bill we have removed the minister from that city, the capital of Honduras. By this part of the bill we lower the salary of the consul. That is economy gone mad. There are large American interests there. The duties of the consul will be greatly increased in importance by the absence of a minister. Our trade with that country has been recently advancing with rapidity. We hope it will continue to enlarge, and I trust that the compensation of an officer whose duties have just been widened and made more responsible by this House, will not be reduced—in other words, that we shall not accompany an increase of duty with a diminution of pay. Our people have recently gone into that country with large investments, especially in mining properties, some in plantations, and they are entitled to some consideration.

Mr. BLOUNT. Only a word, Mr. Chairman. We propose to give this officer $1,500, and he is allowed by the State Department for contingent expenses $383.44, while all the business he has done is $38.78.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is what the gentleman from Illinois calls "economy gone mad."

Mr. BLOUNT. Whether the salary of this officer is $1,500 or $2,000 does not affect his ability to look after the American interests to which the gentleman from Illinois refers. Why, sir, in the whole of Honduras there are only 351,400 people.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

"Consul at Port Louis, Mauritius, $2,000."

Mr. HITT. This amendment is to keep the salary at Port Louis as it stands. This place is on the island of Mauritius, in the Indian Ocean. It is a refitting port for seamen. We used to have another on another island, Mahé, but that post has been abolished for reasons of economy, and if this one is cut off there will be no place in those seas for refitting of American vessels where there is a consul and shipping commissioner.

There are no commercial fees reported at this point, and none other, for the simple reason that under the Dingley act the fees for service to vessels are no longer paid by the vessels. The services for which fees were formerly charged are now rendered gratuitously by a salaried consul. The vessels going to Port Louis are chiefly the whaling fleet. If that fleet went down there for a single season, as they have sometimes done, and the fees that were allowed under the old law were collected, the consul would collect in a single year more than the equivalent of two years' salary at this rate.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, we propose to give this official $1,500 for $32.50 worth of work. That is the amount of fees that he has collected.

Mr. BURROWS. Does that measure the importance of the port?

Mr. BLOUNT. He may render some service to vessels, but, as I said before, that would cut a very small figure even before the Dingley act.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 15, after line 13, insert: Consul at Nassau (New Providence) $2,000.

Mr. HITT. This is a port where many of our vessels go. By a recent return which I have before me I see that in a single month fourteen ships with 487 sailors called at that port. There is not a great deal of commerce in imports and exports, but there is a great deal of work connected with vessels. The chairman of the committee seems to think that that kind of work is mere recreation and that there is very little of it anyhow. If he had to perform the duties connected with one, two, or three vessels in a day, if he had to look after the interests of seamen, with all their multitudinous affairs, he would soon discover that there is very little time for recreation at a seaport which is frequented by American vessels. I will not repeat what I have already said upon other amendments, but will submit this for the usual action of the committee.

Mr. BLOUNT. The official fees at this place are $905.55. This officer relieved during the year twenty-five sailors; he furnished board and lodging amounting to $198.26; clothing $5.50; medical aid $26; other expenses $27.41. So you can see what he has been doing in relation to our sailors. I do not think I underestimate at all the work done. It is impossible for me to take up the various services provided by the Consular Regulations; but suffice it to say that an examination of those regulations does not indicate that the duties of this consul are at all complex or laborious.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Madagascar: Tamatave, $2,000; San Juan del Norte, $2,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to amend by striking out in the clause just read the words, "San Juan del Norte, $2,000." This is simply to correct an error in the print, these words being repeated in another place.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Russia: Odessa, $2,000.

Mr. HITT. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the following:

Salvador: Consul at San Salvador, $2,000.

This is the amount this officer is now paid. The bill proposes to cut him down to $1,500. This is a place to which we are sending an increasing volume of exports, especially of farm products. In 1890 we sent there $208,000 worth of flour, $120,000 worth of manufactured cotton, $95,000 worth of firearms (they seem to be a warlike people), $113,000 worth of manufactured iron, and $140,000 worth of other manufactured goods. We imported from there nearly a million and a half dollars' worth of goods, of which I will not recite particulars. Trade so important as this requires a consul of the $2,000 grade; and this salary ought to be continued.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. How much does it cost the consul to get there?

Mr. HITT. The expenses of a consul going with his family would of course be very much larger than if he were only paying his own passage. When these officers go out they generally try to make some special arrangement. I think the expense of a single individual in reaching that port would be about $120 to $180 depending on the accommodations or class on the steamers. If the officer should take his whole family it would cost him several times that amount. I may add (if any one takes the slightest interest in the personal welfare of a consul) that this is a place where he has to purchase nearly everything he uses, or else take it out with him.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois. Then the expenses of a consul going there with his family and residing there are almost as much as his salary.

Mr. HITT. To establish himself there costs him a large sum, about a year's salary to go and establish himself.

Mr. BLOUNT. The only information I have of this matter is official, coming from the Department. By this information it appears that this officer collects no fees at all. He has agents at Acapulco, La Libertad, and La Union, where the fees collected are respectively $597, $715, and $150. He is allowed $506.19 for his contingent expenses. His "salary while receiving instructions and in transit" is $258.50. This is what he receives before doing a single thing in the way of work. He may be around Washington, or he may be on his way to his post; but he is allowed this sum before he gets to work at all.

My friend from Illinois says the transportation is something like $150 for the officer and each member of his family. I do not think that in fixing salaries of consuls or any other officers of the Government, we intend to take in the "sisters, and the cousins, and the aunts."

Mr. HITT. That would be a fit rule in reform and economy like this—make him go without his family. As to the fees received, the report is not that there are no fees, but that there is "no report received" of the fees.

Mr. BLOUNT. As the consul is required to report the fees, the presumption, in the absence of any return, is that there are no fees. For three quarters no fees have been reported.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HITT, it was rejected.

Mr. HITT. I wish to offer another amendment here.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, after line 3, insert:
"Consul at San Juan, Puerto Rico, $2,000."

Mr. HITT. Here is in brief a statement giving the salary as now paid, the proposed salary, and the imports to the United States, as well as the exports for 1889 and 1890:

San Juan, Puerto Rico.

Salary, $2,000; proposed salary, $1,500.

United States imports from Puerto Rico:
Brown sugar.....	$2,966,232
Molasses.....	804,391
United States exports to Puerto Rico:
Flour.....	638,210
Meal, dairy products.....	631,622
Wood and manufactures.....	311,804

	1890.
Imports from Puerto Rico.....	4,653,626
Exports to Puerto Rico.....	2,247,700
Total exports, 1889, $10,181,291; imports, $10,198,006.

Puerto Rico is included in the reciprocity agreement with Spain. The trade will be greatly increased thereby. Is not that a commerce of respectable volume, requiring a respectable officer? Is that the way to save $500, by cutting down the consul at such a port in a tropical climate?

Mr. BLOUNT. If there are no duties on sugar to be collected hereafter, the invoices and the duties of the consul will be decreased enormously, and even now the fees are only $301.50. I presume that there will be little left for him to do except to draw his salary.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was rejected.

Mr. HITT. I offer another amendment on page 16, to come in after line 5.

Turkish Dominions: Consul at Beirut, $2,000.

Mr. HITT. Beirut is a consular post in Turkey where the consul is also a judge. It is a place where there is an American college, known as the Roberts College. It is the great center of the missionary interest in that region of the world. It is not very important as to commerce, although it sent to the United States in 1887 $521,500 worth of products; but its greater importance is the utility and efficiency of a consul in protecting American interests and American citizens in Asiatic Turkey.

The commercial importance of Beirut and Jerusalem, as to which I shall offer an amendment later on, is no indication of the importance of consular officers in preserving American interests and protecting citizens of the United States in Asiatic Turkey. We need at that place a man above reproach, and we can not get him at the proposed salary. We need a man who has knowledge of legal rules and judicial procedure, who can properly, wisely, and justly discharge the duties of a judge who has jurisdiction over the lives and liberty and property of our people, and who has the care of our mariners and our trade.

Mr. BLOUNT. The fees here are $197.40. There are no vessels that can get to the port, and there is nothing for the consul to do in that regard.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was rejected.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to amend the total on page 16, in line 7, to strike out $90,000 and insert $84,000.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HITT. I have a further amendment which I wish to offer. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, after line 5, insert:
"Turkish dominions: Consul at Jerusalem, $2,000."

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HITT. I shall occupy the attention of the committee but a moment with this amendment. I do not wish to discuss it. This proposes to make the salary what it is now by law. It is exactly a parallel case with Beirut. I suppose nearly all Americans know something of where Jerusalem is, and how many of our countrymen go there and are entitled to protection in a Turkish country, almost as many as are traveling in a winding way to the New Jerusalem.

Mr. BLOUNT. The fees here are $51.50 and there is scarcely any commerce with the United States.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Class six, at $1,500 per annum.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OATES, from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

It also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 5444) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate The National Union Insurance Company of Washington," approved February 14, 1865.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. ROCKWELL, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Isaac Samuels, Fifty-first Congress, there being no adverse report thereon.

LEAVE TO PRINT TESTIMONY.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Reform in the Civil Service ask leave to have printed some testimony taken before that committee. Without objection, that leave will be granted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

REPRINT OF THE SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask permission to have the bill making appropriations for the sundry civil service of the Government reprinted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. WILSON of West Virginia moved that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock meridian.

Mr. MORRILL presented a petition of the Christian Church of West Randolph, Vt., praying that the World's Columbian Exposition be closed on Sunday, that the sale of intoxicating liquors be prohibited thereat, and that the art department be conducted according to the American standard of purity; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the petition of Alexander Shields, late a soldier of the regular Army, asking for an honorable discharge, accompanied by a copy of the court-martial proceedings drumming him out of the service. I move that the petition and record be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1551) to amend section 707 of the Revised Statutes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. KENNA. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report an amendment to the bill making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States, and to ask in connection with the proposed amendment that the accompanying document be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment, with the accompanying papers, will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the message of the President, with the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, accompanied by a report by the Puyallup Indian Commission, have instructed me to report an original bill, which I ask may be read the first and second times and placed on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 3056) giving the consent of Congress to the removal by the Legislature of the State of Washington of the restrictions upon the power of alienation of a portion of the lands in the Puyallup Indian reservation upon certain conditions therein contained was read twice by its title.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2073) granting a pension to Mrs. Jennie Y. Wade, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2638) granting a pension to W. W. Harlee, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, who were instructed by resolution of the Senate of March 3, 1891, "to ascertain in every practicable way, and to report from time to time to the Senate, the effect of the tariff laws upon the imports and exports, the growth, development, production, and prices of agricultural and manufactured articles at home and abroad, and upon wages, domestic and foreign," submitted a report in part thereon, and moved that it be printed and recommitted to the Committee on Finance; which was agreed to.

REPORT ON PRODUCTION OF PRECIOUS METALS.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That there be printed of the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals in the United States for the calendar year of 1891 6,000 extra copies, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the Senate, 2,000 copies for the House, and 3,000 copies for the Director of the Mint.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2305) to provide for the permanent preservation and custody of the records of the volunteer armies, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 6005) to place binding-twine on the free list;

A bill (H. R. 7023) to encourage American shipbuilding;

A bill (H. R. 7296) granting pensions to the survivors of the Indian war of 1832 to 1842, inclusive, known as the Black Hawk war, Creek war, Cherokee disturbances, and the Seminole war; and

A bill (H. R. 8503) making appropriations for expenses that may be incurred under the treaties between the United States and Great Britain concluded at Washington February 29 and April 18, 1892.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 3048) granting to the Blue Mountain Irrigation and Improvement Company a right of way for reservoir and canals through the Umatilla Indian Reservation, in the State of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 3049) for the relief of Peter Dalot, late a private, Company I, Fifth United States Cavalry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3050) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea," approved August 2, 1882; which was read twice by its title, and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 3051) granting a pension to Julia A. Hill; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3052) granting a pension to Nettie H. Seaver; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 3053) for the relief of the Western Miami tribal Indians; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 3054) granting a pension to E. C. Curtis; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. In connection with the bill I desire to present the petitions of E. C. Curtis, and the affidavits of Dr. W. M. Lennox, Dr. R. Bowie Cowan, and Dr. S. F. Arthur, and separate affidavits of J. M. Lennox and T. S. Hoffman, and letters from the Pension Office and from the War Department to accompany the petition. I move that the bill and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE introduced a bill (S. 3055) for the relief of the estate of Marcus Walker, deceased, late of Franklin, in the State of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HISCOCK introduced a bill (S. 3057) to increase the pension of Ferdinand Shaw; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 3058) for the relief of William

Hancock, administrator; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GRAY introduced a bill (S. 3059) for the relief of the Old Dominion Steamship Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CALL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 81) to print with certain additions the last map of the United States published by the Interior Department; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. QUAY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY CONFERENCE.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to call up the message of the President of the United States on the subject of bimetalism, which has been sent to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business?

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon rise to morning business?

Mr. DOLPH. If the morning business is concluded, I rise to a privileged motion. I did not hear the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to call up—

Mr. DOLPH. I wish to call up the conference report on the Chinese exclusion bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I know what the Senator wishes to call up. I wish to call up the President's message on the subject of bimetalism with a view that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] may deliver some remarks of which I gave notice yesterday.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, mine is a privileged motion—

Mr. MORGAN. I object to the consideration of the privileged question now. I am on the committee with the Senator from Oregon, and I think there is not quite so much pressure as that the Senator from South Dakota can not have the courtesy of a hearing before it is taken up. I move to proceed to the consideration of the message.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. DOLPH. What is the motion? I do not understand it. I have not been able to hear a word the Senator from Alabama has said except something about the Senator from South Dakota, and I do not yet know what he wishes to call up; there has been so much confusion in the Chamber.

Mr. MORGAN. I say this, I desire to call up the President's message with reference to an agreement between this and foreign countries on the subject of bimetalism with a view that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] shall have an opportunity to address the Senate, of which I gave notice yesterday.

Mr. DOLPH. Does the Senator desire that that shall precede action upon the conference report?

Mr. MORGAN. I do. It is bound to do it.

Mr. DOLPH. There are only three days more—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A message of the President of the United States in response to Senate resolution of April 23, 1892, relative to a proposed international conference on the subject of silver coinage.

FREE COINAGE OF SILVER AS RELATED TO AGRICULTURE.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, the people have an account to settle with the advocates of a gold basis, and they will not rest until their rights are restored. They have been robbed of their silver currency through no fault of their own, or of the majority of their representatives in Congress, but through the subtle cunning of the money power. This is the class who have never lost an opportunity to profit by the misfortunes of war. Not patriotic enough to defend their country at the front, they were content to "stay by the stuff" and mature plans by which to control our finances. They well knew that war meant debt; that debt meant bonds, and that through the manipulation of such securities there has always been a rich harvest for the broker and bondholder. The reconstruction days of the South were not half so important to them as the reconstruction of the finances. In funding and refunding the debt of the United States there are many mysterious proceedings which may never be satisfactorily explained.

But our so-called financiers were then fixing the policy which has proved ruinous during the past quarter of a century. Instead of paying off our war debt, as popular wisdom would have dictated, a policy chiefly beneficial to the bondholder seems to have been adopted. At the beginning of the war our national debt was but $64,769,703. In 1866 the debt was $2,773,236,173. In other words, the war had cost us something over two and a half billions of dollars. Let us see how this was manipulated in the interest of the bondholder. The late Senator Beck, on January 12, 1874, in a speech on this floor, revealed some very startling facts as to the sale of our 5 and 6 per cent bonds. These were purchasable with greenbacks, which were very much depreciated. I have collated a table showing the total profit to the bondholder in principal and interest from 1862 down to 1874, the time at which the speech was delivered:

Year.	Bonds sold.	Gold value.	Profit to holder.	Interest received.	Total profit.
5-20s sold:
1862.....	$60,982,450	$44,030,640	$16,951,801	$11,187,188	$28,139,989
1863.....	160,987,550	101,890,854	59,096,696	35,488,017	94,584,713
1864.....	381,292,250	139,697,636	191,594,613	114,956,768	306,551,381
1865.....	279,746,150	208,213,080	71,532,069	38,627,307	110,159,376
1866.....	124,914,400	88,591,773	36,322,627	17,431,556	53,754,183
1867.....	421,469,550	303,805,503	118,254,047	48,571,494	166,825,541
1868.....	425,443,800	312,626,326	112,617,474	40,542,288	153,159,762
6 percents sold.	195,139,550	123,957,410	72,182,140	26,115,724	98,297,864
Total profit.					1,012,537,203

This shows a total profit to the bondholder in the purchase of United States securities of over one thousand millions of dollars. I will digress for a moment to give the following facts about the war debt, taken from the Statistical Abstract of 1890:

We owed in 1866.....	$2,783,000,000
We have paid on the principal.....	1,080,000,000
We have paid as interest.....	2,462,000,000
We have paid as premium on bonds.....	36,000,000
Total amount paid.....	3,578,000,000

Add to this the profit to bondholders of $1,012,537,203, and we have a total of $4,590,537,203. We have paid nearly five thousand millions toward the debt, and still $1,545,996,591.61 remain to be paid. It will take more of wheat or cotton to extinguish the debt, than would have been required at the close of the war.

Had the debt been contracted to be paid in wheat it would have taken in 1866..... bushels.....	1,007,000,000
We have paid on the principal..... do.....	1,188,000,000
We have paid as interest..... do.....	2,225,000,000
We have paid as premium on bonds..... do.....	50,400,000
Total amount paid..... do.....	3,463,400,000
We yet owe..... do.....	2,156,250,000

Total..... do.....	5,619,650,000
Deducting amount due in 1866..... do.....	1,007,000,000
Amount consumed by interest and payment on principal..... do.....	4,612,650,000
Had debt been contracted to be paid in cotton it would have taken in 1867..... pounds.....	7,022,000,000

We have paid on the principal..... do.....	10,800,000,000
As interest..... do.....	24,622,000,000
As premiums on bonds..... do.....	360,000,000
Total paid..... do.....	35,782,000,000
We yet owe..... do.....	16,930,000,000

Total..... do.....	52,710,000,000
Deduct amount due in 1867..... do.....	7,092,000,000
Amount consumed by interest and payment on principal..... do.....	45,618,000,000

This drain, Mr. President, has been from the pockets of the taxpayers of the country, while bonds have gone untaxed. And, according to our present policy, it will yet require several thousand millions to liquidate our indebtedness. But the bondholders were but just beginning their systematic plundering when they made the purchase of these securities. A war is a bonanza to security holders, and seldom in history have they failed to take advantage of it. English capitalists saw the opportunity at the close of the Napoleonic wars and demonetized silver in 1816. Germany followed in 1872, at the close of the Franco-Prussian war, and France in 1874. The purpose of our brokers, coached by English financiers, seems to have been to secure the final payment of the war bonds in gold coin; at any rate it has so turned out. The first official act, March 18, 1869, of President Grant, was to sign a bill making the bonds payable in coin of the country. There were many vigorous opponents of this measure, among them Thaddeus Stevens of Pennsylvania, Morton of Indiana, and the present Senator from Ohio, who used these words in a speech in this Chamber, February, 27, 1867:

Equity and justice are amply satisfied if we redeem these bonds at the end of five years in the same kind of money of the same intrinsic value it had at the time they were issued. Gentlemen may reason about this matter over and over again and they can not come to any other conclusion, at least that has been my conclusion after the most careful consideration. Senators are sometimes in the habit, in order to defeat the argument of an antagonist, of saying that this was repudiation. Why, sir, every citizen of the United States has conformed his business to the legal-tender clause. He has collected and paid his debts accordingly.

But the bondholder was not only not satisfied with legal-tender payment, but wanted the coin payment limited to gold. By the demonetization of silver, gold alone remained the lawful coin and his long-cherished hopes were realized.

Before a French monetary commission in 1869, Count Walowski said:

The sum total of the precious metals is reckoned at 50 milliards, one-half gold and one-half silver. If by a stroke of the pen they suppress one of these metals in the monetary service they double the demand for the other metal, to the ruin of all debtors.

It seems to have been a concerted plan of European and American financiers to increase the value of their holdings. It is as if the holder of the world's supply of cloth had clandestinely forced upon the people a shorter yardstick in order to double the number of yards in his possession. England had already taken this step; but Germany, Italy, Holland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and the United States were using silver. When by demonetization of silver this vast population came to a gold basis, the demand for gold was more than doubled, while the supply had fallen off very perceptibly. Mr. Moreton Frewen, an able English writer on economic subjects, in an address at Easton Lodge, October 4, 1889, says:

The national debts of Europe had all been contracted in silver and could have been properly liquidated in silver. Suddenly, and without a word of warning, every contract in Europe was violated by the closure of every mint to silver. Still, it is only when we pass on to the deed done at Washington that the silver question emerges as the biggest and the best-planned financial coup of the century. The whole affair was a vast "job," and I believe that any grand jury would find a true bill on the evidence that comes to us from America.

There is perhaps no legislation of the United States Congress which has been criticised during twenty-five years so bitterly as the act of 1873. The farmer, the laborer, the merchant, everybody discusses it. Politicians are wondering at the sudden uprising which has occurred among the people, by which a new party as wide as the nation has been formed; and why both old parties are in the toils. Let me say, Mr. President, that these are the people who have waited a score of years for remedial legislation, and who are now taking the reins into their own hands. They have been deceived by pretentious platforms and Sibylline declarations until patience is exhausted. They want to know in whose interests the currency is being manipulated, as it is clearly seen that at every move in financial policy the eye of the Administration has turned toward New York and Europe.

There is no doubt in my mind that the inception of the demonetization of silver occurred in the monetary councils of Europe and was transmitted to friends (for they are all friends) on this side of the water. English agents doubtless came to the United States as lobbyists before the committees of Congress. From the report of Mr. Hooper, chairman of the committee in charge of this bill, I quote the following:

Mr. Ernest Seyd, of London, a distinguished writer and bullionist, who is now here, has given great attention to the subject of mint and coinage. After having examined the first draft of this bill he made various sensible suggestions, which the committee adopted and embodied in the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. That was the act of 1873.

Mr. KYLE. The act of 1873. Little did the toiling millions at work on the farm and in the shop dream that plans were being devised by the financiers of the East to rob them of the currency bequeathed to them by the founders of the Republic. The act of 1873, Mr. President, was conceived and brought forth in darkness. The originators of it well knew that it would never pass if brought into the arena of open discussion. It went through by stealth. Little attention was called to it; and the majority of this body were in ignorance as to the scope of the act. The title bore no suggestion of such a change. The very wording of it is such as to divert attention from it: "An act revising and amending the laws relating to the mints, assay office, and coinage laws of the United States."

No suggestion at all of demonetizing the silver dollar. Section 15 reads:

That the silver coin of the United States shall be a trade dollar, a half dollar or 50-cent piece, a quarter dollar or 25-cent piece, a dime or 10-cent piece; and the weight of the trade dollar shall be 420 grains Troy; the weight of the half dollar shall be 12 grammes and one-half gramme. * * * And said coins shall be a legal tender at their nominal value, for any amount not exceeding $5 in any one payment.

SEC. 17. That no other coins, either of gold, silver, or minor coinage, shall hereafter be issued from the mint, other than those of the denominations, standards, and weights herein set forth.

Had the bill stated in words of clear meaning that the standard dollar is hereby demonetized, it never would have passed and become a law. The section was either not read, or being read was not comprehended. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] on calling up this bill used these words:

I rise for the purpose of moving that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the mint bill. I will state that this bill will not probably consume any more time than the time consumed in reading it. It is a matter of vital interest to the Government, and I am informed by officers of the Government that it should pass promptly. The amendments reported by the Committee on Finance present the points of difference between the two Houses, and they can go to a committee of conference without having a controversy here in the Senate about them.

It is difficult to find members of either House at that time who knew that silver was to be demonetized. I doubt if a score in either House knew the full scope of the bill.

Gen. Garfield, in a speech made at Springfield, Ohio, during the fall of 1877, said:

Perhaps I ought to be ashamed to say so, but it is the truth to say that, I at the time being the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and having my hands overfull during all that time with work, I never read the bill. I took it upon the faith of a prominent Democrat and a prominent Republican, and I do not know that I voted at all. There was no call of the yeas and nays, and nobody opposed that bill that I know of. It was put through as dozens of bills are, as my friend and I know, in Congress, on the faith of the report of the chairman of the committee; and therefore I tell you, because it is the truth, that I have no knowledge about it.—Congressional Record, volume 7, part 1, Forty-fifth Congress, second session, page 989.

On February 15, 1878, the following colloquy between Senator Blaine and Senator VORHEES took place:

Mr. VORHEES. I want to ask my friend from Maine, whom I am glad to designate in that way, whether I may call him as one more witness to the fact that it was not generally known whether silver was demonetized. Did he know, as Speaker of the House, presiding at the time, that the silver dollar was demonetized in the bill to which he alludes?

Mr. BLAINE. I did not know anything that was in the bill at all. As I have before said little was known or cared on the subject. [Laughter.] And now I should like to exchange questions with the Senator from Indiana, who was then on the floor and whose business it was, far more than mine, to know, because by the designation of the House I was to put questions and the Senator from Indiana, then on the floor of the House with his power as a debater, was to unfold them to the House. Did he know?

Mr. VORHEES. I very frankly say that I did not.—Ibid, page 1063.

Mr. HOLMAN, in a speech delivered in the House of Representatives July 13, 1876, said:

I have before me the record of the proceedings of this House on the passage of that measure, a record which no man can read without being convinced that the measure and the method of its passage through this House was a "colossal swindle." I assert that the measure never had the sanction of this House, and it does not possess the moral force of law.

Senator Beck, in a speech made in the Senate, January 10, 1878, said:

It (the bill demonetizing silver) never was understood by either House of Congress. I say that with a full knowledge of the facts. No newspaper reporter—and they are the most vigilant men I ever saw in obtaining information—discovered that it had been done.—Congressional Record, volume 7, part 1, Forty-fifth Congress, second session, page 290.

When President Grant, on January 14, 1875, signed the resumption act, he sent a message to Congress urging the establishment of mints at Chicago, St. Louis, and Omaha, to coin silver for purposes of resumption, not knowing that he had signed an act demonetizing the silver dollar. Much less were the people informed, through the press or otherwise, that the silver dollar was to be demonetized.

Mr. President, the people generally give notice when a law is obnoxious, or when they wish a bad law repealed. In what papers had this law of eighty years' standing been discussed? How many county newspapers had declared against the old-fashioned dollar? How many journals had published interviews from leading men upon the subject? How many county, State, or national conventions had passed resolutions declaring that it was unsafe longer to maintain a silver standard? These are the ways in which the people express themselves; and it seems to me that so important a measure as changing a standard which had been in use from the beginning of the Republic should have been discussed around the fireside of every intelligent citizen of the Union. But no, Mr. President, it was known to an interested few only in England and the money centers of the United States. And now that the disastrous effects of the change are felt all over the nation, party fealty is such that it will be a Herculean task to secure a return to free coinage of silver, which it is safe to say three-fourths of our population desire.

Free coinage, Mr. President, is nothing new or unheard of. One might suppose from the bitter discussions on the platform and by the press that it was some untried, dangerous policy. The people seemingly forget that we had no other policy until a few years ago. Ever since the founding of our Government till 1873, a period of eighty-three years, the United States Mint would take any man's silver and turn it into dollars at Government expense; and every piece of money of 371½ grains of fine silver was a measuring unit for the commodities of commerce. Our fathers adopted the Spanish milled dollar as their monetary unit, which continued to act as such during the unparalleled growth of our nation up to 1873. The amount of fine silver has not varied. The amount of pure gold in the gold dollar was changed by the acts of 1834 and 1837. But the silver dollar remained stationary.

It was always substantially at a par with gold, and in 1873 commanded a premium of 3 cents. It was the poor man's money, entering into all the small transactions of commercial life. Gold was the money of the rich, who looked upon the poor man's dollar with jealous eye, because he could not corner or control it. No one found fault with bimetalism except the money kings, and it was at their instance that the change to a gold basis was broached. Millionaires were of slow growth in those days, and it was impossible to bridle the patience of those who had once scented the possibility of rich gains from a rise in gold bullion. What cared they as to any inconvenience or disaster which might arise to the mass of the people by the change from a bimetallic to a gold basis? The wrecking policy of contraction had been entered upon already, and the additional decrease of two or three hundred millions in the money volume and the payment of obligations according to a gold standard would add no great additional burden.

The subject of finance has been so intimately associated for the past twenty years with the condition of agriculture, Mr. President, that the discussion of the one involves the discussion of the other. The dark picture of our farming interest is a logical sequence to the act of demonetization, and also furnishes ample reason for a return to free coinage and a bimetallic standard.

In 1868, Count Wolowski, of France, in discussing the conditions which might arise from the demonetization of silver, made the following prediction:

One of the principal difficulties in this period of general depression will be that the people will look for its causes in all possible directions. The advocates of the gold standard will offer all possible fantastic and groundless excuses and reasons of a secondary nature only, and the real cause, the demonetization of silver, will be overlooked until the perspicuity of the phenomena and dire necessity shall force thinking men to point it out. Throughout the world a decline in prices will follow, injurious alike to owners of real property and the laboring classes, and advantageous only, and unjustly so, to the holders of State bonds and similar securities.

We are now living in the day foretold by Count Wolowski, and it is my purpose to-day to picture the condition of agriculture as related to the manipulation of the currency. I hold in my hand, Mr. President, a little map called the "Jones chart," which notes the variations in the prices of wheat, cotton, and silver from 1871 to 1892. The coincidence is most remarkable. I have prepared from this map a table which will show clearly the association between these products. When silver has approached par the price of these commodities has correspondingly risen, and vice versa.

Table giving coincidences between prices of silver, wheat, and cotton from 1871 to 1892.

Year.	Silver, per ounce.	Wheat, per bushel.	Cotton, per pound.	Remarks.
1872	$1.32	$1.29½	$0.21
1873	1.29	1.17	.17½
1874	1.27	1.05	.16½
1875	1.24	1.07	.15½
1876	1.14	1.05	.12	Stringency in money market.
1877	1.19	1.39	.11½	Corner in wheat.
1878	1.12	.95	.11	Money panic.
1879	1.11½	1.07	.11½	Bland act and short wheat crops.
1880	1.14	1.00	.12½
1881	1.13	1.19	.12½	Short wheat crops in this country.
1882	1.12	1.15	.11½	Wheat cornered.
1883	1.11	1.02	.10
1884	1.10½	.83	.10½
1885	1.05	.83	.10½
1886	.98½	.77	.09½
1887	1.00	.81	.10½
1888	.94½	.90	.10½
1889	.95	.92½	.10½
1890	1.09	.92	.11½	Act of July 14, 1890.
1891	1.01½	1.01	.08½

It is incredible that such coincidences should occur for so long a term of years without some foundation in fact, and, though it may be difficult to explain local fluctuations, the general coincidence is explainable through the manipulation of the money market in relation to silver. It has become an axiom of commerce that the market price of American cotton and wheat varies with the market price of silver bullion in the European markets, and the European price of imported wheat varies directly as the silver-bullion market. It only remained therefore for us to examine a chart of market reports for twenty years to confirm the impressions already formed from the operations of commercial laws.

Free coinage of silver, Mr. President, affects directly, not indirectly, the products of the American farmer. A gold standard puts us at a disadvantage in the European market for wheat and cotton, while free coinage will materially relieve us of the sharp competition of Russia and the silver-using districts of Asia. Russia uses silver when she can get it. In India the rupee is the coin of commerce, and that country alone consumes annually fifty millions of silver, forty millions coming from the United States. Russia exports to England 100,000,000 bushels of wheat. India exports to European markets 50,000,000 bushels of wheat and about 1,000,000 bales of cotton. In the year 1890-'91 the United States exported to Europe 3,750,443 bales of cotton and 55,131,948 bushels of wheat.

The price of Asiatic bills of exchange therefore cuts an important figure in the transaction in the European market. With American free coinage of silver and the consequent depreciation of silver bullion from $1.29 to 90 cents per ounce the Bank of England and the English grain merchant will convert our silver into rupees for the Indian trade. At the present time England buys 32 cents' worth of our bullion and converts it into a rupee worth 48 cents, and which purchases from the Hindoo 48 cents' worth of wheat.

England's policy, Mr. President, is self-protection. Self first, with a disposition to crowd to the wall every nation which competes with her in commerce. Her policy is retaliatory towards the United States. At the same time she wrests every penny possible from her colonial and tributary subjects. Though she swells her millions by coining cheap bullion into rupees and purchases therewith the Indian wheat and cotton, yet the Indian farmer is none the richer. On the other hand, when the Hindoo is forced to pay his $75,000,000 tribute to England in the way of rents and interest on bonds and stocks he must buy gold with his silver rated at European bullion value. England may be able to dictate such disastrous bargains with a tributary nation, but why she should be able to make us a tool to accomplish her ends I can not see. She says to us, "Demonetize your silver in order that I may be able to purchase cheap bullion, and by this give the Asiatic nations the European wheat and cotton markets."

Now, Mr. President, England objects to free coinage of silver in America because she knows as well as we that silver would at once go to par, and that means to her 43 cents in the rupee, instead of 32 cents. The price of wheat in the European market being $1, for instance, it would seem at first thought that the odds were all in favor of the American exporter, seeing that the Indian exporter must pay twice the freight and present a poorer quality of wheat. But as India wants the silver, and the Indian shipper can take the gold dollar and make a second trade in cheap silver bullion before returning to India, it is plain to be seen that he has an advantage over the American shipper. And whereas the Indian shipper may have paid under the present arrangement 3 rupees (or $1.41) for wheat, come to England and sold it for 100 cents in gold, and with the gold bought enough silver bullion to make 4 rupees (or $1.92), thereby clearing one rupee on each bushel, he must with Asiatic exchange at par pay the Indian producer less for his products, in which event the field will be left clear for the American exporter.

Now, here is the syllogism as applied to the exportation of our agricultural products:

1. Our prices for cotton and wheat are regulated largely by the European market.
2. East India and the United States are competitors for that market.
3. Considering quality of grain and price of freight, other things being equal, the market is ours.
4. If Asiatic bills of exchange, however, fall below par, the East Indian has the advantage of us.
5. Demonetization of silver in the United States has furnished cheap silver bullion and hence lowered Asiatic exchange.
6. Free coinage of silver would bring it to a par with gold, and also raise Asiatic exchange to par.
7. Therefore, free coinage of silver restores to our farmers the European market, with no unjust competition from Asiatic silver nations.

The objections raised to the free coinage of silver, Mr. President, seem puerile, and only such as the creditor class of citizens have always raised. The threatened deluge of foreign silver has frightened many an advocate of the white metal. But the European ratio between the two metals being 15½ to 1, and in India 15 to 1, while in the United States it is 16 to 1—in other words, an ounce of silver in America being worth only $1.29, while in Europe $1.33, and in India $1.37—it is hardly probable that the current would turn this way. But suppose for a moment that the junk-dealer of France would come across with his shipload of old silver, expecting that every 70 cents' worth of it could be turned at the mint into a dollar. He can get for his bullion either silver coin or paper. He can get no gold unless we choose to give it to him, and he is left to one of two alternatives, either to take his silver back or invest it in American industries, in which case he becomes a promoter of our welfare. But such statements of the press are all bugaboo, and affect only the ignorant and the timid.

If Europe had twice the silver she has there could be no such danger; but she has not the silver and can not get it, except from silver-producing America. Before many generations have gone by there will not be gold enough to supply the arts, and resort must be had to silver. There is not, Mr. President, gold enough in the world to meet the demands of commerce, which has been growing during the present century out of all proportion to the metal basis at present adopted by England, Germany, France, and the United States.

The United Kingdom has one hundred and seven millions of silver, or $2.81 per capita; France has seven hundred millions of silver, or $17 per capita; Germany has about two hundred and twenty millions of silver, or $4.44 per capita. This is all in use as subsidiary coin. India, China, and other Asiatic nations are the grave of silver. They receive all they can get, but do not give up a dollar. Russia, Austria, and Italy have dispensed with silver. And when we have gone over the world there is not an ounce which can be spared for the purpose of flooding the United States with a debased coin. It is needed by this and all nations to broaden the metallic base of the mountain of paper current in our business transactions.

It was predicted by financiers during the discussion fourteen years ago that gold would leave the country. I believe statistics show that gold came into the country. It was a scare with no basis in reason, nor has there yet been a valid reason advanced why gold should have left. If so, it has evidently proven fallacious. According to the testimony of gold men we are now coining about all the silver offered or that we can use, and yet we are not troubled about gold fleeing the country. It stands to reason that gold will not leave us without cause, and never under any circumstances unless the American gets the best end of the bargain. It may go to Europe, because, on account of the extraordinary prices of American products, it is more profitable to purchase abroad than at home. In case of a possible famine in the United States, silver as well as gold must go to purchase needed supplies. But with a balance of trade in our favor constantly increasing, and possessing the vast quantity of products which Europe is compelled to buy, we need not fear but that every ship which goes laden with American products will return with European gold.

The net excess of gold bullion exports over imports for 1891 was $66,706,984, a large portion of which was paid as interest on English mining, land, and railroad securities. But this, according to the views of gold men, is a contribution to American development, and is bound to occur under the present law as well as under free coinage. So that the sum total of complaint and argument against free coinage of silver is not that silver will flood us, or that gold will leave us, but the "inconvenience" which might arise to a class of security-holders who have built large hopes upon an appreciated gold market. But has there not been time since the silver discussion began to adjust business for the change? How much warning was given when farm property was to be depreciated in value by the demonetization of silver? The argument used by gold men in 1873, that time would adjust the "inconveniences" for the debtor, can now be turned with very good propriety, seeing that bondholders are well able to endure the slight depreciation in gold securities.

The present condition of agriculture, Mr. President, is closely connected with an ample and flexible volume of currency. It is not claimed that free coinage of silver will largely increase the volume of currency. But with our rapidly increasing population we shall need $500,000,000 during the next ten years in order to insure us an additional $10 per capita. It is claimed, however, that free coinage of silver, by bringing the metal to a par with gold, will unlock the currency now hoarded for purposes of speculation and promote free circulation. But we are asked to consult New York as to whether the country needs a larger or more flexible volume.

They scorn the people's complaints as long as the supply is ample enough for their needs. It matters not that the people from the Allegheny Mountains, west through the fertile valleys of Illinois, Mississippi, and Missouri, rise up regardless of party lines and demand more money. They are guilty of not asking permission of the sages of finance who are supposed to keep their fingers on the public pulse and to know within a 10-cent piece how much is for their good. I should rather remark, who keep their finger on the Treasury purse strings and carefully watch how much a suffering people will endure. The great mass of our population, industrious, frugal, honest; the farmer, the mechanic, the laborer, the merchant, the wealth-producers of the nation, ask for a greater volume of money.

But modern lexicons are apparently not comprehensive enough to supply modern journalists with material by which to characterize these common people, who even modestly assert their right to think upon finance. The people are a common herd apparently, whose duty it is to perform the daily labor by which the nation grows without a murmur of dissent or a question as to whether their representatives adopt a wise policy or not. It is the pride of our free government that the people rule; but it seems to-day, Mr. President, to be a question in Congress as to who are the people, whether New York or the Mississippi Valley; whether New England or the vast South; whether a few corporations or the masses. To whom is our ear turned when bills are considered touching the disbursement of the taxes which the people pay into the Treasury? To the interest of a few privileged classes or to the vast multitude of the poor? Whether it be gambling in futures, or free coinage of silver, or any popular demand, gilt-edged petitions from boards of trade, chambers of commerce all over the country are poured in upon us.

But for every one of these come the crumpled petitions representing a thousand farmers, written with the soiled, stiffened hand wearied with his daily task. Whose interests should be consulted? To whom should we listen? To the agriculturist not more, I would say, than to other classes; but the demand is for justice and fair play. The people demand a volume of currency sufficient to transact the business of the country, and that it shall increase in volume proportionately with the increase of business and the increase of population.

But we are met by the banker who tells us at one time that there is an abundance of money and at another that the volume of currency has but little to do with business prosperity. Even the Secretary of the Treasury has sent out a carefully prepared report to show that we have a larger circulation than at any previous period for thirty years; that the per capita circulation is now $24. It is not my purpose to go into the discussion of this matter at length. It may be time enough for that when secretaries and politicians agree. Secretary Windom's report for 1889 as to the volume of money in circulation placed side by side with that of Secretary Foster, for the years from 1878 to 1889, show the following differences:

Year.	Windom.	Foster.	Difference.
1878	$805,793,808	$729,132,034	$75,661,773
1879	862,579,754	818,631,793	43,947,961
1880	1,022,033,685	973,382,228	48,650,457
1881	1,147,892,435	1,114,238,119	23,654,316
1882	1,188,752,363	1,174,290,419	14,461,944
1883	1,230,650,032	1,203,305,096	27,344,936
1884	1,251,569,924	1,243,925,969	7,643,955
1885	1,286,620,871	1,292,508,615	5,937,544
1886	1,264,889,561	1,252,700,525	12,149,036
1887	1,353,485,690	1,317,539,143	35,946,547
1888	1,384,340,280	1,372,180,870	12,159,410
1889	1,405,018,000	1,280,361,649	24,656,351

Again, Mr. Foster's statement as to the volume of currency in circulation on July 1, 1890, was $1,429,251,270. Six months afterwards, when there should have been more money, in response to a resolution of the Senate, Mr. Nettleton, Assistant Secretary, gave the volume as $1,037,912,728, a difference of $391,338,542.

In making the estimates from 1865 to the present time, very few officials have taken account of the heavy reserves held in banks, nor the large amount of currency hoarded, lost, mutilated, or destroyed, which according to good authorities very materially decreases the amount of per capita for any given year.

From the Philosophy of Price, I present a statement of the volume of currency with such deductions made.

Year.	Population.	Circulation.	Per capita.
1854	25,090,860	$444,689,000	$17.04
1855	23,891,021	426,052,000	15.81

1890	66,000,000	306,999,982	4.72

This is in the main verified by a table published in the Chicago Inter-Ocean in 1878:

The 7.30 three-year notes, whose circulation as currency is most scouted, were outstanding on the 1st of September, 1885, to the amount of $830,000,000, every dollar of which was legal tender for its face value under the terms of the law "to the same extent as United States notes."

From a speech made in this Hall by the late Senator Plumb, in June, 1890, I quote the following:

Let us see, therefore, how much money is available for actual use among the people. From the total of $1,560,000,000, arrived at as above, must be first deducted an average of $350,000,000, which the Treasury always keeps on hand, and about which something has heretofore been said in the debate on this bill. That leaves as the maximum which by any possibility can be used $1,210,000,000.

There ought, in fairness, to be deducted from this $150,000,000, error in estimate of gold in the country, which would reduce the money outside the Treasury to $1,060,000,000. From this is to be subtracted the $700,000,000 kept as a reserve (in the banks), as before computed, leaving a balance of but $360,000,000 which is available for delivery or other use in the transactions of the business of all the people, or a trifle over $8 per capita. But the force of my argument is not materially weakened by conceding the gold coin to be as estimated by the Treasury Department, which would leave in actual circulation $700,000,000. In order to make up this amount all doubt must be resolved in favor of the Treasury and against the people, both the doubt as to the lost and destroyed notes and that as to the gold supply. If I was deciding this case upon what I consider the best evidence, I would be bound to say that I believed the money in actual circulation did not much, if at all, exceed $500,000,000.

Upon this narrow foundation has been built the enormous structure of credit of which I have spoken. It is the greatest of the kind that was ever built, because it was built by the best people that ever built anything. Over $200,000,000 of debts, the enormous and widely extended business of 65,000,000 of people, all rest upon and must be served by a volume of currency which must seem to the most veteran financier as absolutely and dangerously small.

These opinions are corroborated by the statements of other men prominent as students of finance. There is plainly an inadequate volume of currency and business is depressed. Being the tool or medium by which transactions are made, business can not be carried on without an adequate supply any more than freight can be moved in a given time without an adequate supply of cars. Our heavy crops of the Northwest are dependent for removal upon the volume of money. If there be a scarcity, stagnation ensues and prices fall.

But in addition to an increased volume of currency there must be provided some means to make it flexible enough to meet what might be called the emergencies of commerce. It so happens that a large bulk of the labor product of the South and West is turned on the market in a very few months, thus doubling or trebling the volume of wealth and business, while the volume of currency remains the same. The money volume during the summer is all used in the lines of trade, so that when the emergency of moving large crops of grain is sprung upon us business men are cramped. Interest goes up and prices of agricultural products go down.

Secretary Windom, in his speech of January 31, 1891, before the New York Board of Trade, so well stated this that I quote:

The ideal financial system would be one that should furnish just enough absolutely sound currency to meet the legitimate wants of trade and no more, and that should have enough elasticity of volume (flexibility) to adjust itself to the various necessities of these people. Could such a circulating medium (flexible) be secured, the gravest commercial disasters which threaten our future might be avoided. These disasters have always come when unusual activity in business has caused an abnormal demand for money, as in autumn, for the moving of our immense crops. There will always be great danger at those times under any cast-iron system of currency, such as we now have.

Had it not been for the peculiar condition which enabled the United States to disburse over $75,000,000 in about two and one-half months last autumn, I am firmly convinced that the stringency in August and September would have resulted in a widespread financial ruin.

Flexibility of volume, therefore, is all-important to every interest of our country outside of the money centers; and some method must be devised by which the currency can at stated times be materially increased, and then diminished again after agricultural products are moved. Farmers are not so set upon the subtreasury plan but that they are willing to give it up if we provide something better that will answer the same ends. By the present system all legitimate business pursuits are at the mercy of the kings of finance, who are always satisfied with a nonelastic and inadequate volume of money.

The money power of the United States, Mr. President, are not the first to discover the rich harvest in store through contraction of the currency. Sir Archibald Alison, the historian, in reviewing past history sees between the lines the operations of the financier, and says:

The two great events in the history of mankind have been brought about by a successive contraction and expansion of the circulating medium of society. The fall of the Roman Empire, so long ascribed to slavery, to heathenism, and to moral corruption, was, in reality, brought about by a decline in the silver and gold mines of Spain and Greece. And as if Providence intended to reveal in the clearest manner possible the influence of this mighty agent in human affairs, the restoration of mankind from the ruin this cause had produced was owing to the directly opposite set of agencies being put in operation. Columbus led the way in the career of renovation; when he spread his sails to cross the Atlantic he bore mankind and its fortunes in his bark. The annual supply of the precious metals—of money—for the use of the globe was trebled; before a century had passed the price of every species of produce was quadrupled. The weight of debt and taxation insensibly wore off under the influence of that prodigious increase; in the renovation of industry society was changed, the weight of feudalism cast off, and the rights of man established.

Substantiating this view, I quote from the scholarly report of the United States Monetary Commission of 1877:

Primarily, then, prices must have been entirely controlled by the volume of money unaffected by credit. There can never occur a universal fall in prices and a general withdrawal of credits without a preceding decrease in the volume of money. As the volume of money shrinks, prices fall. When money is decreasing in volume, prices have no bottom, except a receding one, and they are inexorably ruled by the volume of money. In the whole history of the world every great and general fall in prices has been preceded by a decrease in the volume of money. At the Christian era the metallic money of the Roman Empire amounted to $1,800,000,000. At the end of the fifteenth century it had shrunk to $300,000,000. During this period a most extraordinary and baleful change took place in the condition of the world. Population dwindled and commerce, arts, wealth, and freedom all disappeared. The people were reduced by poverty and misery to the most degraded condition of serfdom and misery.

The disintegration of society was almost complete. The conditions of life were so hard that individual selfishness was the only instinct consistent with self-preservation. All public spirit, all generous emotions, all noble aspirations of man shriveled and disappeared as the volume of money shrunk and prices fell. That the Dark Ages were caused by decreasing money and falling prices and that the recovery therefrom and the comparative prosperity which followed the discovery of America were due to the increasing supply of the precious metals and rising prices will not seem surprising or unreasonable when the noble functions of money are considered. Money is the great instrument of association, the very power of social organism, the vitalizing force of industry and as essential to its existence as oxygen is to animal life. Without money civilization could not have had a beginning; with a diminishing supply it must languish, and, unless relieved, finally perish.

The history of finance during our brief life as a nation fully confirms the economic position taken by these eminent students. Since Jefferson and Jackson sounded the first note of warning against banking corporations, we have seen the fruits of delegating the control of the volume of the currency to selfish individuals.

The effect of contracting the currency since the war is a picture of darkness and desolation. I will not trace the course of the juggernaut car in its twenty-five years of destructive progress; the wrecked homes, the broken hearts, and business stagnation are within the memory of all present. Here is a picture of the business failures and devastation wrought during a quarter of a century:

Year.	Number.	Liabilities.
1865	520	17,625,000

1887	12,042	335,121,888
1888	13,348	247,659,956
Total	140,061	3,633,102,082

The above table will not agree with Bradstreet, because he does not include failures for less than $10,000. I have included all in the table given, and have added a per cent for failures compromised or settled. This constitutes the sequel to the financial policy of this Government for the past twenty-five years. Do we not want a change?

I present another picture of depreciation in agricultural products as the result of contraction:

Especially attention is called to the above table of recapitulation. It shows that in 1867, 65,636,000 acres in cultivation produced 1,329,729,000 bushels of all kinds of grain, which sold for $1,284,000,000; while in 1887, twenty years subsequent, 141,821,000 acres produced 2,690,457,000 bushels, which sold for only $1,204,289,000. That is, the product for 1867, from less than one-half as many acres and half the amount, brought the farmer $79,711,000 more. It is impossible to charge this wholesale destruction of values to overproduction. It was a want of ability to purchase, caused by a shrinking volume of currency, and nothing else. In 1867 we had $52 per capita of population, in 1887 we had less than $7.

The opinion of these statesmen and economists is, that if a currency of $2,000,000,000 (for 30,000,000 of people) be reduced to less than $1,000,000,000 for a population of 60,000,000, so that we have but one-quarter as much money as formerly, disaster is bound to overtake all lines of business except that of the money lender.

The hundreds of thousands of debt assumed by farmers before contraction had to be paid under the specie programme. Thousands of brave men sank under the load of mortgage in despair. From a leading journal I note the following:

At the close of the war of the rebellion we had $2,000,000,000 of debt-paying medium, and but few debts. Under the contraction policy, inaugurated in 1866, about $1,300,000,000 was destroyed. So debts created on a basis of $2,000,000,000 had to be paid when the volume was reduced to $700,000,000. This was a wholesale robbery of labor, and it was brought about strictly according to law. What shall we think of such lawmakers?

In a speech delivered in this Chamber March 17, 1874, Gen. Logan referred to contraction as follows:

I will give the following tables, showing the amount of currency in circulation in the year 1865 and 1866:

	1865.
National-bank notes.....	$171,321,903
Legal-tender and other notes.....	698,918,800
State-bank notes.....	58,000,000
Seven-thirty notes.....	830,000,000
	1,758,240,703
	1866.
National-bank notes.....	$230,253,813
State-bank notes.....	9,748,025
Legal-tender and other notes.....	608,870,825
Seven-thirties.....	830,000,000
	1,738,872,668

Since which time contraction has gone on until the whole amount of currency of every kind now outstanding is only $742,000,000.

At the same time he quoted the following from the Chicago Inter-Ocean with approval:

Slavery is only another name for greed. The black man was not held in bondage for the mere pleasure of ownership, but that the white man might subsist in idleness off his labor. On the strength of this supreme greed of a few thousand owners of black men all the millions of the white men of the South were wrought up to a fury of passion, pressing them forward to the sacrifice of their lives and fortunes on the altar of a false cause. What is the situation to-day? The same battle is being waged in a different field, with different weapons. In the national Senate Chamber a bitter contest is in progress by the representatives of the moneyed aristocracy on the one hand and by the representatives of the masses of the people on the other. The proposition on the part of the capitalists is to grasp and firmly hold the largest possible percentage of the profits of all the labor of the country. They want high rates of interest whereby they may tax traffic, and low rates of wages whereby they may tax labor.

By contracting the currency they secure both of these objects, for they force traffic to supplicate the banks for loans and drive labor to beggary; and as the necessities of merchants render more pressing their importunities for loans the rate of interest is advanced to cover the increased risk, and as the demand for labor declines the price also declines. On the other hand, the proposition of the people, those who live by labor and traffic, is to extend the volume of currency, thereby cheapening money, and so stimulating manufacturing and other industries into such activity as will insure employment to the laboring classes at remunerative rates of wages. No contest was ever more clearly defined. At no time in the history of our country, not even in the history of the rebellion, has it been more evident that the interests of the many clash with those of the few.

The condition thus described has not materially improved.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will please address the Chair.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota is compelled, in order to engage the attention of the few Senators who are disposed to listen to him, even to turn his back upon the Chair. There are persons in the gallery who desire to hear this very able argument, if Senators on the floor will permit them to do it, but they seem disposed not to do it.

Now, Mr. President, I insist upon silence, because hereafter, when the country comes to answer this able argument that is now being made, there will be very profound silence in this Chamber and many of the seats that are vacant now will be vacant then by the direction of the people after they have made answer to this argument.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. KYLE. I beg pardon for turning my back to the Chair, but when, in the heat of my argument, I found my audience behind me, I turned my back instinctively upon the Chair.

For twenty years the course of prosperity has been towards the home of wealth, while 48 per cent of our population, the agricultural class, have been striving against hope to relieve themselves from an oppression the cause of which was to them mysterious. To our credit be it said that we are still an agricultural nation. May the day be far distant when this class shall cease to be an intelligent, independent, moral, directing force in our political affairs. Shall we refuse to know why these people are oppressed? Shall we blind our eyes to the fact that only about $17,000,000,000 of the $63,000,000,000 of our wealth is taxed, and that the farmer pays taxes on the largest share of it? Evidently some of the remaining 52 per cent of our population manage to escape paying taxes on all their property.

The oppressed and overtaxed farmers call to us for help. Our mortgage history is a tale of woe and suffering. The Goths and Vandals swooping down upon ancient Rome were not more ruthless or destructive than are the organized moneyed forces of this country. Despite the rosy tinge given to American farming by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] in a late speech, the Mississippi and Missouri Valleys, the garden spot of agriculture, have been under the load of mortgage for twenty years, and the future looks dark. Complete data upon this subject can not yet be furnished by the Census Department, but the following from the National Economist has been substantiated by many writers:

After a careful examination of all obtainable statistics bearing upon farm mortgages, we have selected the tables of the Michigan bureau of labor as a basis for calculations. We make that choice, first, because the system of collecting was fair and intelligent; second, because the estimates were made from actual figures; third, Michigan farmers are in a situation, so far as commercial relations and natural resources are concerned, to be as independent and as free from debt as any of her sister States. If after a fair investigation we find a large per cent of farms mortgaged in Michigan, we may look for an equal, if not greater, per cent in all the remaining agricultural States.

We wish to present the true condition as nearly as possible. After full consideration we give the following:

11 Northwestern States and Territories.....	$2,043,300,000
13 Southern States.....	648,600,000
11 Pacific States and Territories.....	118,000,000
New England and Atlantic States.....	273,672,000

Total mortgage indebtedness..... 3,083,572,000

To explain these burdensome debts as an evidence of prosperity is to display gross ignorance of the situation. It is customary I know to speak of a growing West and the need of capital for development; but that does not explain the omnipresent mortgage in the older States. The cause is often attributed to the extravagance of the modern farmer. That he wishes to ride in a carriage when his fathers were content with the wagon. Who, I ask, has a better right to a carriage than the farmer? The prosperity of a country is largely indicated by the percentage of farmers who own their own homes and who enjoy something of the comforts and pleasures of life. In our country, however, thirty years have brought us far towards the condition of the European farmer. Here is an interesting table as showing our drift from a nation of home-owners to a nation of tenants:

We might as well meet and face the facts as they are. The voice of the people means something. The agriculturists may be ignorant of many things, but they know when there is an unjust discrimination against them.

The situation to-day, Mr. President, is anomalous. We occupy the favored spot on earth in wealth of resources. Everything that is needed for the supply of man is ours. We are just in our infancy, and in that formative period of development when labor should be most richly rewarded. We have grown from a handful of people to sixty-three millions. Our wealth of eight thousand millions in 1850, and thirty thousand millions in 1870, has now reached the almost incomprehensible figure of sixty-three thousand millions. And yet we look upon the sad picture of a depressed industry, with two million laborers tramping as beggars, while women and children in rags are perishing for the necessities of life. There are reasons for these things. The poor are not all victims of ignorance, shiftlessness, and vice. They are rather victims of an economic condition.

It is an economic law that the prosperity of a nation consists not so much in the accumulation of wealth as in the proper distribution of it. Our gain of eighteen thousand millions in a decade makes us the envy of the world. But where has it gone? There seem to have been millions flowing by a steady stream into the pockets of the favored few, while the masses are left with a bare existence. The farmer is denying himself and yet runs in debt. How is it with the day laborer? According to the labor reports of Massachusetts the average yearly wages for the employed for 1886, averaging forty lines of industry, was $395.89. For 1887, $396.14, or about $1.02 per day.

In a speech delivered in Congress May 16, 1888, Hon. Benjamin Butterworth made the following statements in regard to the income of farms in some of the States:

States.	Per year.	Per day.
Ohio.....	$394.00	$1.08
Georgia.....	155.00	.42
Mississippi.....	379.00	.74
Illinois.....	476.00	1.30
Alabama.....	149.00	.41
Wisconsin.....	375.00	1.02

The average income of the farmers of the United States is less than $1 a day counting three hundred and sixty-five days in a year. Mr. Butterworth also stated the average income of mechanics and laborers in different cities:

Cities.	Per year.	Per day.
Cincinnati.....	$258.00	$0.93
Lowell, Mass.....	231.00	.80
Chicago.....	436.00	1.20
St. Louis.....	424.00	1.17
Philadelphia.....	340.75	.95
Lawrence, Mass.....	331.75	.90
Richmond, Va.....	214.00	.60
Augusta, Ga.....	257.00	.70
Louisville, Ky.....	334.00	.93

This is not a very good showing for the remuneration of productive labor.

How far removed from starving is this? I well know the answer with reference to this, as applied to the modern farmer and day laborer, that never in the history of this or any other country has this class been so well paid. Barring certain skilled workmen, wages are low enough now. But it must be remembered that more money is used by the laborer than ever before. Time was when the farmer produced his wearing apparel and every article of food. That day has passed. The mechanic once kept his garden and other helps of a domestic kind. That day is past. He now pays cash for every article consumed by the family. It is safe to say that the demands upon the laborer are double what they were in the early days, and therefore the conclusion that his condition is not materially improved.

But how has the millionaire flourished? In 1860 there were but very few millionaires in our country. Now there are over thirty-two thousand. The matter is commented on by the Christian Union, of New York, as follows:

Mr. Vanderbilt's aggregate wealth is estimated at $201,000,000, and there are fourteen States which separately return less property, real and personal, than this one fortune. He owns one two-hundred-and-eighteenth part of the wealth of the nation. The great estates of Rome, in the time of the Cæsars, and of France, in the time of the Bourbons, rivaled those of the United States of to-day; but both nations were on their way to a frenzy of revolution, not in spite of their wealth, but, in some true sense, because of it.—Christian Union, 1894.

In the November Forum, 1889, Thomas G. Shearman gives the following startling table showing the concentration of wealth in the hands of the few.

Families.	Worth.
70.....	$2,625,000,000
90.....	1,025,000,000
180.....	1,440,000,000
135.....	968,000,000
360.....	1,656,000,000
1,755.....	4,036,000,000
6,000.....	7,500,000,000
7,000.....	4,550,000,000
11,000.....	4,125,000,000
14,000.....	3,220,000,000
16,500.....	2,722,000,000
59,000.....	5,000,000,000
75,000.....	4,500,000,000
200,000.....	4,000,000,000
1,000,000.....	3,500,000,000
2,000,000.....	4,000,000,000
9,629,000.....	7,215,000,000
13,002,000.....	62,082,000,000

Now let us put them into four great classes:

Families.	Worth.
182,000.....	$12,367,000,000
1,200,000.....	7,500,000,000
2,500,000.....	5,200,000,000
9,120,000.....	6,015,000,000
13,002,000.....	62,082,000,000

How the immortal Webster would stare at such figures!
He once spoke of this threatening evil in this manner:

The freest government can not long endure where the tendency of the law is to create a rapid accumulation of property in the hands of the few, and to render the masses of the people poor and dependent.

Further comment is unnecessary to show the violation of just economic laws as applied to individuals. But the injustice is equally noticeable when applied to States. It is manifestly unjust that the population of one State should be compelled to "make bricks without straw" in order that the product of their labor should be used to build up the wealth of another State, even though the steady drain of wealth should be in accordance with law. I have taken the pains to figure out from the late census reports some facts upon this point, showing how the manufacturing States have been favored.

During the past decade fifteen States, comprising the great agricultural belt south of us and as far west as Texas, with a population of 22,000,000, produced in round numbers but $1,496,000,000 of wealth.

Nine of the richest States of the Mississippi Valley, with a population of 19,000,000, were able to produce in ten years only fourteen hundred and eighty-three millions of wealth, while the six New England States, with but four and a half millions of people, produced nine hundred and six millions of wealth. Massachusetts alone, with two millions of people, produced five hundred and sixty-nine millions of wealth in ten years, while Indiana, with the same population, produced but fifty-five millions. This goes to show that either New England is a rustler or else the hard-earned dollars of the agricultural States have contributed to her wealth.

One more example taken from S. S. King's compilation from the census report of 1890: Ten Southern States, taken with five of the best States of the Mississippi Valley, show the following facts:

Square miles of area	776,480
Population in 1880	19,996,827
Assessed valuation	$3,965,169,502

Now compare these figures with the single State of New York:

Square miles of area	49,170
Population	5,082,871
Assessed valuation	$2,651,940,006

Now, here are the deductions:

The fifteen States here have sixteen times the territory and better soil; they have four times the population with which to produce wealth; they have one and a half times the capital in assessed valuation; and yet the fifteen States gained in wealth during ten years only $1,117,188,213, while New York alone gained $1,123,385,932, or six millions more than the fifteen States.

I present also the report of the Comptroller of the Currency upon the distribution of loanable funds, together with some comments by Mr. N. A. Dunning, in the National Economist. On page 234 of this report is the following table:

Table showing, by States and Territories, the population of each on June 1, 1891, and the aggregate capital of national and State banks, loan and trust companies, and savings and private banks in the United States on June 30, 1891, and the average of these per capita of population.

A glance at the tables submitted will show that the Eastern States are enjoying the benefits of a per capita of loanable funds ranging from $80.70 in New Jersey to $361.72 in Rhode Island, while the Southern States have only $6.56 in Arkansas to $30.90 in Louisiana. This inequality becomes more marked as the statistics of loans and currency are considered, which will be brought out further on. Its such an extent has this inequitable condition of congestion in the East and depletion in the South and West obtained as to attract the attention of many who have heretofore doubted its existence, and may lead to a thorough awakening of public interest in the matter.

It will be noticed that out of the gross amount of loanable funds aggregating $5,840,438,191, the eleven Eastern States control $3,737,812,013, or nearly 64 per cent, while the eleven Southern States have only $197,041,996, or a little over 3 per cent, and the remaining twenty-seven States and Territories have $1,905,584,182, or about 33 per cent.

The eleven Eastern States, with an area of 117,062,640 acres of land, hold $3,737,812,191 in loanable funds, while the eleven Southern States, with 479,995,758 acres, has but $197,041,996. Reduced to an average gives the eleven Eastern States $31.93 and the eleven Southern States less than 4 cents per acre. These figures will be met with the statement that the East needs more money than the South, which under present conditions, is no doubt true, and because it is, furnishes one of the best reasons for a change.

That the financial system as now practiced tends to intensify this situation to the detriment of other sections is apparent to all who will give it even a partial examination. To eliminate the necessity for the West and South going to the East for money to carry on or encourage production, is one of the greatest questions before the American people.

These instances can be multiplied ad libitum. A depressed agriculture has rapidly driven the population from the rural districts to the cities. According to Census Bulletin 52, in 1880 but 22.57 per cent of the population lived in cities of 8,000 and more. In 1890 this had increased to 29.12 per cent, a gain of 6.55 per cent. Whereas the increase the previous decade had been but 1.64 per cent. The question is, Can these vast agricultural regions of the South and West afford the constant drain both of population and money tribute to the great commercial and manufacturing centers? By what law is this draining process carried on? It is enough to say that it is carried on in violation of the most fundamental laws of economics as applied to a well-governed and prosperous nation. It is a one-sided game. It is all contribution and no return except in this, that when we have once impoverished ourselves, the wealth once centralized, is loaned back to us at exorbitant rates of interest, a rate which in all our Western States no farming interests can afford, I care not how prosperous.

This, Mr. President, is not the cry of a small class of disgruntled, selfish farmers and laboring men. It is the voice of the best class of the Republic. None more loyal, without a trace of the spirit of envy or vengeance. Here is their declaration of grievances as set forth in the preamble of the platform of the greatest labor convention of the age, at St. Louis on the 22d of February:

THE PEOPLE'S PARTY PLATFORM.

This, the first great labor conference of the United States and of the world, representing all divisions of urban and rural organized industry assembled in national congress, invoking upon its action the blessing and protection of Almighty God, puts forth to and for the producers of the nation this declaration of union and independence.

The conditions which surround us best justify our cooperation. We meet in the midst of a nation brought to the verge of moral, political, and material ruin. Corruption dominates the ballot box, the Legislatures, the Congress, and touches even the ermine of the bench. The people are demoralized. Many of the States have been compelled to isolate the voters at the polling places in order to prevent universal intimidation or bribery.

The newspapers are subsidized or muzzled; public opinion silenced; business prostrated; our homes covered with mortgages; labor impoverished and the land concentrating into the hands of capitalists. The urban workmen are denied the right of organization for self-protection, imported pauperized labor beats down their wages; a hireling standing army unrecognized by our laws, is established to shoot them down and they are rapidly degenerating to European conditions. The fruits of the toil of millions are boldly stolen to build up colossal fortunes unprecedented in the history of the world, while their possessors despite the Republic and endanger liberty. From the same prolific womb of governmental injustice we breed the two great classes, paupers and millionaires.

The national power to create the money is appropriated to enrich the bondholders. Silver, which has been accepted as coin since the dawn of history, has been demonetized to add to the purchasing power of gold by decreasing the value of all forms of property, as well as human labor, and the supply of currency is purposely abridged to fatten usurers, bankrupt enterprises, and enslave industry. A vast conspiracy against mankind has been organized on two continents and is taking possession of the world. If not met and overthrown at once it forebodes terrible social convulsions, the destruction of civilization, or the establishment of an absolute despotism.

In this crisis of human affairs the intelligent working peoples' producers of the United States have come together here in the interests of peace, order, and society, to aid in prosperity and justice.

PLATFORM ADOPTED AT ST. LOUIS FEBRUARY 22, 1892.

Finance.

First. We demand a national currency safe, sound, and flexible, issued by the General Government only, a full legal tender for all debts, public and private; and that without the use of banking corporations a just, equitable, and efficient means of distribution direct to the people at a tax not to exceed 2 per cent be provided, as set forth in the subtreasury plan of the Farmers' Alliance, or some better system; also, by payments in discharge of its obligations for public improvements.

- a. We demand free and unlimited coinage of silver.
- b. We demand that the amount of the circulating medium be speedily increased to not less than $50 per capita.
- c. We demand a graduated income tax.
- d. We believe that the money of the country should be kept as much as possible in the hands of the people; and hence we demand all national and State revenue shall be limited to the necessary expenses of the Government economically and honestly administered.
- e. We demand that postal savings banks be established by the Government for the safe deposit of the earnings of the people and to facilitate exchange.

Land.

Second. The land, including all the natural resources of wealth, is the heritage of all the people and should not be monopolized for speculative purposes, and alien ownership of land should be prohibited. All land now held by railroads and other corporations in excess of their actual needs, and all lands now owned by aliens, should be reclaimed by the Government and held for actual settlers only.

Transportation.

Third. Transportation being a means of exchange and a public necessity, the Government should own and operate the railroads in the interest of the people.

a. The telegraph and telephone, like the post-office system, being a necessity for transmission of news should be owned and operated by the Government in the interest of the people.

We are confronted with earnest appeals of statesmen and party leaders to refrain from independent political action. We are pointed to history to witness the folly of such a course; that it means political suicide to those who embark, with no possible hope of successful reform. But at the same moment when the money question, dear to the people's hearts, is brought to the consideration of Congress, its enemies in one party stigmatize it as a maniacal craze. While its supposed friends in the other, upon the ground of expediency, quietly lay it to rest. We are told plainly by the action of the House within the last month, that we can expect no relief from Congress, and that both parties will nominate as chief executive a man who is unfriendly to silver. We can get, they say, no relief from a third party. Now, between the two, may I ask where the people are to come in?

With all due respect to the sagely advice of such leaders, let me say that the people are not placed in such a dilemma; and that if relief be not granted, such a combination will be formed as will relegate one or the other of the old parties to the position of third in the race.

These people do not determine upon independent action unless compelled to do so. There is no glory in meeting the malicious and revengeful attacks of the partisan press consequent upon such action. And there is not a citizen of the great South and West to-day who would not unite in the chorus of gratitude, were he informed that relief from his burdens had been granted by either of the existing parties.

There is no desire for class legislation so-called, but only for justice and fair play. Can it be that the people's representatives, separated long years from their constituents, have forgotten their needs? The people are long-suffering. They are not unreasonable. Let us not turn a deaf ear to their petitions, but by just and humane laws usher in a day of prosperity for the laboring man that shall make this Republic conspicuous among the nations of the world.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I ask that the message of the President may still remain on the table. I propose to call it up myself hereafter and deliver some remarks on it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The message will be laid on the table, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the report of the committee of conference, which was submitted yesterday, on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6185) to absolutely prohibit the coming of Chinese persons into the United States. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. PLATT. Let the report be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as published in yesterday's RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLEN in the chair). The question is on concurring in the conference report.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, though a member of the conference committee, I was not able to get the consent of my own judgment to sign this report. I simply wish to state very briefly the reasons why I did not do it.

I was very willing to provide for any legislation necessary to continue in force the existing restrictions against Chinese laborers coming to this country. The Senate bill did this, I thought, very broadly. It continued in force the old laws. It provided some penal sections to punish Chinamen coming into the country in opposition to the law, especially through Canada.

I look upon the introduction of Chinese laborers through Canada as not only an insult to our country, but it seems to me an almost designed insult by the Canadian authorities to allow a class of people who are forbidden by our laws to come here, to enter a port right on our border. They are charged $50 for the privilege of landing on Canadian soil with the privilege to enter our country in violation of our laws. It is not courteous treatment by the Canadian authorities, and it is incidents like this which tend to create excitement all along the border and which some time or other will no doubt be the cause of great difficulty, because unfriendly legislation of that kind constantly repeated must tend to create irritation.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any provision made in the bill which has been reported from the conference committee in regard to Chinese being shipped in here from Canada?

Mr. SHERMAN. There was such a provision in the Senate bill, and it is retained in the conference report. The Senate bill provided certain penalties in regard to the attempt of Chinese laborers to come into our country without the right to do it.

Mr. COCKRELL. There ought to be an express provision. We can certainly stop them from coming in from Canada.

Mr. MORGAN. There is a provision of that kind, and I supposed that that print of the bill was on the table of Senators. It should be here. It was ordered to be printed yesterday.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a copy here, which I intend to read.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have not any copy of it here.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a copy of the conference report, which I will refer to in a moment.

Mr. COKE. I have no copy of the conference report here, but—

Mr. DOLPH. It was printed in the RECORD, and is on the tables of Senators.

Mr. COKE. I should like a statement of the changes made by the conference committee in the bill as it passed the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator will find the conference report in the RECORD of this morning.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I can state that there are no changes made in the Senate bill. So far as the Senate bill is concerned it is a part of the conference report. It is substantially the same, with some slight amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Only one sentence has been changed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, one or two sentences.

Mr. MORGAN. But one.

Mr. SHERMAN. But there is no material change.

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator will permit me, what is the change?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state it all.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio what the change of from six months to a year refers to in some penalty?

Mr. DOLPH. That is the imprisonment before deporting them. Not exceeding six months it was, and now it is not exceeding one year, so that for a second wrongful coming they may be punished to the extent of a year, but it may be one day or one year, not exceeding one year. It is in the fourth section of the Senate bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is only a change in the penalty.

Now, the objection I have to this measure is in the addition that has been made to the Senate bill, the provision of the House bill or something like it, which provides for a certificate to be taken out by every Chinaman lawfully in this country, here under virtue of our treaty and by our laws; that they shall be compelled to take a certificate of residence within one year; that they must apply to the collector of internal revenue of their respective districts within one year after the passage of this act for a certificate of residence. Then it provides:

And any Chinese laborer within the limits of the United States who shall neglect, fail, or refuse to comply with the provisions of this act, or who, after one year from the passage hereof, shall be found within the jurisdiction of the United States without such certificate of residence, shall be deemed and adjudged to be unlawfully within the United States, and may be arrested by any United States customs official, collector of internal revenue or his dep-ties, United States marshal or his deputies and taken before a United States judge, whose duty it shall be to order that he be deported from the United States, as hereinbefore provided, unless he shall establish clearly to the satisfaction of said judge that by reason of accident, sickness, or other unavoidable cause he has been unable to procure his certificate, and to the satisfaction of the court, and by at least one credible white witness that he was a resident of the United States at the time of the passage of this act; and if upon the hearing it shall appear that he is so entitled to a certificate, it shall be granted upon his paying the cost.

This inaugurates in our system of government a new departure, one I believe never before practiced, although it was suggested in conference that some such rules had been adopted in the old slavery times to secure the peaceful and quiet condition of society.

Mr. MORGAN. It was also suggested that we act daily upon the same rule in regard to the Indian tribes on reservations.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is upon very different ground. The Indians are in our country, they are confined to reservations, and treaties have been made, and those treaties require them to stay on their reservations. So we are simply enforcing the treaties.

Mr. PLATT. They do not have to get certificates or be punished.

Mr. SHERMAN. No, but here is the case: If we propose now to prescribe by law, to be carried out within one year, that, say, nearly 200,000 people—I do not know that there are so many—

Mr. PLATT. One hundred and ten thousand.

Mr. SHERMAN. One hundred and ten thousand it is said; but then it was stated by gentlemen in debate here that there are 200,000 Chinamen in this country. I do not know how many there are; but that many Chinese persons must apply to our officers to get a certificate and to prove their right to obtain that certificate, and they must hold it and have it and possess it at all times as an evidence of their right to stay in this country. So we should have one hundred or two hundred thousand people, nearly all men who have to make a living by their daily labor, scattered through our country, mostly employed in the humbler occupations of life, armed with their certificates, liable to be called upon by any collector of customs or his officers, by any internal-revenue collector, by any marshal, by any officer of the United States to show that certificate, and unless he can show it or prove its loss—a thing very difficult to be done, for he must make certain proof by one white witness, although very few white men can distinguish Chinamen unless they are acquainted with them—he is liable to be deported abroad to the country from which he came or to China. The burden of proof rests upon him to show that he was here at the time of the passage of this law. He does not stand like an ordinary person presumed to be entitled to all rights and privileges, but he must prove himself the affirmative.

Mr. MORGAN. That is the law now.

Mr. SHERMAN. He must prove in the affirmative that he is entitled to stay here, and then he must produce his certificate.

Mr. MORGAN. He has to do it now.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no certificate required now.

Mr. MORGAN. When he wants to come back here.

Mr. ALLISON. What proof must he produce to get the certificate?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will read it again. I read that portion of it, but I will read it again. It is a certificate of character:

Whose duty it shall be to order that he be deported from the United States, as hereinbefore provided, unless he shall establish clearly to the satisfaction of said judge that by reason of accident, sickness, or other unavoidable cause he has been unable to procure his certificate, and to the satisfaction of the court, and by at least one credible white witness that he was a resident of the United States at the time of the passage of this act; and if upon the hearing it shall appear that he is so entitled to a certificate, it shall be granted upon his paying the cost.

Mr. ALLISON. What proof is necessary in order to secure the certificate in the first instance? Is his presence here presumptive evidence of his right to a certificate?

Mr. PLATT. He must prove it by one credible white witness.

Mr. SHERMAN. That does not answer the Senator from Iowa.

I will read the first part of section 6, as to the first certificate:

And it shall be the duty of all Chinese laborers within the limits of the United States at the time of the passage of this act, and who are entitled to remain in the United States, to apply to the collector of internal revenue of their respective districts, within one year after the passage of this act, for a certificate of residence.

"For a certificate of residence"— and any Chinese laborer within the limits of the United States who shall neglect, fail, or refuse to comply, or—

It does not prescribe the kind of evidence which is necessary.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is all left by the bill, I infer, to regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The act itself does not specify them.

Mr. SHERMAN. The next section provides for regulations by the Secretary of the Treasury; so that practically it is left to the Secretary of the Treasury through the collector of internal revenue.

Mr. KENNA. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to make an inquiry at that point?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. KENNA. Suppose on an application for a certificate the application be denied, is there any provision in the proposed amendment to meet that emergency?

Mr. SHERMAN. None; I have read the whole of it.

Mr. KENNA. If the application has been made, no matter if the party has been a resident here for an indefinite number of years?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Secretary of the Treasury makes the regulations. There is no provision in the law itself as to what proof shall be required of the person upon making his first application. In case of the loss of his certificate then the proof required is prescribed.

Mr. KENNA. I understand that; but he makes his application in the first instance, and if that be denied, he has no further remedy.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not see that there is any chance for an appeal. The regulations of the Treasury Department would be the final law. If the Secretary of the Treasury or his subordinate should deny the certificate, I do not know how the Chinese laborer can get it, and he must therefore disappear within a year. Now, this is as to the proof.

Here is the treaty. We have a treaty with China, and have been in our history heretofore a treaty-observing nation, although in what is called the Scott law we did violate the treaty in an important particular. That law is continued. It seems to have been acquiesced in in a certain kind of way. At any rate it has not led to the breaking off of diplomatic relations.

Now, whether this exceptional legislation, strange as it may appear, never before introduced into our country, except in the possible cases I have mentioned, is in violation of the treaty, is the real question and the real doubt upon which I stand. I care nothing about the exclusion of Chinese laborers from our country, because I believe their habits are inconsistent with our civilization, and, as soon as we can get rid of them properly, according to the treaty, I am perfectly willing to do so. The question is now whether in the face of the language that I will read to the Senate it is our right—not our power, but our right according to the treaty—to make this exceptional legislation for people who are now here under existing law. Article I of the treaty of 1880 provides that:

Whenever in the opinion of the Government of the United States the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, or their residence therein, affects or threatens to affect the interests of that country, or to endanger the good order of the said country or of any locality within the territory thereof, the Government of China agrees that the Government of the United States may regulate, limit, or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it. The limitation or suspension shall be reasonable and shall apply only to Chinese who may go to the United States as laborers, other classes not being included in the limitations. Legislation taken in regard to Chinese laborers will be of such a character only as is necessary to enforce the regulation, limitation, or suspension of immigration, and immigrants shall not be subject to personal maltreatment or abuse.

In violation of that article of the treaty we expressly provide that these people shall only have the right to remain here upon applying, on certain terms and conditions, for a certificate; that if they lose their certificate they are not to be governed by the laws as to other persons; they are here ticket-of-leave men. Precisely as under the Australian law a convict is allowed to go at large upon a ticket of leave, these people are allowed to go at large and earn their livelihood, but they must have this ticket of leave in their possession. And this is the legislation that is supposed to be in harmony and consistent with the treaty! That is the question. Now, let us go a little further.

ARTICLE II.

Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants or from curiosity, together with their body and household servants. And Chinese laborers who are now in the United States shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord; and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation.

We have agreed by this treaty not only that we would not discriminate against them in our legislation, but that we would permit these laborers to remain in the position of persons "of the most favored nation." I will read this clause again:

And Chinese laborers who are now in the United States shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator will allow me, I desire to suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations that the very bill he has reported from his committee and which was incorporated into the House bill as a substitute for the House bill, contravenes in the most direct and positive manner the very provision of the treaty the Senator has read.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have already said that. So far as I am concerned I am not responsible, because I did not vote for it; but I have said that the United States has already violated this treaty. Is that any reason why you should violate it in another way and in a more offensive way?

Mr. MITCHELL. It is the same, it seems to me.

Mr. SHERMAN. No, it is not; it is very different. That was a case where we denied the right of a Chinaman who lived in this country and had gone back to China to return here. Under the treaty he had a right to come and go, but we denied that right. He has also the right here to enjoy all the privileges, rights, and immunities of citizens of the most favored nation, of Englishmen, Frenchmen, Germans, and all other countries. Would we, in our country, adopt a system as to our German immigrants who are born in Germany, and as to the English, Irish, Scotch, and French who come here, which would put them under the ticket-of-leave plan, and require them to show their certificates wherever they went to any officer who might demand it at any time whatever, upon the penalty of being deported to the land from which they came? Yet we do this against the Chinese.

Now, I do not think that that is in harmony with the treaty. Those who believe that we have a right to trample upon this treaty, as a matter of course can vote for this report without any compunction. They may say that we are tired of Chinese immigration here, and we may do what we please to exclude the Chinese; but with my feeling about the regard and obligation of these treaties I do not feel at liberty to do so. That is about all I have to say.

Here is Article III of the treaty of 1880:

ARTICLE III.

If Chinese laborers, or Chinese of any other class, now either permanently or temporarily residing in the territory of the United States, meet with ill treatment at the hands of any other persons, the Government of the United States will exert all its power to devise measures for their protection, and to secure to them the same rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions as may be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, and to which they are entitled by treaty.

Here is a treaty by which China, the most populous nation in the world, agreed that the United States may exclude the class of people of Chinese that we do not want here, making a discrimination against them among all the nations of the world. But it is done upon certain terms and conditions, that in respect to those who are now here they shall be treated as all other peoples are treated; that no discrimination shall be made against them; that no mark of distinction shall be put upon them. By the terms of this bill, I think that the treaty is violated, and I for one do not propose to vote for the conference report on that ground.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I have never been a radical on the question of Chinese immigration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon will for a moment suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be announced.

The CHIEF CLERK. A resolution of Mr. JONES of Arkansas, relative to the President's message of February 18, 1892.

Mr. DOLPH. That I suppose will be temporarily laid aside. This question is privileged.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the unfinished business be informally laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business will be informally laid aside. The Senator from Oregon will proceed on the conference report.

Mr. DOLPH. I had a great many misgivings about the Scott bill. It is not necessary now to recount the circumstance under which that measure was acted upon in the Senate. I feel a good deal about that bill, as many others have expressed themselves here, that it not only violated the treaty but was a great injustice to many Chinese persons who had come to this country under the treaty and departed from it with their certificates, leaving their business and business connections here, and who were entitled to return on those certificates, which were by that act declared void, and they were kept out of the United States. How many there were of this class I do not know. I have heard it claimed that there were some thirty thousand.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to make an inquiry. I did not understand the request of the Senator from Oregon about laying aside the regular order.

Mr. DOLPH. I suggested that, this being a privileged question, I supposed the regular order would be laid aside temporarily until this question is disposed of; that is all.

Mr. CULLOM. This is a conference report.

Mr. DOLPH. This being a conference report. But the Scott bill became a law with my vote in the Senate, and the Senate has declared by a large majority vote that it will not attempt to disturb it. The bill reported by me early in the session from the Committee on Foreign Relations provided "That all laws now in force regulating the coming into this country of Chinese persons and persons of Chinese descent are hereby continued in force for a period of ten years from the passage of this act." That continues the Scott law. Even if that law should be repealed now, the injustice which was done to many of the Chinese who

That any Chinese person or person of Chinese descent, when convicted and adjudged under any of said laws to be not lawfully entitled to be or remain in the United States, shall be removed from the United States to China, unless he or they shall make it appear to the justice, judge, or commissioner before whom he or they are tried that he or they are subjects or citizens of some other country, in which case he or they shall be removed from the United States to such country.

It then provided that if a tax or license is required of such Chinaman before he can enter such other country he shall be deported to China. The third section provided that a Chinese person arrested for being unlawfully in the country should have the affirmative to establish his right to remain. The only amendment of that section by the conference report is the insertion of the words "or the acts hereby extended;" so that the first clause of section 3 will read:

That any Chinese person or person of Chinese descent arrested under the provisions of this act or the acts hereby extended, etc.

That was an omission in the draft of the section, and it was very properly inserted. The fourth section provided that when a Chinese person, after being convicted and deported from this country, returned and was again convicted, before he was again deported he should be punished by imprisonment for not exceeding six months. That has been amended so as to provide that any Chinese person who comes into this country in violation of the law may be punished not exceeding one year by imprisonment before he is deported, leaving it to the discretion of the court whether it shall be a month or a year, or a day or a year. The reason for that is that the punishment for a violation of the law by Chinese laborers seeking to enter now is very inadequate. It is simply that the Chinaman shall be deported from the country without cost to him, at the expense of the United States, and that he shall be taken back to China.

There may be cases, undoubtedly have been cases, and would be cases if the law is not changed, in which a Chinese person simply crosses the line, comes into the United States from Canada for the purpose of being sent back to China at the expense of the United States. It will be seen that that is a very inadequate penalty, and the committee of conference thought best to change the section so as to provide that a Chinese laborer might be imprisoned for the first violation. That is no unusual or unreasonable punishment for a willful violation of our laws. The fact is that the violations of our laws by Chinese laborers seeking to come into the United States are all willful. They all know precisely what they are doing. They know they are violating the law and doing an unlawful act.

The only other provision which at all affects the rights of the Chinese is the provision requiring Chinese laborers to obtain certificates. The Senate will see, in the first place, that the requirement for certificates is only on the part of Chinese laborers. We have not touched the question as to who are merchants, as to what other Chinese persons are entitled to be or remain in the United States or to come into the United States. We have only undertaken to provide some regulation by which the coming of Chinese laborers from the Canadian border and from the Mexican border into the United States can be prevented. We now have a right to exclude these Chinese laborers; the treaty gave us that right; we have legislated that they shall be excluded, and we find that it is impossible to exclude them with a land boundary line of 3,000 miles between the Canadian Dominion and the United States and our extended boundary line between Mexico and the United States. It is impossible to have a Government officer at every point along that line, and if existing laws are to be executed at all it is necessary to have some means of distinguishing between Chinese laborers who are lawfully here and Chinese laborers who come unlawfully into the United States.

The only difficulty in my mind about this provision has been as to how it would be received by the Chinese Government, and whether it would still further add to the dissatisfaction of the Chinese Government; but I have no question about its being within the treaty. I have no question about this provision for certificates being necessary in order to enable the United States to keep out Chinese laborers who are not entitled to come here under existing laws and under the treaty. In this provision the objectionable features of the similar provision in the House bill have been removed as far as possible. Practically this proposed amendment treats all Chinese laborers in the United States at the passage of this act or who shall apply for a certificate within a year as being rightfully, at least presumptively rightfully, in the United States, although the language of the provision is that they shall be Chinese laborers within the United States at the passage of the act, entitled to remain.

The only ground upon which any certificate could be refused would be that the officer before whom the application was made had evidence to show that the Chinese laborer had come into the United States since the passage of the act and was therefore not within the United States at the time of the passage of the act and for that reason not entitled to remain. It is not likely that any certificate would wrongfully be refused on that ground, and if it were there is no doubt at all that means could be found to secure the issuing of the certificate. We have left the minor matters to be provided for by the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury.

I think this provision is as much in the interest of Chinese laborers in the United States to-day and entitled to remain, as it is in the interest of the United States to enable them to keep out Chinese laborers who are not entitled to come in. Any Chinese laborer now in the United States is liable to be arrested to-day on a claim that he has wrongfully come into the United States from Canada or from Mexico or from some other country and is not entitled to remain in the United States; and he is liable to be tried on that charge before a judge or before a commissioner, and anybody maliciously or otherwise may cause his arrest and the trial of that question. But if he had a certificate duly issued in legal form he would be exempt from any interruption and annoyance of that kind. So the certificate would really be a benefit to him. It would be an evidence of his right to be in the United States and to remain in the United States, which he could carry with him at all times.

So the conference committee have inserted a provision that Chinese persons in the United States other than Chinese laborers may—not making it imperative upon them—but may apply if they choose for such certificates as evidence of their right to remain here, which shall be issued to them without charge.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that this provision requires the certificate to be issued by the internal revenue collector.

Mr. DOLPH. Or, of course, through some deputy.

Mr. GEORGE. It does not say anything about a deputy. The internal revenue collector in the district in which I reside would live 500 miles from the Chinese person seeking the certificate.

Mr. DOLPH. The amendment requires the Secretary of the Treasury to make such regulations as will enable certificates to be issued convenient to the applicant.

Mr. GEORGE. The certificates have to be issued by the internal revenue collector.

Mr. DOLPH. They are to be signed by him. They need not necessarily be delivered by him.

Mr. GEORGE. Why was not provision made that they may be issued by the clerk of a court?

Mr. DOLPH. That matter was discussed. I suggested putting in deputies; the conferees were opposed to that, but I secured another provision which was satisfactory to me and under which I think there will be no injustice done. As to the issuing of these certificates, in the first place I say the power to require them to be obtained is not a violation of the treaty. Some system of this kind is necessary to enable the United States to keep out those Chinese laborers not entitled to come in, to distinguish between those who are rightfully here and those who are not rightfully here; and therefore I think we are not violating the treaty by making such a provision. If I thought so, I would not vote for the bill, because I would not consent to any further legislation that I thought was a violation of the treaty.

Then I think, as I say, that it is quite as beneficial to the Chinese laborers themselves that they shall have these certificates as evidence of their right to be and remain in the United States undisturbed as it is to the United States to enable them to prevent the coming of Chinese into this country.

The only other question is as to what provisions are necessary to secure the issuing of these certificates and to create no hardship or injustice to the Chinese laborers here. We have provided that they shall be issued without charge to the applicant. We have given the applicants one year in which to secure them. We have provided that the Secretary of the Treasury shall make such regulations as will provide for the issuing of certificates convenient to the applicants.

We have made the provision as liberal as possible. Instead of allowing one of these Chinese laborers who were in the United States at the time of the passage of the act to be brought up from spite by anybody, we provide that he may be arrested by certain officials, and instead of allowing him to be tried before any local commissioner in any county, we say he shall be brought before a United States judge, who it is presumed will not in his decision be governed by prejudice, but will undertake to do what is the proper and right thing to be done under the circumstances. Then we provide that if brought up at the expiration of a year, if he has neglected the duty of getting this certificate, and if he shall show that by reason of accident, sickness, or unavoidable cause he has not a certificate, and does show by one white witness that he was here at the time the act was passed and was entitled to a certificate, the certificate shall be issued to him. Then we provide that if he has had a certificate and is arrested and alleges he has lost it, the case shall be delayed and he shall have an opportunity to send and get a duplicate of it.

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. DOLPH. Certainly.

Mr. COKE. I suggest that as it requires one credible white witness the requirements will exclude from the witness box a very large number of citizens of the United States who are not white. I desire to ask if it was the intention to exclude them?

Mr. DOLPH. I think the intention of the conference committee was to provide a witness who should not be a Chinese witness. I presume that was it; the use of the word white was accidental. It was copied from the House bill, but I do not think any harm can arise from this provision, because all the Chinese in this country are employed by white people. If they are employed as servants there will always be some white person who can identify them. If they are employed upon public works or in large bodies, then they are always connected with some Chinese company; they are registered; the company knows just who they are, what they are doing, and what wages they are receiving, and has an interest in their wages.

Mr. KENNA. I ask the Senator if the language of the bill would not exclude the colored population as witnesses?

Mr. DOLPH. I say it was not the intention to exclude colored persons, but to provide that one witness should be some other witness than another Chinese laborer.

Mr. KENNA. I do not ask if that was the intention; I ask if that is not the express meaning of the proposed statute?

Mr. DOLPH. It would exclude colored witnesses; there is no question about that.

I do not care to say anything more about this report, and I would have preferred myself the Senate bill without amendment. I have agreed to these amendments of it, because I think they are not in violation of the treaty. They are not any serious hardship upon the Chinese. The provision will really be beneficial to the Chinese laborers, giving them a certificate as evidence of their right to remain in this country.

Now, my friend from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] says we are introducing something new; that we are requiring something of the Chinese we do not require of people of other countries. Well, we introduced something new when we provided that Chinese laborers should be prevented from coming to this country. There was the innovation. If we should provide that Italian laborers or certain classes of Italians should not come to this country, it would probably be found necessary that we should give those who are here and were entitled to be here some evidence of their right to remain here in order that we might distinguish them from those who had not a right to come. I say the departure was when we undertook to exclude Chinese laborers, not in attempting to give them evidence of the right to remain or requiring them to procure evidence of the right to remain here in order that we may distinguish them from those who have not a right to come. We have discriminated against Chinese laborers. We have entered into a treaty that we might exclude them from the United States. We have legislated for their exclusion from the United States. Having done that, it is necessary for us to adopt some practical means to determine what Chinese laborers here are rightfully entitled to remain, and the necessity for this legislation arises from previous legislation and previous treaty stipulations.

I have not a doubt in the world that there will not be a Chinaman in the United States who will not understand within sixty days after this act is passed what is necessary. I do not believe at the end of the year there will be any Chinese laborers in the United States found without a certificate. As I said before, they come to this country by some arrangement with Chinese companies, the Six Companies. They are registered here by them; they are hired out by them; their wages are collected by them; their money is deposited with them, and their connection is such that the Chinese companies will at once see that the clients of their companies, the Chinamen who are attached to their companies, take the necessary steps to obtain the certificate.

While making the provision as liberal as possible, of course the committee were desirous that they should not make it so liberal that frauds could be practiced and those obtain certificates who are not entitled to them, and the certificates used to bring other persons into the United States.

This report is the agreement of the conference committee, and I hope it will be adopted, as but two days more remain for any legislation on the subject. I suppose on the morning of the 6th the present legislation will expire.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the bill that came over from the House of Representatives failed to notice the distinction between Chinese laborers and other classes of Chinese whose right of admission into this country was provided for in distinct articles of the treaty of 1880. That bill, as I understand it, and I think everybody understands it the same way, applied equally to Chinese laborers and to Chinese scholars and merchants coming into this country.

The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations offered a substitute, which was merely an extension of the laws now on the statute books without any amendment or improvement or alteration at all. Several amendments were passed upon here in the Senate, rather pro forma, however, but doubtless for the purpose of bringing the subjects before the conference committee. When the Senate passed the bill, it did not wait for the usual formula of sending it to the other House for the purpose of ascertaining what the other House would say about our amendments, but we immediately asked for a committee of conference. The other House acceded to that request, and the bill went at once to a committee of conference.

So in the other House there was no chance at all offered, nor did the Senate tender to the House any opportunity really, of debating those amendments which were brought into the Senate by various Senators, or of debating our propositions. The papers are here, and we are acting now regularly on the order of the Senate upon this conference report. That would not have been the case, however, if we had not insisted upon our amendments and asked for a conference in this body, which carried the subject before this committee of conference.

I felt authorized, therefore, as a member of that committee, to have a full and free conference upon the whole subject of the legislation upon the Chinese question as far as it has been suggested by amendments offered in the Senate to the substitute which we passed, and so far also as it was suggested in the bill which had passed the House, which we rejected because it had those repugnant points which constituted the real issue between the two Houses which the conference committee of the two Houses were required to act upon. So we acted upon the whole question. The House concurred in the action taken by the Senate with a very few verbal changes which the Senate committee themselves all, I believe, insisted upon, for the purpose of making the legislation as it now exists on this subject on the statute book a little more explicit, definite, and easy of understanding. Thereupon, the House brought forward several proposition. For what purpose? Not for the purpose of including Chinese scholars or merchants within the purview of our legislation at all, but for the purpose of making legislation with regard to Chinese laborers more specific and more beneficial to the people of the United States. This report now predicated upon that idea, adopting the Senate substitute with the amendments I have suggested, is in conformity with the existing treaty with China as far at least as the present law is in conformity with the existing treaty, and maintains a distinction between Chinese laborers and Chinese merchants and scholars in article 1 and article 2 of the treaty of 1880, and perhaps article 3.

Now, Mr. President, what is the state of the law as to the right of Chinese laborers to come into this country? That we have adopted again; we have acted exactly in concert with the view of the Senate upon that proposition; we have adopted all the existing law, and we have added something to it. The state of the law, as I understand it, is that a Chinese laborer may still come to the United States, but that, after having been here and gone away, when he wants to return to the United States he is prohibited. The act which amended the previous act on that subject, the Scott act, prohibited the issue of certificates authorizing the return. There can not be said to be anything in the treaty between the United States and China which permits the free ingress and egress of Chinese laborers to this country according to their will and pleasure. In that respect the Chinese laborer is discriminated against in the treaty itself. I will read now to show that I am correct about that.

Whenever in the opinion of the Government of the United States the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States or their residence therein affects or threatens to affect the interests of that country, or to endanger the good order of the said country or of any locality within the territory thereof, the Government of China agrees that the Government of the United States may regulate, limit, or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it. The limitation or suspension shall be reasonable, and shall apply only to Chinese who may go to the United States as laborers, other classes not being included in the limitations. Legislation taken in regard to Chinese laborers will be of such a character only as is necessary to enforce the regulation, limitation, or suspension of immigration, and immigrants shall not be subject to personal maltreatment or abuse.

That is one class. See how broad the powers are of the Government of the United States, with the consent of the Chinese Government expressly stated in article 1 of the treaty of 1880.

ARTICLE II.

Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants, or from curiosity, together with their body and household servants, and Chinese laborers who are now in the United States shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation.

The House of Representatives did not respect the second provision, but undertook to include all Chinamen within the same provision that applied to Chinese laborers. To that the Senate dissented, and the conference committee bring in a report here which establishes the vote of the Senate upon that proposition.

Now, as to what amounts to an absolute prohibition of the introduction of Chinese laborers into this country, of course the courts must pass upon the law which we enact, to say whether or not it is an absolute and perpetual prohibition in law that we may enact. We have not intended nor indeed have we enacted any law for the perpetual prohibition of the coming of Chinese laborers into this country, but we have enacted laws for the suspension of their coming, and, inasmuch as there is no definite time fixed in the treaty which shall be considered reasonable as the time for the suspension, our will on that subject has to be observed, and Congress has the right to express it, and has done so in laws that are now on the statute book. Now, then, how far may we go in this matter of suspension? We may go to the extent of prohibiting Chinese laborers from coming here if they "endanger the good order of the said country or of any locality within the territory thereof."

That is a question that Congress must settle, and it depends upon the character of the people who come here. If they endanger the good order of this country or of any particular locality thereof, and we have the right to judge of that. It does not depend upon whether our people are going to treat them well or treat them ill, or whether they have a prejudice against them or whether they have not, but if they have got a prejudice against them, this treaty does not propose to break it down by any means.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] mentioned Frenchmen and Englishmen as presenting a somewhat parallel case to the Chinamen. How can the Senator afford to make such a remark as that in regard to the parallelism between these races, when the treaty itself expressly puts it in our power to suspend their coming here for any time that we see proper, and puts it in our power to protect our country against them as a class—not as individuals merely, but as a class—because they may endanger the peace and good order of the country or any particular locality thereof?

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will allow me, my remark applied only to the third clause there, which expressly gives to these Chinese laborers the same rights, privileges, and immunities as citizens or subjects of the most favored nation. I spoke, therefore, of Englishmen and Frenchmen and the people of other countries as furnishing the guide of the immunities and privileges that were meant to be granted by this treaty to Chinamen.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Senator was never more mistaken in his life, if he was ever mistaken in his life at all—

Mr. SHERMAN. Often.

Mr. MORGAN. Than in the quotation of this treaty.

Mr. SHERMAN. Read the third paragraph.

Mr. MORGAN. I read the third article:

If Chinese laborers, or Chinese of any other class, now either permanently or temporarily residing in the territory of the United States, meet with ill treatment at the hands of any other persons, the Government of the United States will exert all its power to devise measures for their protection and to secure to them the same rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions as may be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, and to which they are entitled by treaty.

But what are they entitled to by the treaty?

ARTICLE II.

Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants, or from curiosity, together with their body and household servants, and Chinese laborers who are now in the United States shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights—

That is, the treaty rights given now—

all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation.

Now, the Chinese laborer has not any of that privilege at all. The Chinese laborer is excluded from that privilege by the express terms of this treaty. Of course, when he is here the Government engages that he shall be treated with ordinary humanity, as it engages that everybody else shall be treated with ordinary humanity, because this is not a barbarous government, and we confess that in this treaty, if a confession of it was necessary at all. But I maintain that upon the law of the United States as it stood on the day of the enactment by the Senate of this bill no alteration has been made except an alteration which makes the law a little more particular in its expression to remove some doubts about it.

Then the committee, having got on this basis, and being entirely in accord with the treaty and entirely in accord with the public policy as pronounced in our laws, went on to add some provisions to this bill for the purpose of enabling the Government of the United States, with less expense and with more certainty, to control the immigration of Chinese laborers into this country, because this statute we report here now, this act we propose that Congress shall adopt, is confined entirely in its operations to Chinese laborers. We have the right under article 1 of the treaty of 1880 to regulate, limit, or suspend the coming or residence of Chinese laborers in the United States, as, for instance, we could set apart for them, as we have for the Indians, a territory or reservation, where they should not break out to contaminate our people, if we chose to do it. We have as much power over them to colonize them in reservations as we have over the Indians. Perhaps we can not force them on any particular State of the American Union against its consent, but wherever Congress has exclusive jurisdiction it may limit and regulate not merely the coming but the residence of the Chinese.

The Chinese are now here to about the number of 200,000. That is just about the number of our Indian population. The Indians have been here for ages. They were the owners of this country in its primeval state; they have been savages, though they are now taking on the habiliments of civilization with wonderful rapidity and grace and success. We deal with them, though they were the original sovereign lords of this country, sometimes as prisoners of war, but always as prisoners, confining them to their reservations, prohibiting the white people from trading with them, regulating their contracts, preventing them from leaving their reservations, and when they have escaped from the reservations we send our bodies of troops after them to capture them by military force and take them back—an act of war really, done by the military.

We treat them according to the exigencies of the situation for the purpose of maintaining the peace and good order of this country and for the purpose, as far as we can, of benefiting these Indians by civilization; but when the Chinaman comes here he is not as good a man as the Indian; he never was, and never can be; he has not got it in him. We reserve to ourselves the right by treaty to deal with him, as we do not have the right and never had the right and have never pretended to assert the right in respect to any other people in the world. Our powers guaranteed by the treaty with China with their express consent are very peculiar and very broad. The fact is that they are discretionary, within the limits of this sphere where we may properly act in respect of them.

Now, we say to these Chinamen who have come over here, "We can not distinguish between you and another Chinaman that came in yesterday from the British Possessions or from Mexico; we have no means of identifying you; we find, after long experience and patient effort that you are positively not to be relied upon when testifying upon the stand in court." It is too great a challenge upon human credulity to require any judge or magistrate to believe what a Chinaman swears in the interest of himself or another Chinaman. That is the experience of our people. Is that to be set aside in legislating in regard to them? Are we to say that, after all, a man should be allowed to testify and he ought to be believed? We do not say that he shall not testify in his own behalf and he shall not have Chinese witnesses, but that he shall have one person of another race known to us to identify him, and, if he has been here in accordance with the treaty and has not come in surreptitiously from the British Possessions or from Mexico or from any other part of the world, he can always have his witness. There is no trouble about that at all.

Now, then, in regard to the ticket of leave that the Senator from Ohio seems to be so sensitive about, that a man in the United States shall go about with a ticket of leave in his pocket—Why, when the Indian chiefs come down here to consult with the Government they first have to get leave from the Department of the Interior to come and consult with the Government of the United States or to see the President, the Great Father. This Indian baby is not allowed to see his Great Father unless he has got leave obtained beforehand, and he may be pursued as a renegade from his reservation if he dares to come here even to exercise the sacred right of petition to his Great Father. The Indian does not feel ashamed to have that permission. The Chinaman need not feel ashamed to have that permission.

Why, in China, Mr. President, a man has to take out a license to beg. He gets it from the Imperial Government, and begging is done in China by certain families and certain classes of people who regard it as a very important privilege, and no other man is allowed to beg except one who has got a license to beg. The Chinaman gets a ticket of leave to beg in China. Is he going to be disgraced in the United States by having a ticket of leave which identifies him as a man who is entitled to the benefits and privileges of this treaty and of enjoying the blessings of this great country, even in the moderate degree which a Chinaman can enjoy them? I do not see anything in that which is sentimental in the proper sense of the word. I think it is a misapplication of sentiment by the Senator from Ohio.

No, sir; as the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] well remarked, there can not be a better protection for an honest Chinaman—if there are such, and I suppose there are—for a Chinese laborer in the United States than to have had himself identified by the proper judicial functionary or other functionary described in this bill as a man who had come here in pursuance of the treaty, and was entitled to remain here. When he has that he can go from Alabama to Maine or from Florida to the State of Washington without the fear of being interrupted by anybody, because when he holds that paper no private individual can arrest him or make complaint against him. He can only be arrested, after he gets that paper, by the action of some qualified Government officer. That is a very great privilege and benefit, and a great security to a Chinaman. He is not liable to be called in question in every county or every State he may choose to visit after he gets to the United States. It gives him a large liberty of circulation, and a cheap one. Being a cheap coin he circulates freely, I believe, but not exactly to the exclusion of everybody else.

What is there in that which ought to lead us to reject this proposition of the House? The House said, "unless you make a provision of law of this kind we can not keep the Chinaman out; you may station upon the frontier of the British Possessions and Mexico more men than we can afford to pay, and yet the Chinese will evade them and come in here, and after they have got in here, you might as well undertake to identify the first grasshopper that jumps over the Kansas line in the West as a Chinaman." You can not do it. We have tried photographs, certificates, descriptions, and all manner of things, but we can not do it.

There must be something done now to eliminate from the body of the Chinese who are here those who have a right to remain and those who have not, and send those who have not the right to remain under our existing laws, not changed at all, back to China. That is considered by some as a very great hardship. I do not know why a man should object to being sent home, unless he wants to be sent somewhere else. If you send them to the British Possessions they will charge $50 head-money for every one sent there. If you send them to Mexico they will not stay there. The climate is so rarified upon the great table plains of Mexico that the Chinaman can not work there, and the coast lands are so little cultivated or so little improved that there is very little for the Chinaman to do, and Mexico is not a favorite country for them to resort to; otherwise they would find employment and stay there, and would not come here.

So, our legislation in regard to the Chinaman is not very peculiar after all. He is a peculiar sort of man. The Hawaiian Government prohibits him from going there amongst the aborigines. A man can not go from China, and now from Japan, unless he comes by the command of the Hawaiian Government, and the Hawaiian Government ascertains how much labor is necessary to be performed and sends to its consul a list of the subscribers to the roll of laborers that are required, and says to him "Go and get so many and send them here to us." They are brought to the Hawaiian Government and they are inspected, and when inspected and found to be all right, not to have the leprosy or some other thing of that sort, they are doled out amongst the subscribers to this roll as laborers, and allowed to stay so many years.

Every single one of the Polynesian group of islands and all the Australian system exclude Chinese absolutely, excepting the Fiji Islands—I do not know whether they want to eat them down there or not. The people of the great southern Pacific commonwealths, as we may call them, have laws that forbid the Chinese to come in. The people in the British possessions permit them to come there, because, when they get tired of them, Great Britain does not halt much about a matter of that kind, but she treats them like she does the Hindoos, or these black people in an island down there virtually under her jurisdiction, harnesses them up and sends them off to some other place. Great Britain makes a tremendous splutter and outburst against slavery and the slave trade, and yet practices it every day in the year in one form or another. Great Britain was at the foundation of the coolie importation that distressed our people so that we had to enact statutes against their coming here before we ever had a treaty with China on that subject at all.

Now, I ask what harm have we done, what new impediment have we imposed upon the Chinaman in regard to his coming here? None at all. We say simply that a roll shall be made, each man shall be described on that roll, a certificate shall be given to him, and he shall have a year within which to obtain it, and then we provide that the Secretary of the Treasury shall make regulations so as to make the registration of these Chinamen, their reenrolment, and certificates to be given to them. That is a matter of convenience. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] said sometimes it was 500 miles from some points in his State to where an internal-revenue collector could be found.

The same holds good with regard to the district courts, perhaps. I know it does. But a Chinaman who has come 20,000 miles to get a foothold in the United States need not complain much about having a year within which to go 500 miles to get his certificate. Then the Secretary of the Treasury must make regulations to make it convenient for the Chinaman to do it. He must sign the certificate. Why so? If you did not require the collector of internal revenue, some responsible man, to sign these certificates, and make a register of them in his office, you should find that deputy marshals and deputy collectors, and the like, would be selling them from $50 to $100 apiece to Chinamen all over the country. That regulation was put in to protect the Chinaman and ourselves against the abuse of the law.

Why did we require the Secretary of the Treasury to make regulations? So that it shall be conveniently done and the application shall be conveniently made; and whenever that application results in a certificate it must be signed by the collector of internal revenue. Then we have a responsible man to account to us for what he has been doing, and no other certificate will do. I concur fully with the Senator from Oregon that it is a provision in favor of the Chinaman which confirms and settles and fixes his right in a definite way, so that nobody is going to dispute it afterwards.

Now, we found this state of affairs in the committee—

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Senator leaves this question, I will state frankly one matter that troubles me respecting this particular provision. Must not the Chinaman affirmatively show before the collector of internal revenue that he was in the United States at the time these several laws were passed, and is not that a judicial function?

Mr. MORGAN. We could not conveniently change that without going back and recasting the statutes upon the book having made provision for that, but we thought, inasmuch as there had been various judicial decisions upon this question, we had better let it stand just at that, that we would not undertake to recast the statutes, and we could not and did not do it without providing for cases of an exceptional character.

There is more than that in this matter. We are trying to prevent four or five thousand Chinamen from landing in four or five days, who are hovering about and trying to break in like the boomers. We do not want to have the Pacific coast boomed by Chinamen, and we have left the matter in such form as that Congress can go on with deliberation and improve these laws. That committee could not undertake to do what the Senate had declined to do, formulate entirely a new system of laws upon this question.

That was one of the very points we had in the Committee on Foreign Relations, that we had legislated and there had been a judicial ascertainment of the rights of the Chinese and the Government upon the statutes as they stand, and therefore we would not undertake, as the House undertook, to make an entirely new system, de novo, but that we would take the system as it stood and we would adopt it to that extent—the Senate said for ten years and the House Committee insisted, as I was about to state, that the system was a failure, that there were thousands of cases, perhaps running up to the tens of thousands of cases, where Chinese had been questioned as to their right to land in the United States and where bail had been taken by the judges or magistrates in advance of the hearing of the question of the right, and that the dockets became so choked as that they could not handle the question at all. The bail given was straw bail, for it might be Chinese or not, and the law proved ineffectual for the want of certain provisions regulating the conduct of the judiciary.

We took the ground, and it is ground that holds good throughout the United States and England, that upon the doctrine of habeas corpus, that is to say, the writ issues to the man who has the custody of the party petitioning, and he remains the custodian, bringing the body of the man before the court to answer to the accusation, and he remains the custodian unless the court sees proper to change it. Acting upon that now, we say this: The court shall not change the custody of the Chinaman on board his ship so as to make it necessary under our system of jurisprudence to admit the man to bail pending the investigation. We prohibit that. We leave the man exactly where he was when he arrived within the waters, we will say, of San Francisco Bay, and had never put his foot upon land. His right has been questioned in San Francisco by the collector of customs or some one else, and the collector of customs says: "I can not permit you to land here; I will not permit you to land upon this coast at all." Thereupon the Chinaman sues out a writ of habeas corpus.

What does he say? Not that he is in the custody of the United States, but that he is in the custody of the captain of that ship, and must be obedient to his order. The writ, therefore, runs to the captain of the ship, "Bring your man here and let us see whether he is entitled to land or not under the laws of the United States." When he comes before the magistrate he asks for bail, and the magistrate says, "No, I shall not admit you to bail at all; I shall not change your custody; go back to your ship; you are not suffering any; you are as well off as you were on the voyage; go back and remain there until we can decide this question." There is nothing unlawful, nothing uncommon, nothing strange or unusual about that proceeding. That is exactly in conformity to the practice of the common law in England and in this country.

But what effect does it have upon the captain of the ship before he loads up his ship on a speculative voyage? There being thousands of Chinamen ready to rush in over our borders, he will be very careful to know whether he has got them on board his ship, and when he gets in the bay of San Francisco, if he is not permitted to land them he has a very large contract on his hands to take care of them. There is no provision in this bill that will have so direct and excellent an effect upon Chinese illegal immigration as that. It meets the evil so far as that is concerned.

That having been met, then we have the only other difficulty as to Chinamen coming in, not on the ship where we can stop them, but breaking over the line of Mexico or British Columbia. That we provide for in the certificate.

The question is raised here whether we do not put a criminal attitude upon a Chinaman the moment he undertakes to land in the United States and compel him to move out of it. Yes, we do. The treaty does that when the treaty limits his right to come here, and does not give him the full right and privilege of landing on our shores. He comes claiming a privilege, but not having it under the treaty absolutely, and he must show that he falls within the meaning of the treaty and of those laws that we have passed to carry the treaty into execution.

In doing that the onus of proof is always upon him, and that is all that we require of him now when he is found here, having come in some way or other, we do not know how or when or where. We say to him, "Establish your right to be here at the time of the passage of this act, and, if need be, and if the courts so hold, at the time of the passage of a former act—the Scott law—establish your right to be here according to the judgment of the court, but you must establish that." It is not for the Government to show that he has come here improperly, for, if the Government had that duty imposed upon it we never should be able to discharge it with any justice or equity.

Mr. ALLISON. Does he not need to establish that before the collector of internal revenue if the collector of internal revenue says he is not here properly?

Mr. MORGAN. Well, we can confer quasi judicial powers upon any executive officer who has it in charge to execute a treaty with foreign people. It is not a question of the application of our laws to a crime defined in our statutes, for the coming here of a Chinaman is not a crime within the meaning of our statutes. It is a prohibition upon his coming, and we have a perfect right to confide the decision of that question to an executive officer as well as to a judicial officer.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask what trouble there would be practically in committing that duty to a United States commissioner or to a district judge even?

Mr. MORGAN. The difficulty in that case would be this: A United States commissioner of course has no such jurisdiction.

Mr. GRAY. We can confer it upon him.

Mr. MORGAN. We can confer it upon him, and if we did it would be as a judicial officer, and he would have to exercise his jurisdiction in a judicial way. The Chinamen under our Constitution would have the right to come in and demand a trial by jury, and we should never get through.

This is not, Mr. President, the execution of any feature of our system of jurisprudence. It is a mere feature of our system of political relations with foreign countries. That is all. I want to keep it within that purview; because I do not want the Chinaman to come here and claim the benefit of the Constitution of the United States, indictment by grand jury, trial by jury and all that. I do not want that, and I have no doubt at all about our right to do it.

We have the right to entrust this power of excluding them to the collector of customs at the port of San Francisco or to any collector of internal revenue or any person upon whom we choose to confer this authority and who belongs to the executive branch of the Government, for he is merely executing the law after all. He may have to decide what a man's rights are under it, but that is a political question, and always was and always will be as between us and people who are seeking our shores.

Mr. President, it is about time that the people of the United States had begun to understand this matter, for there is an influx of population into this country from other quarters that we have got to handle, and we can not help it. We already exclude diseased people, criminal classes, paupers, and the like. When they come to our shores we do not wait to have a man tried by jury here to see whether or not he is diseased, or whether he is a criminal, or a pauper. We give to the Commissioner of Immigration the right to say, "Go back home on that ship." We have absolutely, unequivocally, and unappealably the right to do that, and we are obliged to do it.

As to these foreign immigrants, or intruders, if you please to call them such—and I do—if we are to come down to extending to them all the rights, privileges, and benefits of American citizenship we may do very wrong.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator whether, under the terms of the conference of power upon the United States Commissioner, it would necessarily involve the right to a Chinaman of trial by jury?

Mr. MORGAN. Well, if we make his coming here a criminal offense and withhold a certificate, as we did once in the case of a lawyer in Missouri and one in Arkansas, and punish him in that way, without giving him the right of trial by jury, we deny to him a privilege guaranteed under our Constitution to every human being, provided he is in a shape to avail himself of it.

Mr. GRAY. We do not bring him before a commissioner charged with an offense, but to ascertain what his status is under the treaty and under the laws of the United States, precisely—if the Senator will pardon me for a moment—as we confer upon judges of the United States district courts and other courts, the right to grant naturalization to an alien.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I have had an experience with United States commissioners which satisfies me that they ought not to be intrusted with high judicial powers. I could take the Senator's mind back over the records of my own State that would show him that the man who is least to be trusted of any United States official is a commissioner of the United States circuit court.

Taking now the facts of the case as proving what I say, I do not find in United States commissioners any particular guaranty of fidelity either in the method of their appointment or anything else connected with the administration of the laws of the United States. They are, I think, a sort of abnormal class, and it would have been very much better if the Government of the United States never had one, but had allowed the local justices of the peace in the different States to do what they have done many times with the sanction of the Supreme Court of the United States—take into consideration offenses and offenders against the laws of the United States. They are a class of officials appointed by the circuit judges, who very often do not know anything about the men they appoint, who go wandering over the country collecting fees from the people and making cases.

There have been ten thousand cases made in Alabama for the mere sake of getting the Committee on Appropriations here or the Department of the Treasury to make allowances to them. Millions of dollars have been taken from the country by these people, and I am not in favor of it. I would not depart from the method prescribed in this bill for the mere sake of getting the case within the jurisdiction of a United States commissioner. I might as well say any other class you may mention, but not for them.

We have got just as good a set of officers in the internal-revenue service as we can get, but those officers have not any judicial power. Applications may be made to this class of officers, but the collector has to pass upon them.

I think this is a good bill. I think it a very much better bill than we passed through the Senate. No harsh hand is laid upon the Chinese in what the House is contending for. Why do we have it to do? Because the House has resolved that there must be some relief.

While back I was a little doubtful whether or not, after all, the people of the Pacific coast wanted as much relief as they have been claiming here. But my doubts are all removed. As a Southern man I could see why they did not want these Chinese. We have had troubles with a foreign race in my own State, God knows. I may not be able to outlive it, nor my great-grandchildren perhaps. I do not want to see the country involved in strife with a nation with which we can not mingle on a plane of social equality. I want to keep the Chinese out of the country, and the more I have heard from the members of the House of Representatives and Senators from the Pacific coast the better have I been convinced that we ought to do something, and do all we can with a decent respect for the treaty obligations we have with China, to keep these people in check, to control them.

We are not responsible for the morals of the Chinamen who come here, or for their manners, or for anything connected with them. They come here in such shape that we have to deal with them by laws that would not be applicable to our own people—laws that are very similar to those which are applied to the Indian people of this country.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I find it impossible to come to any other conclusion than that the provision under discussion here is in direct conflict with our treaty obligations to China, and therefore, however much I may desire to go with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] in securing proper legislation that will restrain or diminish the evil we all admit, it seems to me it is so plain a path through the modifications of our treaty to accomplish more efficiently the end we all have in view, that I can not myself vote for this report.

When we impose a duty upon a Chinaman here that we impose upon no other foreigner here, when we do not treat him as we do other foreigners, and when we attach to the nonperformance of a duty a penalty, and require him to depart from the country unless he performs that duty which we attach to no other foreigner, I do not see how anybody can say that we suffer him to come and go of his own free will.

Mr. MORGAN. He has not that right under the treaty either as a scholar or as a merchant.

Mr. DAWES. The language of the treaty is in these words:

ARTICLE II.

Chinese subjects, whether proceeding to the United States as teachers, students, merchants, or from curiosity, together with their body and household servants, and Chinese laborers who are now in the United States, shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation.

Mr. MORGAN. That is after they come in here.

Mr. DAWES. It seems to me that when we subject citizens of another nation to carrying about in their pockets certificates and descriptions or tags that shall contain their names and a description of their persons, very much as we in Massachusetts place tags upon some animals, we violate this provision that exempts everybody else from that indignity, if you may call it such. And when we attach a provision that if they do not do that they shall be sent out of the country I am quite sure they do not come and go freely. That is my objection to this provision.

I see the need of a remedy in this respect. I believe that the State Department and the Chinese representatives can sit down in a moment and relieve us of any unnecessary obligation to treat these men just as we do others. But we are bound to treat them, as I understand, just as we treat other citizens and subjects of foreign nations; and I always contend that we are just as much bound to our hurt as to our advantage.

I do not desire to debate this question in the Senate, but I think the yeas and nays should be taken, and I move that they be ordered on this question.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I want to say a word in reply to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. I make that motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts demands the yeas and nays, and unless objection be made they will be ordered.

Mr. VEST. We have no laws upon our statute books applying to immigrants that are domiciled in the United States such as apply to the Chinese. In our legislation we have always treated people as sui generis, and I am not troubled with the argument made here in regard to the violation of treaties. The Government of China recognizes the fact that there is a necessity for precaution on the part of the people of the United States.

I had occasion when this bill was pending in the Senate to allude to a communication in the North American Review from our late minister to China, Mr. Young, and I see that he has supplemented it since with another communication in the same periodical, in which he asserts that the Chinese Government had no sort of argument to make against the people of the United States taking care of themselves against the enormous population of that country which threatens to flood our shores, and that all that the Government of China requires is that the Chinese shall be treated respectfully in that legislation, that they shall be consulted in regard to it; but they recognize the danger, and it has already come, not from the Government of China, but as my friend in front of me has said, by the greed and avarice of English merchants who organize companies for the purpose of making money out of the transportation of these people to the United States.

No such state of things has ever existed in regard to any other people as between those of the United States and China. I happen—and it is very pertinent in this discussion—to find on my table a copy of this morning's New York World which contains an exemplification of the feeling of these people in regard to coming to the United States and the danger that threatens the people of the Pacific coast. Here is the article, headed "Two off-smuggled Chinamen." The article is illustrated by their photographs, and one of them is named Chu Ah Lin, and the other is named Chu Lin. The article goes on to say that upon being arrested by the police they had with them their $50 certificates for going into Canada, but they persisted in coming back into this country, and this was their second arrest. One part of the article is quite amusing and very significant. The inspector who made the arrest says:

We had an amusing case of the same kind at Buffalo a few months ago. We caught a Chinaman who had been smuggled in, and put him on the ferry-boat that plies between Buffalo and Fort Erie, Canada. He had no head-tax certificate, and claimed that he had no money. When he got to the Canadian shore the authorities told him he could not land until he gave up $50. He was ferried back to the American shore, and the authorities there would not let him land. He traveled back and forth across the river all day long. By night he was sick of it and produced $50 from a belt around his waist and turned himself loose on Canada.

That is the sort of population that comes here from abroad, people that come here without a single sympathy with the American people or with the objects of our Government, and who persist, in the face of all the legislation that we can enact, in forcing themselves unlawfully into our community.

I have no disposition to violate treaties, Mr. President, but I believe that self-preservation is the first law of nations as well as of individuals, and I believe the evidence to be overwhelming that, unless some such legislation as is now pending before us, and even more stringent, shall be enacted, we shall witness in this country an inundation of these people so enormous and so terrible that legislation at last may be too late.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I simply want to present another picture in contrast to the one given by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] from the newspaper.

I stopped at Rock Springs one day for a few hours to visit the mines. After the visit at the mines I went down into the lower part of the town. There I found that there were a few Chinamen, about a hundred—peaceable, quiet, well behaved, cleanly people. I found there were two companies of United States infantry stationed there. The fact that there were two companies of infantry stationed at Rock Springs, hardly a town in itself, excited my curiosity, and I made inquiry of the captain or the major in command. He said that it was necessary to keep those troops there to protect the lives of those quiet, unoffending Chinamen from a horde of unnaturalized Poles and Hungarians who worked in the mines.

Mr. DAWES. And Finns.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, when this matter was under discussion before in the Senate I gave my reasons why I could not vote for the bill as it was then presented to the Senate, because it was admitted that the Scott exclusion act, as it is called, was a violation of the treaty, because we were taunted with having voted for that act when it was a violation of the treaty, and because I did not wish by extending the provisions of that act for another ten years to violate the treaty again. That would be conclusive upon me as to what vote I should cast upon the report of this conference committee. But there are other things in the report of the conference committee which I think would induce me to vote against it even if the original objection to the act were not sufficient.

I think that section 6 means practically that all Chinamen in the United States must leave within a year or be imprisoned, and after that time sent back to China by the authorities of the United States. It does indeed provide for certificates for Chinese laborers, and we are told by the committee that that is for their benefit and their protection. But who can get one of these certificates? How many certificates are likely to be granted under this act? In the first place, it says:

And it shall be the duty of all Chinese laborers within the limits of the United States, at the time of the passage of this act, and who are entitled to remain in the United States, to apply to the collector of internal revenue of their respective districts, within one year after the passage of this act, for a certificate of residence.

So that no Chinese laborer can obtain from the collector of internal revenue in his district a certificate of residence unless he is entitled to remain in the United States; and as laws have been in force since 1882 making it unlawful for Chinese laborers to come to the United States, it follows that no one is entitled to this certificate unless he has been in the United States prior to 1882; and the burden of proof in all these cases rests upon him. So when a Chinese laborer goes for a certificate of residence to the collector of internal revenue, he must prove to the satisfaction of the collector of internal revenue that he was in the United States prior to 1882. That will be very difficult to prove.

If the person who wants the certificate is in Connecticut or Ohio, his proof that he was in the United States prior to 1882 will probably be in the State of California. It will be practically impossible for most persons entitled to remain here to prove that they are so entitled to remain here, because it will be practically impossible for them to get evidence which will show that they were here prior to 1882.

So section 5—and the Senate ought to understand it—means that practically all the Chinamen within the United States must leave within a year; that if they fail to do so, they are to be imprisoned by the court before whom they are taken, and then sent out of the country at the expense of the United States.

I think that is a very great injustice to those who are entitled to remain here. I do not know how many there are, but very few, probably, compared with the whole number. But it has no reference to what their condition is here; what their condition as to family or property is. Unless they can prove by evidence satisfactory to the collector of internal revenue that they came here before 1882 and, having departed, only came back according to law, they have got to leave their possessions, leave their property, and if they have families—and some of them have—they will have to leave their families within a year. It amounts practically to an assertion that all the Chinamen must depart within a year. I do not think that is necessary, Mr. President.

I am ready to go to all lengths that I believe are necessary to prevent undue immigration of Chinese laborers and to have those who are in the country go out of it as occasion may require, and thus finally determine practically the residence of Chinese laborers in this country. But, as I said when this matter was before the Senate on a former occasion, I do not think this is necessary. I believe that the number of Chinese laborers in this country is being steadily diminished from year to year. I have no doubt about it. The records of the Census Office show it, and all this talk of their coming over the borders—and I have no doubt they are—does not answer the argument derived from the census reports that more are going back to China than are coming in from China. It is not right to frame laws which are harsh and unjust, and, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] has shown, violative of treaty obligations, for the purpose of ridding ourselves at no distant day of this evil.

Mr. DOLPH. The yeas and nays having been ordered, I move a call of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Dolph,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Bate,	Felton,	Morgan,	Sherman,
Berry,	Frye,	Morrill,	Shoup,
Call,	George,	Palmer,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Gray,	Peffer,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,	Stockbridge,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Platt,	Turpie,
Coke,	Higgins,	Power,	Vest,
Colquitt,	Hiscock,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Cullom,	Jones, Ark.	Quay,	Warren,
Dawes,	Kyle,	Ransom,	Wilson.
Dixon,	Manderson,	Sanders,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-seven Senators having responded to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I wish to put myself upon record as opposed, not only to this report of the committee of conference, but to the principles upon which this bill in its original shape is founded.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] has furnished a conclusive argument to show that there is no necessity for this legislation, either to limit, restrict, or prevent the migration of Chinese here. If it be true that the Government of China is opposed to the emigration of those people from its borders, what remains but to have a treaty with China absolutely prohibiting all kinds of Chinese coming here and fixing the details of the methods by which they shall be excluded or punished if they come? That is certainly true if the Chinese Government are opposed to their coming here.

But I have another objection. There can be no question that this new bill is in absolute violation of rights of the Chinese who are here under the former treaty. There is no doubt that the judicial power of the United States by the Constitution is extended to every Chinaman who is here under the protection of that treaty. Now, for an act of Congress to say that Chinamen shall not have that protection according to the terms of that treaty, is beyond the power of Congress in my judgment. To say that an alien who comes here and claims the right to come under any treaty, whether he possesses it or not, shall be denied bail when taken before a United States court for the purpose of investigating that question, is unquestionably an act of barbarous legislation in respect to the people of any country whatever.

If it be necessary, why not make a treaty with China that any of her people who come here claiming the protection of our laws and the obligations of a treaty, shall be placed in prison and held in arrest pending a judicial inquiry before the proper constitutional tribunal as to their right to admission here?

These are some of my reasons for opposing this legislation. I believe that the people of China have a place in the world, in its civilization, and in its future progress. I believe their labor might be utilized in the construction of the great transcontinental lines of railroad that are soon to be built on this hemisphere. I believe that the system which has been alluded to here as obtaining in the Hawaiian Islands might be introduced with propriety here in order to prevent any competition between Chinese labor and American. What is to prevent us by treaty with China from doing what the Hawaiian Islands do when there is a necessity for that kind of labor here?

Mr. President, I think that this legislation is ill-advised and unnecessary, and that it is greatly detrimental to the interests of all that section of the country which is known as the cotton-producing region. I believe this legislation to-day will involve the loss of hundreds of millions of dollars to the already ruined cotton interests of the South.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll will be called.

Mr. PALMER. What is the question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the report of the conference committee.

Mr. PALMER. Before I am called upon to vote I should like to be allowed to say a few words.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There has been no response to the roll call, and the Senator from Illinois is in order.

Mr. PALMER. I should like to be allowed to state the reasons why I can not vote in favor of the adoption of the report of the committee. One reason has been presented by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], and that is that the bill provides that a Chinaman arrested and taken before a court shall not be admitted to bail. If it were absolutely certain that the Chinaman's case could be disposed of within a few hours, that might not strike me so offensively; but how long the delay may be we do not know.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. PALMER. Yes.

Mr. DOLPH. I think the Senator from Illinois is in error in supposing that a Chinaman is arrested and carried before a magistrate. That is not the case. I never knew in any practice that I have been familiar with where a writ of habeas corpus was allowed in such a case. The party is either kept in custody himself, or remanded to the place from which he came, until the case is decided. It is only in cases where the Chinaman before he comes into this country applies for a writ of habeas corpus.

Mr. PALMER. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Oregon, because his explanation seems not to be consistent with the language of the report. If I had been left to judge of its meaning without the explanation of the Senator from Oregon, my opinion would be as it was before I heard his explanation. Still, there may be some doubt about that. This is the language of section 5:

That after the passage of this act, on an application to any judge or court of the United States in the first instance for a writ of habeas corpus by a Chinese person seeking to land in the United States, to whom that privilege has been denied, no bail shall be allowed, and such application shall be heard and determined promptly, without unnecessary delay.

I supposed that there were two classes, at least, of Chinamen embraced in this language: Chinamen passing from the country and seeking to return and having a right to return, and the other class would be those coming into the country for the first time. I had supposed that this provision applied to both those classes—to Chinamen who had the right to come back and whose right was undisputed, and to Chinamen who had no right to come back. It occurred to me that in such cases it was excessively hard that a man should not be allowed to come or remain, for in any event it is a mere misdemeanor. Certainly the time will never arrive when to come into the United States will be regarded as a felony per se. To refuse permission to come here to one who offers adequate and sufficient bail, and who can remain personally, taking all the chances of an immediate or a remote hearing, seems to me unnecessarily harsh. It is not consistent with what I understand to be one of the fundamental principles of justice that exists in China, America, and everywhere where God reigns.

The next objection I have to the bill is found in this clause:

And it shall be the duty of all Chinese laborers within the limits of the United States, at the time of the passage of this act, and who are entitled to remain in the United States, to apply to the collector of internal revenue of their respective district, within one year after the passage of this act, for a certificate of residence, and any Chinese laborer within the limits of the United States who shall neglect, fail, or refuse to comply with the provisions of this act, or who, after one year from the passage hereof, shall be found within the jurisdiction of the United States without such certificate of residence, shall be deemed and adjudged to be unlawfully within the United States, and may be arrested by any United States customs official, collector of internal revenue or his deputies, United States marshal or his deputies, and taken before a United States judge.

I had supposed that the principle which requires that no man shall be arrested except upon an affidavit or indictment charging guilt or probable cause was a principle of universal justice. I had never imagined a time would come in this country when our condition would render it necessary to place it within the discretion, the absolute discretion, of that horde of officers, more or less, all or any of them, to arrest any human being. I am not talking about citizens; I am talking about men—arresting them without execution, without charge, without responsibility. Why, sir, think of it for a moment! A man is in the country—a Chinaman, it is true—and any one of these numerous classes of officers may, without warrant, proceed to take him by the collar and take him before some judicial officer, and then the burden of proof is thrown upon him; and then the act merely provides that if he shall show, the burden being upon him, that some accident had happened and that he could not obtain his certificate, if he pays the costs, he may be discharged.

Mr. President, is there any necessity for thus violating sound principles? If the act provided that any person or officer might, by making an affidavit before a judicial officer, cause a warrant to be issued for the arrest of this man—I emphasize the word "man," because these are natural rights, that a man shall not be imprisoned without probable cause, to be determined by certain judicial persons—it might not be so objectionable. But there can be no necessity, I think, for the violation of these sound principles.

I have listened with a great deal of interest to the old story of these gentlemen from the Pacific coast. I sympathize with them, and I will do anything to help them except to do that which I believe to be essentially wrong and unjust.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. President, I shall not offer a word on this subject, except to say that I have no sympathy with the argument that is made here that the law, as it is administered and applied to criminals in our own country under the guarantees of our Constitution, is not good enough for the Chinese here. As I understand the treaty between this Government and the Chinese Government we may suspend absolutely the immigration of Chinese laborers to this country.

It is accepted as the policy of both governments that that may be done. I suppose that fundamentally we have the right—and I call the attention of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] to that fact—we have the right to make precisely the same laws, establish the same rules and regulations in respect to the immigration of foreigners that we have in respect to the importation of foreign manufactured goods, and we do not put them under our criminal laws. We have the right to establish those regulations which will absolutely prohibit their landing here, and if they escape those regulations we have the right to make a seizure, as we would in the case of smuggled goods.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator from New York will allow me, I should like to know if the Senator means to assert that we have the same power over a human being coming to this country that we have over inanimate things that may be imported? Is that the theory?

Mr. HISCOCK. I make that assertion.

Mr. PALMER. That we might destroy—

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, no; not to the point of destruction. I confine myself to the laws of humanity. But they may be equally stringent. I am not talking about destroying people or anything of the kind. There is such a thing, of course, in arguing any question as making an illustration that is absurd—the argumentum ad absurdum.

We have legislated upon that line in our immigration laws in respect to the return of thieves, of vagrants, of paupers, people who come here under contract in respect to their labor. Such cases are covered by restrictions or covered by provisions of statutes equally severe with these, and we had the fundamental and constitutional right to enact those laws.

Now, sir, I would not, I think, argue in favor of going to that extreme, so far as this great nation is concerned, except that by treaty obligation it is the recognized policy of the two nations that we should. We have insisted upon the right to do it; China has conceded that we may do it, and, in my judgment, under the provisions of this bill the importation of Chinese laborers will cease.

But I do not believe that it is good policy to enact a system of laws that will invite attempts at the evasion of those laws. I think that is unwise. I have been opposed to any bill or law which should encroach upon the reservation or guarantees of the treaty in respect to those who might come here. But in respect to the people that China said we might prohibit landing upon our shores, conceded that we might do it, entered into a solemn convention that we might do it—in respect to these people I am in favor of passing laws which will not be barbarous, which will not permit us to seize and kill them—oh, no, but within the laws of civilized nations, in respect to their humanity, preserving their life, their health, and all that, within the principle that is adopted by civilized people, in respect to reserving the rights of those who violate law, to adopt legislation that will prohibit them coming here during that period of time for which we propose to suspend their coming to this country.

To me, sir, it does not seem quite the thing to provide that a

Chinese laborer coming here is either to be indicted or to be subjected to a long investigation, to give bail and to have thrown around him those provisions of law which from their very cumbersomeness involve in their execution an invitation to attempt to evade the law and violate its provisions. So far as the Chinese laborers who are here are concerned I am in favor of there being an investigation in reference to each particular case that will develop the fact whether he is here lawfully or not. But I do not believe that it is necessary that we should construct a law upon that palladium of our liberties, the grand jury, or the right to bail, or any of the provisions which have been accustomed to be enacted in respect to criminals, either in regard to delay or punishment, and as sometimes the people think to defeat it, inviting, as it often does, summary punishment at the hands of the people.

I do not believe any provision of that kind is necessary in this case. We should provide for the maintenance of their liberties, their health, and their condition as when they landed here. We should make provisions that are as summary as in respect to smuggled goods, but equally effective in searching and bringing out the truth. I am unwilling, for one, to recognize the principle that they are under the provisions of our Constitution in respect to their rights of trial. We took a step in the right direction, in my judgment, when we passed the immigration law, and the power with which the Treasury Department was vested there is a far more severe and far more effective one than is contained in the provisions of the report of the conference committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll will be called on concurring in the report of the conference committee.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR]. If he were present I should vote "nay," but as he is absent I will withhold my vote unless some arrangement for a transfer of pairs can be made later on.

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER].

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CAMERON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. COKE (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK]. If he has not voted I desire to withdraw my vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. COKE. Then I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to inquire if the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] is recorded as voting.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He is not.

Mr. HARRIS. I am paired with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. BERLEY. I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

Mr. CALL (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], but I understood from him that he would vote "nay" on this question. With that understanding I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to suggest to Senators that if we are to get a quorum on this vote there will have to be some transfers of pairs. I think if that be done we can get a quorum. Many Senators appear to be paired.

Mr. CALL. Unless Senators on the other side of the Chamber know that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] would vote in the affirmative on this question, I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. PASCO. I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CASEY]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. CASEY] is absent, owing to illness.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. CAREY] is absent and is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY].

Mr. GALLINGER. I will inquire if the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] has voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] and withhold my vote.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I believe he has not voted upon this call. Am I right?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. MANDERSON. I therefore withhold my vote. My colleague [Mr. PADDOCK] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber to-day, and is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE].

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR]. If convenient to the Senator from Alabama we will allow the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to stand paired, and we will vote.

Mr. PUGH. That is agreeable.

Mr. PLATT. I vote "nay."

Mr. PUGH. I vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT. That would hardly do.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Connecticut wants to make a pair with a gentleman on the other side, I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I am willing to transfer pairs with him, and I will vote "yea," to suit him.

Mr. PLATT. I will make that transfer.

Mr. HARRIS. I vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE. I am advised that my pair would vote "yea" on this question, and I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I suggest that the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], with whom I am paired, may stand paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. That will enable the Senator from Alabama and myself to vote, if that is agreeable.

Mr. PUGH. All right.

Mr. GALLINGER. I vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH. I vote "nay."

Mr. SAWYER. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. VILAS], but I have a right to vote to make a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A quorum has voted.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—30.
Allen,	Gorman,	Peffer,	Stanford,
Allison,	Hansbrough,	Perkins,	Stockbridge,

So the report was concurred in.

VISITORS TO NAVAL ACADEMY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] desires to be excused from serving on the Board of Visitors at the annual examinations of cadets at the Naval Academy. With the consent of the Senate the resignation will be accepted and the Chair will appoint the Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE] to serve in his place.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills this day received from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. 6005) to place binding-twine on the freelist—to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. 7023) to encourage American shipbuilding—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 7296) granting pensions to the survivors of the Indian wars of 1832 to 1842, inclusive, known as the Black Hawk war, Creek war, Cherokee disturbances, and the Seminole war—to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 8503) making appropriations for expenses that may be incurred under the treaties between the United States and Great Britain concluded at Washington February 29 and April 18, 1892—to the Committee on Appropriations.

CHEYENNE AND ARAPAHOE RESERVATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution reported by Mr. JONES of Arkansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, relative to the President's message upon the appropriation of March 3, 1891, for payment to the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations for their interests in the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Reservation.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 4, 1892, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 3, 1892.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Infantry arm.

Maj. Evan Miles, Twenty-fifth Infantry, to be lieutenant-colonel, April 25, 1892, vice Bates, Twentieth Infantry, promoted.

Capt. Chambers McKibbin, Fifteenth Infantry, to be major, April 25, 1892, vice Miles, Twenty-fifth Infantry, promoted.

First Lieut. Thomas F. Davis, Fifteenth Infantry, to be captain, April 25, 1892, vice McKibbin, Fifteenth Infantry, promoted.

Second Lieut. Samuel E. Smiley, Eighth Infantry, to be first lieutenant, April 25, 1892, vice Davis, Fifteenth Infantry, promoted.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate May 3, 1892.

CONSUL.

William W. Ashby, of Virginia, to be consul of the United States at Colon (Aspinwall).

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 3, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

OCEAN MAIL SERVICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Postmaster-General submitting an estimate of appropriation for ocean mail service now under contract for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

CERTAIN REQUISITIONS, TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to resolution of March 18, 1892, calling for information relative to amount of requisitions for payments in the various Departments for which warrants and drafts were not issued prior to March 1, 1892.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CLOVER for one day, on account of sickness.

METHODIST CHURCH, POINT PLEASANT, W. VA.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4860) for the relief of the Methodist Church of Point Pleasant, W. Va.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SIMPSON. I object.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported favorably a bill (H. R. 8533) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

OCEAN MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads certain resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The resolutions are as follows:

Whereas in pursuance of an act entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce," which act was approved March 1, 1891, which act authorizes the honorable Postmaster-General to enter into contracts for a term of not less than five nor more than ten years with American citizens for the carrying of mails on American steamships between ports of the United States and such ports in foreign countries, the Dominion of Canada excepted, as in his judgment will best subserve and promote the postal and commercial interests of the United States, the Postmaster-General entered into a contract with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, in accordance with schedule No. 44, in the advertisement for proposals to bidders, dated July 15, 1891, issued by the Postmaster-General, which schedule is as follows:

"OCEAN MAIL LETTINGS.

"Notice to bidders.

"POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., July 15, 1891.

"In accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress, approved March 3, 1891, entitled 'An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports and to promote commerce,' proposals will be received at the Post-Office Department, in the city of Washington, until 3 o'clock p. m., on Monday, the 25th day of October, 1891, for conveying the mails of the United States by means of steamships described in said act, between the several ports of the United States and the several ports in foreign countries which are specifically named in the schedule of routes published herewith.

"Proposals are invited for service on said routes, under contracts for ten years each, except where otherwise particularly specified, which shall commence within three years from the date of the execution of the contract, and at one of the periods named below, to-wit:

"First. Two months from execution of contract.

"Second. Four months from execution of contract.

"Third. Six months from execution of contract.

"Fourth. Twelve months from execution of contract.

"Fifth. Eighteen months from execution of contract.

"Sixth. Twenty-four months from execution of contract.

"Seventh. Thirty months from execution of contract.

"Eighth. Thirty-six months from execution of contract.

"Preference will be given, all other things being equal, to the proposal which names the earliest date for the commencement of the service.

"Under the law the right is reserved to the Postmaster-General to reject all bids not, in his opinion, reasonable for the attainment of the purposes contemplated by the act.

"SCHEDULE OF ROUTES ON THE PACIFIC OCEAN.

"No. 44.—'O. M. S.' From San Francisco to Panama, touching twice each month, going and returning, at the following ports: San Diego, Cal., Mazatlan, San Blas, Manzanillo, Acapulco, Port Angel, Salina Cruz, Tonala, San Benito, Ocos, Champerico, San José, Acajutla, La Libertad, La Union, Amapala, Corinto, San Juan, and Punta Arenas.

"Three times a month, thirty-six trips a year, time sixteen days, in vessels of the fourth class, for the first three years, and the remaining seven years once a week, fifty-two trips per year, time fifteen days and a half, the increased service to be performed in vessels of the third class, the bid to specify the rate for each class.

"B and required with bid, $12,000." And

Whereas it is notorious that the said Pacific Mail Steamship Company has for a term of years received, and is now receiving a large subsidy from transcontinental railroad companies to enable said roads to charge exorbitant rates for transporting passengers and freight, which contracts are contrary to public policy; and

Whereas by reason of said contracts said Pacific Mail Steamship Company persistently and contemptuously refuses to accord the only American port at which it has contracted to call the ordinary facilities which as a common carrier it is bound to furnish to passengers and shippers of freight and which facilities it freely accords all Mexican and Central American ports, thereby discouraging and repressing instead of promoting commerce; and

Whereas the said Pacific Mail Steamship Company grossly, unjustly, and unlawfully discriminates against the said American port of San Diego, by refusing to receive or deliver freight at said port, or to receive and transport passengers except at exorbitant rates; and

Whereas the said Pacific Mail Steamship Company has from the beginning of service under said contract to the present time deliberately and persistently violated the spirit and letter of the act under which said contract was entered into; and

Whereas it is an insult and an outrage upon the people of the United States that the said Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which receives a large subsidy from other corporations for the purpose of maintaining a grievous monopoly and to maintain exorbitant rates of fares and freight, should receive an additional subsidy from the Government of the United States, while violating the law under which it received the subsidy, while discouraging and repressing commerce, while denying privileges to American citizens at an American port which it freely accords to foreigners in foreign ports: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the further continuance of said contract with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for the said route from San Francisco to Panama is against public policy; that the service is not and has not been performed by the said company in accordance with the spirit or letter of the law under which said contract purports to have been made; that the contract should therefore be annulled, and the Postmaster-General is hereby requested to take the necessary steps to have the said contract set aside and annulled.

JESSE C. TAYLOR.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove from the rolls and records in the office of the Adjutant-General of the United States Army the charge of desertion now standing on said rolls and records against Jesse C. Taylor, late of Company E, Sixth Tennessee Cavalry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WATSON. I object.

Subsequently,

Mr. WATSON said:

Mr. Speaker, on the explanation made to me by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BAILEY) there were—ayes 77, noes none.

Mr. BAILEY. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] makes the point that no quorum has voted, and the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

The tellers reported—ayes 167.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, 167 members having voted in the affirmative, I withdraw my point.

The SPEAKER. The point being withdrawn, the ayes have it; and the bill is passed.

On motion of Mr. COX of Tennessee a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the call of the committees for reports, and that committees having reports to make may file them with the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. OATES in the Chair).

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and the Clerk will read the next paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Caroline Islands: Consul at Ponape, $1,500.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I send an amendment to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend lines 15 and 16, on page 16, by striking out all of said lines.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, in this case there are no fees, and the Government refuses exequatur to the American consul, and therefore he can not perform the duties. It is simply surplusage.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, that amendment, I think, is a proper one. That office is useless; there is no officer, and there can be none under present circumstances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

France and dominions: Consul at Cognac, $1,500.

Mr. HITT. I move an amendment on page 16, after line 21, by inserting the amendment I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Consuls at Guadaloupe and Martinique, $1,500 each.

Mr. HITT. I make that motion in order to retain these positions at the present pay, instead of reducing them to $1,000. From the port of Martinique, in the French West Indies, a very large amount of sugar and liquors is exported to the United States. The imports, consisting of fish, rice, and cotton, from Martinique were $4,500,000 in 1887, and the exports were $4,200,000.

At Guadaloupe a similar state of things exists, and a reduction of that consulate at this time would result in an inferior service. The trade is first with France, then very largely with the United States. The imports in 1887 were a little less than $3,000,000, and the exports upwards of $4,000,000. Offices of such importance ought to be maintained at a salary of $1,500. The fees received for invoices are small and do not fairly indicate the amount of our commerce, as in the sugar trade one invoice may cover a cargo of $100,000 value.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, at Guadaloupe the report shows that the fees collected were $144, at Martinique $233.95. I will not repeat the argument I have made as to what these fees express in the way of business.

The question was taken on the amendment, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask for a division, and I hope gentlemen will vote, as the failure to vote simply delays business.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 21, noes 76; so the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Great Britain and dominions: Consuls at Amherstburg, Antigua; Auckland; Barbados; Bermuda; Bristol; Brockville (Ontario); Cape Town; Charlottetown; Clifton; Cooktown; Port Erie; Guelph; Kingston, Canada; London (Canada); Malta; Morrisburg; Munich; Nassau; New Providence; Newcastle-on-Tyne; Pictou; Port Hope; Port Louis (Mauritius); Port Sarnia; Prescott; Quebec; Southampton; St. Helena; St. Johns (Quebec); Stratford (Ontario); Three Rivers; Wallaceburg; Windsor (Ontario); Winnipeg; Woodstock; Yarmouth, at $1,500 each, $54,000.

Mr. HITT. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 17, after line 10, insert: "Consuls at Gibraltar; Ceylon (India); Goodrich (Canada); Port Stanley (Falkland Islands), and St. Stephens (Canada), $1,500 each."

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I put these five posts in one amendment to save time, and it would, if adopted, prevent cutting them down.

Gibraltar is reduced by the bill from $1,500 to $1,000, which makes it a trading post. The consul there is a man widely known, Mr. Horatio J. Sprague, who has occupied it since 1848, and on several occasions he has rendered services of singular value to his country. The meager salary has not been sufficient to pay his actual expenses, and he has pieced them out from his own resources. The importance of that office is not to be measured by the fees for invoices. He has long furnished to the Bureau of Naval Intelligence information of every vessel passing inward and outward through the Straits of Gibraltar. The Bureau of Naval Intelligence in confidential reports has testified to the great value of his services. At critical times that office has been made virtually a dispatch agency, and was charged with duties of the gravest character, transmitting the orders of the South American squadron and the Mediterranean reserve. A sample of this occurred very recently when the Chilean complication required the transfer of naval forces.

I will not detail with the lists of vessels of our Navy stopping there, showing what the importance of the place is to our Navy and other ships which touch at Gibraltar. The trade is not extensive, but the business, especially that which concerns the public affairs of the country, is important.

Goodrich, Canada, is reduced by the bill from $1,500 to $1,000. It is the only harbor of refuge on the east shore of Lake Huron, the only place where an American vessel in distress can find relief or safety on that coast from Toronto to the peninsula of Sault Ste. Marie. The Canadian Government has expended largely on the harbor there. There is an extensive trade in lumber, salt, and agricultural products shipped to the United States. The consul at this place also relieves seamen and gives information to the immigrants to the United States. Mr. R. S. Chilton, the consul, is one of the best of our officers, and has been over forty years in the service. When a consul's salary is reduced to one thousand he is allowed by the law to trade, and naturally the consul would invest what capital he had in supplying the real or imaginary wants of distressed American seamen. It is evident what abuses this can lead to. For such a post and for the work to be done there $1,500 is not too much.

As to Port Stanley, it is a very difficult place to get to, far away on the Falkland Islands, in the southern hemisphere, and the consul appointed has to expend nearly a year's salary to carry himself and his family and to establish himself there. With a salary of but $1,000 we can not get an American citizen to perform the duties, for there are few fees and it is a dreary, uninviting place to live.

St. Stephens, in Canada, now paid $1,500, the bill would reduce to $1,000, with the right to trade. This office was raised from a feed commercial agency to a salaried consulate at the suggestion of the Secretary of the Treasury to prevent frauds in the importation of lumber. The proposed reduction of the salary will put the office again in the trading class and defeat the object attained by raising it from a feed to a salaried basis.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I desire to hear what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] is saying, but the gentlemen around me seem to object, and I wish the Chair would require them to be still. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. The committee will be in order.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I will repeat the last remark I made, which was that at the post of St. Stephens, in Canada, the salary is reduced by this bill from $1,500 to $1,000, and my amendment proposes to put it back to $1,500, for the reason that a consul who receives a salary of $1,000 or less is allowed to trade, and formerly when this office was paid by fees only, the irregularities and frauds perpetrated in the lumber trade there were so large and continuous that the Treasury Department asked to have the compensation raised or made direct in a salary, instead of fees, in order to stop all temptation to frauds upon the revenue.

The gentleman from Georgia proposes now to put this salary down to $1,000, which will permit the consul to trade, and may lead to a resumption of the disorderly and, to our revenues, losing system which prevailed before; and as the often-avowed purpose of this bill is economy, it certainly is as good economy to save a large amount to the Treasury in one way by letting the office alone as the Treasury Department want it, rather than make a show of saving a small sum $500 of salary by cutting down the officer and changing the character of the office.

Ceylon is distant just half way round the world. It is a place of call for ships and there is a commerce with the United States so large that the officers collected and remitted $830 in fees last year. It costs a great deal for a man with his family to merely go there, and no allowance is made to him for that purpose. It is a fearfully hot country and trying to live in. The business is so large that we ought to have an American there, and you can not get one fit for the duties at $1,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the first place in the gentleman's list is Gibraltar, where the fees are only $400. Our consul, as I am informed, has lived at that place for a long time, is a man of means, and has a palatial residence. The business at that point, as indicated by the report of the fifth auditor, is exceedingly small, and if the compensation proposed in the bill is not satisfactory to the present consul, I apprehend there will be no difficulty in getting some one else to do the work at that rate. Goderich is the next place mentioned in the amendment. At that point the fees are only $285.50, and the business of the office is not large.

Mr. ALLEN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] makes the point that if you reduce the St. Stephens man's salary to $1,000 he will have a right to trade.

Mr. BLOUNT. The $1,000-salary consuls and the fee consuls are allowed to engage in trade. The objection to that is that it is supposed to disqualify them in some measure for rendering the most efficient service to the Government.

Mr. ALLEN. Could not you put this salary at a thousand and one dollars, so as to relieve the gentleman from the necessity of engaging in trade? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. We might do that, but I think the bill is right as it stands. Mr. Chairman, similar observations to those which I have made upon these cases are applicable to all the posts in the gentleman's amendment. Our consular system is more extensive than that of other nations. We seem to go forward in an unsystematic and reckless way, establishing consulates all over the earth. You had an instance this morning where there was not a dollar of business, and the Government refused to give the consul an exequatur. I repeat that we have more consulates than the other great nations.

France has twenty consular officers in the United States; the United States has thirty-four consular officers in France. Germany has in the United States twenty-two consular officers; the United States has forty-four in Germany. Italy has in the United States twenty-one consular officers; the United States has in Italy thirty-one. So we see that we are needlessly extending our consular system all over the world, far beyond what is found necessary by other nations. Whether it is (as gentlemen see fit to call her) free-trade England, or protective Germany, or protective France, or Austro-Hungary, or Italy, we go beyond them all in this respect. As I said in the outset, the fact is that we are not in the habit of examining critically this consular service of ours until it becomes somewhat sick, and then when we touch it for the purpose of reform, we are "destroying the American consular system," extravagant as it is.

Mr. McCREARY. I wish to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question. Is it not true that for many years, except one year, our consular system has paid more into the Treasury than it has taken out, and that, therefore, excepting that one year, the system has never been any expense to the Government?

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend from Kentucky asks me if it is not true that the consular system has paid expenses except for one year. I think he is incorrect in his assumption. On page 18 of this report it appears that in 1891 the expenditures exceeded the fees. Previous to that the figures run along somewhat in line with the gentleman's statement, but in 1886 the fees were considerably less than the expenditures. In 1885 the fees were $791,305 and the expenditures were $870,000. During several years the expenditures have exceeded the receipts.

It appears that at present our receipts are falling below the expenditures; and it is with this condition that we are to deal. The Fifth Auditor says:

The expenditures for the consular service have exceeded the receipts for the first time since 1886. The expenses show an increase of $63,112 and the fees a falling off of $61,000, making a difference of $124,000.

So that in the mere matter of paying expenses we are in a worse shape than we have been for a long period. But I do not care to pursue that matter, as I have specifically referred to these several items.

Mr. McCREARY. The reason for my question to the gentleman from Georgia a few minutes ago was that I had before me a statement furnished by the State Department, a statement which has been made up with care and is reliable, showing the receipts for the consular service for 1887, 1888, 1889, and 1890. In those years (I am not now speaking of 1891) there was a surplus of receipts amounting to $119,122. So that the consular service from 1887 to 1890, as I stated, was not only self-sustaining but actually paid a surplus into the Treasury of $119,122.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, there is no disagreement between the gentleman and myself in regard to this matter. He asked me whether this service had not always paid more in the way of fees than had been expended. My answer was in the negative. Now, I have cases right under my eyes. In 1885 the expenditures exceeded the receipts; in 1886 the expenditures exceeded the receipts, and in 1887 the expenditures exceeded the receipts. This statement comes from the officer in charge of the Consular Bureau.

Mr. McCREARY. The statement furnished me by the State Department shows that in 1887, instead of there being a deficit, there was a surplus of receipts amounting to $31,717.

Mr. BLOUNT. My statement was erroneous as to that year, but otherwise it was correct.

Mr. McCREARY. I wish to make only a single remark. I understood my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Georgia, to say that the tendency of the consular service is toward increased cost, and that in this respect the service is not progressing now as well as it ought to progress. But these figures show that in the last five years our consular service has been improving so rapidly that there has been a surplus of over $100,000 after paying necessary expenses. When a showing of that kind can be made I think the service is improving and progressing.

Mr. BLOUNT. In response to the statement just made by the gentleman I will read again from the last report of the Fifth Auditor, showing the present condition of this service:

The expenditures for the consular service have exceeded the receipts for the first time since 1886. The expenses show an increase of $63,112, and the fees a falling off of $61,000, making a difference of $124,000.

Mr. McCREARY. To what year does the gentleman refer?

Mr. BLOUNT. Eighteen hundred and ninety-one, the last fiscal year.

Mr. McCREARY. I said that that was the only year in the last six years when the expenditures have exceeded the receipts.

Mr. BLOUNT. And, Mr. Chairman, my statement was based on the present condition. We are dealing with the present.

Mr. HITT. There was change of law which occurred at the time when this change in the receipts took place and caused it, making for the time a deficit by cutting off receipts largely, all of which has been overcome since by the growth of the system and the trade.

Mr. BLOUNT. In reply to that, I want to say that the same Auditor's report states:

About seven-eighths of the increase in the expenses occurred in the "contingent expenses, United States consulates," and "allowance for clerks of consulates."

That is my answer to the gentleman's statement.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. HITT was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Paraguay: consul at Asuncion, $1,500.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the following:

Portuguese dominions: Consuls at Fayal (Azores) and Funchal (Madeira), $1,500.

Mr. Chairman, at Funchal there is a large commerce in Madeira wine, which is dutiable at a high rate. The consul is now salaried at $1,500, so that he can not trade. If he is an honest man (and it is believed he can always secure a respectable man for $1,500) he can be trusted to see that the invoices give true values. But by this bill he is reduced to $1,000, which puts him in the class of consuls who are allowed to trade.

Under this provision he will at once enter into trade and probably become a member of a wine exporting house; it will then be a part of his duty to certify the invoices of the house of which he is a member, those invoices covering the wines sold to America by his own firm, and dutiable at a very high rate. Every cent lower at which he allows them to be invoiced there will determine the duty they will have to pay in New York; and will be so much money right into his own pocket. It will be his interest to neglect the interest of the Government. He will also be in a position to see all the papers connected with the trade of rival houses; and in this way, instead of being interested to encourage merchants and promote trade with the United States it will be his highest interest under the provision of this bill to get advantage of rivals and discourage them, and thus destroy our trade.

There is another class of duties with which a consul is charged and for which a consul, before the modern revenue duties arose, was originally appointed—the protection of his countrymen. That place is the resort of Americans, many of whom are sent there by physicians—sick people. They ought to have a consul within reach.

Next, as to Fayal, on the Azores Islands, which I have included in the amendment. This is a post of peculiar conditions, and Congress passed an act in 1875 authorizing this officer to enter into trade, because it was impossible to get a man to serve there unless some inducement beyond what we were willing to pay as a salary was afforded to him by the law. This is chiefly a port for refitting ships, and no fees of consequence are collected by the consul. There is no considerable trade of the ordinary kind there, but it was long ago deemed necessary to have some officer established there to look after the interest of American ships stopping at that port—the whaling fleet and trading ships.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, at this place the trade is of little consequence to this country. I speak now of Funchal. The fees collected there last year were only $140, and nothing was done for the relief of the seamen. At Fayal the fees amounted to only $158, and twelve seamen were relieved.

Much stress continues to be laid on the idea that in all of these places it is necessary that there shall be a sufficient salary to place the official in charge outside of that provision of the law which allows consuls to trade, on the ground that, as has been so often stated, it is a temptation to rascality on the part of the official to get in connection with some establishment engaged in business, shipping from that point.

Mr. HITT. If the gentleman from Georgia will excuse me, I wish to state that he is not exactly accurate in that statement. I did not state that the consul was necessarily engaged in rascality, but I said that the tendency of the trading privilege was to make it his interest to do that which was contrary to the interest of the Government.

Mr. BLOUNT. Very well, taking the gentleman's statement for it, and adopting that view of the situation, I do not believe there is any danger, as a general rule, in that direction. Sometimes such instances have occurred, but the same thing might be said in connection with persons who are not permitted to trade, who have the highest salary, for their conduct is in some instances unsustainable. If I saw fit I might read among this bill in some of the important salaries from important sources assaults upon consuls; but I have not deemed it proper to do so here, because the official can not be present to answer for himself. Why, sir, we have always had certain consuls, where the conditions were similar—the fees being small—engaged in trade. Other governments permit the same thing in this country. There is nothing singular about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salvador: Consul at San Salvador, $1,500.
Spain: Consuls at Barcelona, Cadiz, Denia, and Malaga, at $1,500 each.
$6,000; consuls at Santo Domingo, Sagua La Grande, and San Juan, Puerto Rico, $1,500 each.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman I offer an amendment to this.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 18, by inserting between lines 2 and 3 the following:

"Santo Domingo: Consul at Santo Domingo, $1,500."

And by striking out from line 5 the words "Santo Domingo."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 18, line 6, insert:

"Consul at Cardenas, $1,500."

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, that post is one where the commerce is very much larger than the fees, to which the gentleman from Georgia resorts in support of his peculiar view of business, would indicate. I think there were only about one hundred and eighty invoices certified there last year; but some of them covered more than $100,000. The trade is a large one, and the difficulties of a consul's duty to these regions I spoke of once before in this debate and will not repeat it now.

A MEMBER. What is the special difficulty?

Mr. HITT. It is the general condition which prevails in regard to trade in Spanish ports where Spanish laws and Spanish customs prevail, the annoyances and vexations that occur to our ships by the complex and severe regulations and the need of a prompt, skillful, intelligent consul, familiar with the Spanish language and laws to protect and extricate them from fines and delays.

This consul is in a port where there is a great trade in American bottoms. There were near 2,400 American seamen arriving there last year and as many departing—139 American vessels. That involves a long list of constant duties. He ships and discharges seamen. He has the custody and certification of the ship's papers in every case. He hunts up deserters. He has the custody of effects of deceased seamen. He has to settle all disputes among crews, extra wages, and many other duties. The gentleman from Georgia has so repeatedly replied to this by citing the small number of seamen relieved, that he must think that means much. In fact it is one of the smallest items.

I do not like to consume the time of the committee, but will say briefly that this is the fact. Since the passage of the Dingley bill the consul no longer collects from ships fees for services to shipping, but is required when he expends money to relieve poor Jack in sickness or disaster or trouble of any kind to account for that money. The small sums which he so pays out and which are charged to the Government have no connection with that long list of services, the fees for which he used to collect sometimes amounting to fifteen hundred and I have known it to reach twenty-five hundred dollars in a single office.

For these services to seamen he is not now required to collect fees from ships or seamen, but they are charged to the Government and subsequently in the accounting offices credited to the Government, so that it balances, and it is a mere matter of book-keeping. None of this work appears in the printed reports the gentleman is consulting, nor has since the Dingley bill went into operation. The only part he finds there of all this service is the relief of seamen, which still appears because there is public money laid out and accounted for. It may be $20, while the fees swept away for services still required would be $1,500.

Under the new law he is compelled to do all of that service gratuitously which otherwise would appear in the list of fees. Does not this show, Mr. Chairman, how little reliance is to be placed on the number of seamen relieved as a standard of work done? There are many duties which he performs which do not appear there at all. It is asking a good deal of a respectable American to go with his family to that unhealthy climate, live on $1,000 a year, and do all this.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I have endeavored to answer the argument which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] attempts to make in reference to the fees that are lost under the McKinley bill, and have stated over and over again that throughout the whole world the whole thing does not amount to $80,000; but if the gentleman's energy, when he comes to this matter of repeating over and over again as he has just now done, is to be taken for aught, you would think that it involves half the expense of the consular service. Now, at this place the fees are only $447.50, and he is allowed $541.79 for contingent expenses. The salary of $1,000 is ample, I have no doubt, to secure a person to do the little work there is to do, and that $540 worth of invoicing.

Mr. Chairman, these things are stated as though they were a matter of wonderful toil. Here comes in a purchaser of goods with an invoice, stating the price paid and various other items required to be stated by him in his invoice and declaration. There are blanks for it, and then the certificate of the officer thereon, and if there are duplicates, why the making of them is a matter of a few minutes. There are clerks to aid the consul in all these matters, and doubtless these things in a large number of instances are already prepared for the officer to put his name to them.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, $117,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I send up the following amendment, simply to change the total to make it correspond.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend line 18, page 18, by striking out "one hundred and seventeen thousand" and inserting "one hundred and fifteen thousand five hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Africa: Consul at Mozambique, $1,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I send up an amendment. This is to be stricken out here and put in somewhere else.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 18, line 21, by striking out the whole of said line

Mr. BLOUNT. There is no objection to that. The place comes in in another part of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Belgium: Consul at Ghent, $1,000.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, that post is one where the trade is so considerable that the consul ought to be an American. We imported a good deal from there last year. We sold to them about $400,000 worth of goods in 1889, and about $340,000 worth in 1890. If no salary is given at all we can not get an American to fill the post. And he ought to be paid at least $1,000. The fees are too small to induce an American to go there. If that is the sole compensation, and so this bill provides, the post will be vacant or it must be filled by some merchant there.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have simply to say that there were but $380 worth of fees, which amount indicates the trade at that point that requires invoicing.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

France and dominions: Consuls at Guadeloupe and Martinique, $1,000 each; $2,000; consul at Gore Dakar (Africa), $1,000; consul at Nantes, $1,000; consul at Nice, $1,000; consul at Tahiti (Society Islands), $1,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I offer the following amendment:

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend page 19, line 2, by striking out the words "Consul at Gore Dakar (Africa), $1,000."

Mr. BLOUNT. This is a clerical error which needs correction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Great Britain and dominions: Consul at Ceylon, $1,000; consul at Gibraltar, $1,000; consul at Goderich, $1,000; consul at Port Stanley, $1,000; consul at Sierra Leone, $1,000; consul at St. Stephen, $1,000; consul at Turks Island, $1,000; consul at Windsor, Nova Scotia, $1,000.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

"Consuls at Bombay, Gaspé Basin, and Levuka, $1,000 each."

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, these posts are now salaried at $1,000. The bill cuts them off from all salary and they will keep the fees as their whole compensation. The reasons for that amendment are these: The consul at Bombay ought to be an American. By cutting off his salary and making it a fee consulate we can not get an American to take it for the sum of $330, the amount of the fees, all of which go to an unsalaried consul. There are other duties besides certifying invoices that are important. It is a place for the refitting of American ships in the Indian Ocean, and that duty makes no showing in the fees. This small sum of fees would be a sufficient inducement to lead an English or other foreign merchant there to take the place. I have spoken of the disadvantage to our trade in having citizens of a rival nation made the officer to watch and promote our trade. The truth is that by the policy of this part of the bill you are making our foreign service a service of foreigners.

A word of the other posts in the amendment before yielding the floor to the chairman. Gaspé Basin is a dreary, chilly place, away on the inhospitable northeast coast, where there are no fees of consequence, but it is an important point for mariners, especially for fishermen, and it will be important until this fishery question is settled. The State Department at one time advised that it be dropped, but it resumed its importance as a point for watching fraudulent importations of dutiable fish. That consul is a valuable officer in preventing this smuggling. Smuggling of this kind goes on still, but this officer saves a great deal to the Government. That is his special value.

Ordinarily the duty has been merely to relieve fishermen and to care for them, especially in case of shipwreck, which is frequent on that stormy coast. If this salary is taken away and the fees are left as the sole compensation, the office will be given to a man who will almost certainly be in business, who is not an American, and the business he will be in will probably be connected with the fishing interest, as that is the chief business there.

There is the point. The only man who will take this office for the fees, if this bill passes, will be a British subject, in the fishing interest, and his duty will be to fill an office which the Treasury Department ask to have kept there as a special outpost to prevent fraud on our tariff law by the importation of dutiable fish from that place.

Mr. HERMANN. The gentleman speaks about the question of appointing foreigners. Is it because of the limited salaries paid for consuls?

Mr. HITT. No foreigner is appointed to an American consulate where the Department can induce an American citizen to take the place; but, if it be in a remote part of the world, and the pay small, at a place where it is not desirable or very expensive to live, no American can be found who will go there and hold it, and in that case, either the office must remain vacant and useless, or the Department must search for the best man obtainable, some respectable foreigner who will discharge the duties; and, undoubtedly, the men of most importance in that town are probably British subjects, for it is in the British dominions, and the man is most likely to be a man engaged in these fishing interests, for it is the prevailing interest.

Mr. HERMANN. In such an event, would it not even be better to have no consul or vice-consul there than to have one under such a system; would it not be better for our commercial interests?

Mr. HITT. There are duties which a consul ought to be there to perform; and in the desire to protect the American citizen in the best way practicable, with the meager resources at command, there has always been an effort on the part of the Executive to have officers everywhere at which we have consulates. Foreigners are taken where it is not practicable to get an American; we want somebody to whom Americans can look who will assume charge of American interests, hence it is better to have a foreigner than none at all.

Mr. HERMANN. It is rather un-American in doctrine.

Mr. HITT. It is a bad doctrine and a bad practice. Secretary Freylinghuysen sent a very full report here recommending something like the British system, in which fees and foreigners have been long ago tried and found unsatisfactory. He proposed a classified list with compensation fixed at such amounts as would lead Americans to fill almost all the posts. But Congress has seen fit to adopt the old system, as was believed to be agreeable to the public sentiment; and so we have a serviceslender in number and but half organized which has been very good and very effective, but meagerly paid. The effect of the present bill will be to lower it in character and numbers, make it less effective, and fill a considerable number of our consulates with foreigners.

Levuka is included in the amendment. That is a point in the Fiji Islands, where we have now a joint commission, British and American, passing upon land questions involving large amounts. If this consulate has the salary cut off, there will be no American who will hold it, and there again the American consul will probably be a British subject, or we will have none at all; and that, too, at a moment when we have a commission sitting there settling disputes between the British Government and our own, and between British subjects and American citizens. The officer, if we have one at all, who will be there to protect our rights and who should vigilantly watch the interests of our citizens will be a British subject with allegiance to the very government with which we are contending. This is the way to reform the service!

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, my friend speaks of this bill adopting a system of putting foreigners in office. There are ten of these places reduced throughout the whole service. He says no good American will go there to those places if you reduce the compensation to the fee. Well, now, if any one would go from here to those countries for a $1,000 salary, I should not think he would be a very important man in any business sense, anyway; and I take it for granted that the small duties that are to be done there, could be done by some person who had some other business, even if he happened to be a foreigner.

Now I happen to have before me the recommendations to which I have heretofore referred, made in the Forty-fourth Congress for the reduction of forty-four consulates to compensation by fees, that recommendation being based on the report of Mr. Keim, who had made a special inspection of all our consulates at the instance of Gen. Grant. This action which we propose is nothing novel.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mexico: Consul at Matamoras, $1,000.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

"Consul at Guaymas, $1,000."

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I will not detain the committee with any other amendment beyond this, and I think that the voting down of this amendment, as it will be voted down, will be the crowning achievement in this long series of rejections.

I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], whom I see before me, to kindly give me his attention while I explain this one more amendment I propose to a bill framed, it is said, in accordance with his ideas of economy and the retrenchment of expenditures. The salary of the consul at Guaymas is now $1,000, and this bill proposes to cut off that salary. Guaymas is a port on the western coast of Mexico, much frequented, where three lines of steamers touch. The salary being cut off, the fees will, by the law, go to the consul. The fees for invoice work there are not great, say $250; but there is another kind of fees, far greater than that, if his salary of $1,000 is cut off and it is made a feed office by this bill.

Under the Dingley act all fees for services rendered to ships and mariners by consuls receiving only fees and without salaries are to be paid by the Government to these feed consuls. In no case do the ships and seamen pay them. If the services are rendered by a salaried consul he gets none of the fees for this or anything else; the service is rendered gratis. In this case of Guaymas the salary is proposed to be cut off, so that the consul will, by the law, receive and keep all the fees, the limit being $2,500, and the Government will have to pay them. That is the sort of retrenchment that is proposed. Will these fees go above $1,000? Yes, over and over again. Every time a steamer or other American vessel comes into that port the consul will get $1 for every seaman shipped; $1 for every seaman discharged; a cent a ton for filing the ship's papers of every vessel that comes into port, and so on.

In the long list of details in the Consular Regulations there are ten other fees for services to shipping which a nonsalaried consul is entitled to collect. All these fees are denied to the salaried officer; he can keep nothing beyond his salary of fees actually collected. But an unsalaried officer charges all these fees, and they are allowed and paid to him by the Government. Where the consul is salaried he gets nothing out of these fees for services to ships; it is a mere matter of charging and crediting the Government both ways. But where the consul gets no salary, he sends his account for these fees to the Treasury and they are allowed him under the law. Then, what will be the limit upon this man from whom you are taking away a salary of $1,000? Fee consuls by the law may retain the fees up to $2,500. This bill, therefore, will change the income of this officer from $1,000 a year to $2,500 a year income direct, and after that there is $500 for rent, and then for clerk hire whatever the Department will allow.

Do you know how large a sum those fees will amount to in all? I mentioned the three lines of steamers passing and repassing constantly. Up to the fourth entry of a ship at that port he gets the full amount of the fee that I have mentioned for filing papers; for services to seamen no matter how often. Now, this is a port where the great frequency of entries and the multitude of sailors will make such an aggregate of fees that this officer will probably and almost certainly draw the maximum allowed under the law. Col. Alexander Willard is now our consul there. He is holding the office and performing all this service for $1,000 a year, because he is the agent of the steamers, and he is the man who ought to wish health and long life to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs for adding at least $1,500 if not $2,000 to the income of that consulate.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, if there was any way of ascertaining with accuracy the facts alleged to exist by my friend from Illinois, I would take great pleasure in giving them consideration in fixing the compensation of this office, but the gentleman can not support his statements by any official data. I think there have already been some railroads built to that point. At all events the growth of commerce in connection with this port, which the gentleman anticipates, has not yet been demonstrated, so I think his conjectures as to the enormous amount of fees that will be collected there are without substantial foundation.

I know very well that if my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] were to accept absolutely the statements of my friend from Illinois he would probably object to the change proposed in the bill, but when we look at the tabular statement showing the trade at this port we find no such conditions indicated as my friend from Illinois seems to think exist there. It is possible that in the future there will be a great development of trade at that point, and whenever it comes I shall be in favor of rearranging the salary. Whenever I find that at a given time there is no trade, or that there is a large amount of trade at a given point, I am in favor of adjusting the compensation with reference to the facts as they exist. I repeat that in this case there are no official data to support the statement of my friend from Illinois.

Mr. HITT. I should add, perhaps, that there is no official published statement of the accounts of consuls of services in detail to ships; they are in their accounts. It is a notorious fact, which any journal on the Pacific coast will show to the gentleman, that these steamers touch at this place; and the gentleman can examine the statute governing these fees. Therefore he has to perform a simple sum in addition in order to reach exactly the result I have given.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, it would take me a long time to figure out the result, unless I knew how often the steamers stop there. There is information to be had in reference to the vessels entering every port of the world. Everything which my friend says he can not find in this case I will undertake to find for him. I have had occasion to do that sort of thing heretofore; and there is no difficulty in finding in the consular reports statements in regard to the vessels entering and clearing, as well as in other matters of interest in respect to trade.

Mr. HITT. Except that of the essential matter—the service rendered to seaman—no account is published now of the fees for those services. That is a matter embraced in the accounts of individual officers, sent in manuscript to the Treasury Department. The printed tabulated reports to which the gentleman refers show the arrivals and departures. The computation which I suggested the gentleman might readily make would be based upon the great number of vessels that must enter this port, the number of seamen who go there, and the fees that will be collected from the Government and retained by a consul who has no salary. Those are the elements of the problem. But the solution is not a happy one for the theory of this economy and retrenchment bill.

The CHAIRMAN (having put the question on the amendment of Mr. HITT). The noes seem to have it.

Mr. HITT. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 26, noes 65. So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Portuguese Dominions: Consuls at Funchal and Fayal, $1,000 each, $2,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After "Fayal" insert "and Mozambique," and in the following line strike out "two" and insert "three," so as to read "$3,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, $27,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to amend by striking out "seven" and inserting "six," so as to read, "$26,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries of consular officers not citizens of the United States, $10,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to amend by striking out the lines just read and inserting the following:

The salary of a consular officer not a citizen of the United States shall be paid out of the amount specifically appropriated for salary at the consular office to which the alien officer is attached or appointed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Allowance for clerks at consulates, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, at consulates not herein provided for in respect to clerk hire, no greater portion of this sum than $500 to be allowed to any one consulate in any one fiscal year: Provided, That the total sum expended in one year shall not exceed the amount appropriated: And provided further, That out of the amount hereby appropriated the Secretary of State may make such allowance as may to him seem proper to any interpreter for clerical services in addition to his pay as interpreter, $35,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to amend at the end of the paragraph just read by striking out "$35,000" and inserting "$20,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, $100,700.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to amend so as to read, "Total, $85,700."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. There is an amendment pending which was proposed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN] to the paragraph under the head "Emergencies arising in the diplomatic and consular service." I now call up that amendment and ask a vote upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the paragraph and also the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

EMERGENCIES ARISING IN THE DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR SERVICE.

To enable the President to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the diplomatic and consular service, and to extend the commercial and other interests of the United States, to be expended pursuant to the requirements of section 291 of the Revised Statutes, $60,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment of Mr. CHIPMAN was read, as follows:

Add to the paragraph just read the following:

"Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be paid to any foreign power in settlement of any claim of said power against the United States."

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, three were on a division (called for by Mr. DINGLEY)—ayes 51, noes 23. So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT. I now ask that we return to the other paragraph which was passed over—the paragraph in regard to the Continental Railway Commission.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINENTAL RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Payment of the share of the United States of the expense of a preliminary survey for a continental railway, as recommended by the International American Conference, to be available when the other nations mentioned by the International American Conference pay all their respective assessments, $65,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to amend by striking out, in the first line of the paragraph just read, the word "commission" and inserting "survey."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I now move to amend by striking out the whole of this paragraph.

Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out this provision appropriating $65,000 for continuing the survey of the Intercontinental Railroad, for several reasons, some of which I have already stated to the committee in general debate. I wish now further to call the attention of the committee to the very meager consideration given to this question at the first session of the Fifty-first Congress, when this appropriation of $65,000 was made on the consular and diplomatic bill. The House passed that appropriation bill without any provision of this kind embodied in it. On the return of the bill from the Senate there were many amendments, and amongst them was a provision for this survey, and the creation of the commission, etc.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] asked unanimous consent that the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill be taken up, the amendments of the Senate nonconcurring in, and that the House ask a conference thereon. To this the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] made objection. Mr. HITT suggested that there would be a saving of time, and that he was anxious to get the bill in conference. I have the debate before me, but will only refer to one or two extracts from it. Mr. HOLMAN said:

I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois whether the committee are unanimous in their opposition to these various amendments?

He was eager to know whether the nonconcurrence proposed was a mere pro forma matter, or whether the committee were disposed to make issue on the various amendments of the Senate. Mr. HITT replied:

The committee framed the bill, which was sent to the Senate, and upon that bill the committee were unanimous. They desire to consider carefully these amendments, but what conclusions they will reach upon them I can not say. I move to nonconcur in order that we may consider them.

Then, later, a conference report was made by the conferees appointed under the order of the House, which was requested by Mr. HITT; and in this report, amongst other things agreed to on the part of the committee of conference—and I may say in this connection that most of the Senate amendments which the House formally nonconcurred in were agreed to by the conference and reported back to the House by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT]—but amongst the other things agreed to was this intercontinental railway project. The matter was brought up for immediate action in the House.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN], and a gentleman then from Arkansas, Judge Rogers, commenced a struggle to have the bill lay over until the next day, until there could be an opportunity to examine its provisions. The struggle continued for a long while. I have no time to read the colloquy in connection therewith, but an effort was made to adjourn the House, and that was voted down by the majority side. Several votes were taken. Gentlemen of the minority side of the House—the Democratic side then—abstained from voting in order to force the matter to go over, and it was finally brought to an issue by the Speaker counting a quorum, and in that way the House was brought first to the consideration of this $65,000 appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. That was the first appropriation?

Mr. BLOUNT. That was the first appropriation, and the survey was commenced in that manner, the record disclosing the fact that the report was adopted with the great majority of the Democrats in the House protesting against such action until they could have an opportunity to examine all the questions involved.

So, Mr. Chairman, I think that the majority side of this House have never had any opportunity to consider this question.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McCREARY. I ask that the time of the gentleman from Georgia may be extended.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the debate on this paragraph, unless objection be made, will be considered as applying to the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, and will not require pro forma amendments.

Mr. BLOUNT. But the five-minute rule will obtain?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; but the Chair will not require pro forma amendments.

Mr. COOMBS. I suggest that the gentleman from Georgia have all the time he wants and that there be a liberal time on the other side.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will have to object to that in the interest of the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the sundry civil bill is next on the Calendar.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. It will be in the interest of every other bill to let this vote be taken, for we are going to have time, either by consent or the pro forma amendments, to discuss it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am not disposed to insist on any considerable time to discuss the matter. The gentleman from Kentucky, Governor McCREARY, my friend from Mississippi, Mr. HOOKER, and myself differing on this subject, have already presented to the House the features as they present themselves to our minds, and it does not seem that the matter would need very much further elaboration. I think I can discuss in a very short period the real question before the House.

Now, my friend from Kentucky, and my friend from Mississippi [Gen. HOOKER] assume that this is nothing more than a mere matter of survey of a road in Central and South America. I take the ground, sir, that it is a great deal more. The Pan-American Congress adopted a report containing fifteen sections, and I call your special attention to this matter. I shall not have time to read all the sections, but will read those that provide for this survey. That is provided in the first section, and then there are various other sections agreed to. Among them I will read section—

Ninth. That the construction, management, and operation of the line should be at the expense of, the concessionaires or of the persons to whom they subcontract the work or transfer their rights with all due formalities, the consent of the respective governments being first obtained.

Tenth. That all materials necessary for the construction and operation of the railroad should be exempt from import duties, subject to such regulations as may be necessary to prevent the abuse of this privilege.

Eleventh. That all personal and real property of the railroad employed in its construction and operation should be exempt from all taxation, either national, provincial (State), or municipal.

Twelfth. That the execution of a work of such magnitude deserves to be further encouraged by subsidies, grants of land, or guaranties of a minimum of interest.

Thirteenth. That the salaries of the commission, as well as the expenses incident to the preliminary and final surveys, should be assumed by all the nations accepting, in proportion to population according to the latest official census, or, in the absence of a census, by agreement between their several governments.

Fourteenth. That the railroad should be declared forever neutral for the purpose of securing freedom of traffic.

Now, here, Mr. Speaker, is a scheme for the construction of a road in South America, and as Mr. Blaine says, it contains a guaranty of a protection of the concessionaires, which is absolutely necessary to the successful building and running of this road and to invite persons to invest in it. Unless this Government in connection with the other governments should guarantee the rights of the concessionaires, their land grants, their guaranties of interest, the neutrality of the road, and the various other rights herein contained, people would not invest at all; but the moment the great arm of these United States was thrown around this scheme, investors would say "we shall have that power at our back and our investments are secure." Mr. Blaine fully appreciated what this meant when he sent his communication to Congress asking for provision for the commission and for the survey.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Georgia allow me to call his attention to a point right there?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Under that negotiation in which the neutrality of the road seems to have been agreed to by these parties did the United States obligate herself to protect this neutrality?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes.

Mr. COX of Tennessee (continuing). Suppose that neutrality was to be violated by any of these South American countries; then would it be the duty of the United States to protect that neutrality?

Mr. BLOUNT. If we carried out the scheme contained herein we would be bound to do it, in my opinion.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. BLOUNT. And the Secretary says:

On this subject a very important feature of the report, to which I especially direct your attention—will be found in the international declarations that the line of the proposed railway shall be forever neutral territory; that the material necessary for the construction and operations of the road shall be admitted free of customs dues, and that its property and revenues shall be always exempt from all forms of taxation. This guaranty, having all the force of a treaty—

And I invite the attention of the House to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. A guaranty.

Mr. BLOUNT. A guaranty, having all the force of a treaty—will stimulate private and public confidence, and thus lead to the investment of capital that might otherwise be reluctant and distrustful.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention just here to the fact that according to the letter from the Secretary of State on February 23, only five of these fourteen countries have made any contribution at all. We have appropriated twice $65,000, paying our part twice. This work is going on at the instance almost exclusively of the United States, and it is a very significant fact that, while we are claiming that we propose to render such great service toward the development of South America, the appropriations necessary to consummate this work are withheld by most of these governments. I could not understand this at first, until an officer connected with the commission on yesterday came to me and said, "They are suspicious, and that is the reason they do not make the appropriations. Give us the money and let us go on with the survey and we will work this thing out of them after awhile."

Now, Mr. Chairman, here is this great Republic, forcing its way here, claiming to do it by virtue of an agreement, and most of the nations are withholding their financial coöperation, we making two appropriations and proposing to go on with a third. Now, it will be said that we have appropriated $130,000, that the survey is perhaps two-thirds completed, and that we should complete it. Every dollar of this $130,000 that has been expended down there has been expended without advisement on the part of the lower branch of the American Congress. The party now in the majority in this House has never until this hour had the opportunity to place its stamp of disapproval upon a scheme which proposes to connect this Government with a railroad in South America, with enforcing the demands of railroad concessionaires against these Republics, and perhaps implicating us in complications which may finally terminate in a war of conquest.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I addressed the House at some length on this paragraph of the bill when we had general debate on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and I only desire now to call the attention of members to certain important points connected with this appropriation, and also to remove if I can the alarm which seems to fill my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

I hope I will have the attention of the committee on this point. I desire to state that the appropriation of $65,000, which the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs is now moving to strike out of the bill he reported, had the indorsement of every member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs who was present, and has never been opposed in this House by any member except the gentleman from Georgia. He reported this bill favorably, without any minority report, and now he stands in the attitude of asking us to strike out an important paragraph in the bill which he reported favorably to the House of Representatives. This paragraph, which makes an appropriation of $65,000, was carefully considered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and every member of that committee finally voted in favor of directing the chairman to report it favorably to the House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us see what this Trojan horse is that causes the gentleman from Georgia so much alarm. The language of it is as follows:

CONTINENTAL RAILWAY SURVEY.

Payment of the share of the United States of the expense of a preliminary survey for a continental railway, as recommended by the International American Conference, to be available when the other nations mentioned by the International American Conference pay all their respective assessments, $65,000.

I ask the members of the House of Representatives to stand by the Committee on Foreign Affairs and vote down the motion to strike out this paragraph, first, because the Committee on Foreign Affairs, except the chairman of the committee, after the most careful consideration and examination, indorsed the appropriation and directed that it be reported in the bill; secondly, I ask the members of this House to let this paragraph remain in the bill, because this preliminary survey to ascertain whether it is feasible to connect the United States with all the republics of Central and Southern America is about two-thirds completed. The report of the chief executive officer connected with the preliminary survey shows that the work is now about two-thirds finished. Congress has twice appropriated $65,000 as the part of the United States to make this preliminary survey, and now, when we need only $65,000 more to complete the survey, for the first time, opposition is raised in the House of Representatives.

Mr. CULBERSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McCREARY. There was opposition in the last Congress to the passage of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, but no special opposition to the appropriation for making the preliminary survey. It is well known to members why we delayed all bills. I spoke more than two hours on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill in the last Congress. It was our design to get time, and the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill was finally passed in the House of Representatives with an appropriation just like the one the gentleman from Georgia now moves to strike out.

Mr. BLOUNT. Not exactly.

Mr. McCREARY. It passed the House of Representatives with about 100 voting in favor of it, and a few votes against it. What will be the effect if we fail now to make this appropriation?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask that the gentleman from Kentucky be allowed to proceed for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCREARY. If we now fail to make this appropriation, and it becomes necessary to abandon the work, the instruments, the animals, and the equipments with which three surveying corps are now working will be sold at a sacrifice and the loss upon these animals, equipments, and instruments will amount perhaps to half as much as we now ask in this bill.

I ask, for another reason, that we pass this appropriation. South of this Republic are 50,000,000 people who desire more intimate commercial union and more intimate social relations with us than they have heretofore enjoyed. They have modeled their governments after ours and they are earnestly pleading for broader trade relations with us and greater communication by land. They had last year $998,000,000 worth of trade.

Four-fifths of that trade went to England, Germany, and France, and only one-fifth to the United States. We ought to have it all. Mr. Chairman, this is not a proposition to build a railroad. It is merely a proposition for the United States to furnish $65,000, the amount which this Government solemnly agreed to furnish when the International American Conference was held in this city, and I ask the members of this House to adopt the paragraph in this bill appropriating this $65,000, because they are in honor bound to stand by the agreement which was made when the International Conference was held and which we have upheld for nearly two years.

Mr. ELLIS. If it is not intended to have us go on and build the railroad, why should we make the survey? Why should not the people who are to build the road make the survey?

Mr. McCREARY. I will explain that. The attitude of the matter now is the same as if there were half a dozen counties lying side by side in a rough country, and the people desiring to have a railroad built should unite to pay the cost of making a preliminary survey to determine whether the enterprise is feasible or not. In such a case each county contributes money to make the preliminary survey, knowing that as soon as the work is shown to be feasible the money to build the road will be furnished by the capitalists or syndicates who are always on the lookout for such investments.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] intimated that there is a subsidy in the proposed appropriation. He is very late in coming to that conclusion, after two appropriations have been made for the preliminary survey. I call the attention of my friend from Georgia to the resolution adopted by the national Democratic convention in 1884. That convention declared that it favored "an American continental policy based upon more intimate commercial and political relations with the fifteen sister republics of North, Central, and South America," and the Republican national convention adopted a similar resolution. Following these resolutions came the act of 1888, authorizing the Pan-American Congress, passed by the Congress of the United States without a dissenting vote, and approved by Mr. Cleveland, who was then President. In the first paragraph of that act is the following statement in reference to the purposes of the International American Conference:

For considering questions relating to the improvement of business intercourse and means of direct communication between said countries.

Meaning the United States and the countries of Central and South America.

When the members of the International American Conference assembled they made an agreement looking to the carrying out of the purpose stated in the first paragraph of the act of Congress to which I have referred.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. McCREARY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will ask the gentleman if that conference did not take up the question of reciprocity treaties, and whether they did not make a failure all along that line?

Mr. McCREARY. They probably took up that question and did make a failure, but that has nothing to do with the present question.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understood my friend to be stating what the Congress assembled for.

Mr. McCREARY. The Conference assembled to consider eight topics, and the first one reported upon was the first mentioned in the paragraph of the act approved by President Cleveland and the first mentioned in the invitation sent out by Secretary Bayard to the countries south of us, to wit, questions relating to the improvement of business intercourse and means of direct communication between the countries of the western hemisphere, and the Conference agreed that a preliminary survey should be commenced immediately to ascertain if it was feasible to build a railroad in Central and South America that would connect all the countries of the three Americas. It was also declared in the ninth clause of the agreement

That the construction, management, and operation of railways should be at the expense of the concessionaires or the persons to whom they sublet the work or transfer their rights with all due formalities, the consent of the respective governments being first obtained.

As the railroads of the United States are already built to the Mexican border, this shows that there is nothing whatever in this provision that pledges the United States to furnish one dollar for the construction of the railroad.

[Here the hammer fell.]

On motion by Mr. BLOUNT, by unanimous consent, the time of Mr. McCREARY was extended for five minutes longer.

Mr. McCREARY. Our railroads are already built in the direction of Mexico. We have three lines crossing the border between Texas and Mexico at El Paso, at Eagle Pass, and at Laredo. Mexico has undertaken to do her part in the construction of the great continental railroad; she says she will build all of the line that runs through her territory. The Argentine Republic has announced that she will build all of the railroad that passes through that Republic. She has already built 980 miles of road and the Republic of Mexico has completed a road from the Texas border to her capital, and is rapidly pushing it toward Guatemala. There is nothing whatever in the paragraph of the pending bill to pledge us to any subsidy. I have stood in my place in this House for seven years and fought subsidies. I am against subsidies now, and if I believed there was anything in this bill that committed our Government to furnishing money for the construction of this road I would be against it.

Mr. Chairman, the United States in the International American Conference pledged itself to contribute $65,000 per annum until the preliminary survey was finished and thereby induced the other republics to agree to contribute their money and now I hold that we have no right to cancel our agreement. We can finish the work in another year. Two-thirds of it is now done, and with one more appropriation we can complete the survey.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the evidence that the Government of the United States pledged itself to pay any specific sum of money toward this survey or that any other State promised to pay any part of the expense?

Mr. McCREARY. I thought I had already answered that question; but, if the committee will give me time, I will go over it again. As I have already stated, the Congress of the United States passed what was known as the law "to authorize the President of the United States to invite the several governments of the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, Hayti, San Domingo, and the Empire of Brazil, to join the United States in a conference to be held at Washington, in the United States, at such time as the President may deem proper in the year 1889, for the purpose of discussing and recommending for adoption to their respective governments, some plan of arbitration for the settlement of disagreements or disputes that may hereafter arise between them, and for considering questions relating to the improvement of business intercourse and means of direct communication between said countries, and to encourage such reciprocal commercial relations as will be beneficial to all, and secure more extensive markets for the products of each of said countries."

When the Congress of the United States passed that act, which was approved by President Cleveland, invitations were sent out by Mr. Bayard, as Secretary of State, inviting those countries to come here for that purpose. They sent delegates to meet ours in the International American Conference, which agreed upon this preliminary survey and agreed that each country should furnish a sum of money equivalent to $1,000 for each million of inhabitants, our share being $65,000 per annum. Now, when the United States furnished money twice and when the other countries are furnishing their respective amounts, I say there is an implied contract from which we can not now honorably retire.

But we have put in this bill a saving clause, which I am in favor of. It was alleged by the gentleman from Georgia that these other countries had not been as prompt to raise money as we have. Therefore, it has been provided in this bill that we are not to pay the appropriation of $65,000 until all the other countries pay the respective amounts which they promised to pay. It is true that a few of them have not yet paid their respective quotas, and therefore this provision has been inserted.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope my friend will be allowed five minutes more to continue his remarks.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust there will be no objection. There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend from Kentucky does not answer my question at all. I have looked in vain through the proceedings in reference to this matter to find any engagement on the part of any of these States to pay anything; and I find no agreement on the part of the United States to pay $65,000.

Mr. McCREARY. Let the gentleman read the act of Congress, and then read the agreement made by our commissioners in the International American Conference, and then read the action of Congress appropriating $65,000 on two occasions for the purpose of carrying out this agreement; and if he then does not regard this as a contract, I am unable to convince his mind.

Mr. HOLMAN. Where is the agreement? I have looked in vain for it. I find no such agreement. I find discussion, but no agreement.

Mr. McCREARY. I submit that we should also look at this as a matter of business. We have appropriated $130,000 towards this preliminary survey. I call the attention of members to the letter of the executive officer of the Continental Railroad, which is as follows:

INTERCONTINENTAL RAILWAY COMMISSION.
Washington, D. C. April 29, 1892.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with your request of yesterday I have the honor to submit the following, which gives the status of our work up to the latest reports received from the parties in the field:

The survey in Guatemala has been finished. Three lines have been examined each of which shows the practicability of constructing a railroad from the Mexican boundary to the frontier of Salvador at a cost which will insure the railroads being self-supporting from their local traffic alone.

In South America one corps has surveyed the country from Quito, Ecuador, to Antioquia, Colombia, a distance of 800 miles. The engineer in charge reports that the railroad through that section is perfectly feasible at a cost of $32,000 per mile for road-bed, masonry, and bridges, involving no gradient exceeding 3½ per cent and no curvature greater than 14°. Our third corps has surveyed the line from Quito, Ecuador, to Cerro de Pasco, Peru (a distance of over 800 miles), where it arrived on the 8th instant. This section has also been reported perfectly feasible for a railroad.

It is very gratifying to inform you that such important and valuable results have been attained in so short a time and at comparatively such a small cost. To sum up, the feasibility of a continental railroad over the greater part of the main line in South America, namely, the 1,600 miles already surveyed by our engineers, has been demonstrated.

As the distance from the southern boundary of Costa Rica via Quito, Cerro de Pasco, and Cuzco to Puno, on the frontier of Bolivia, is 2,400 miles, of which 372 miles are either covered by existing railroads or under contract to be completed in two years, there are only 500 miles more to be surveyed in South America and about 800 miles in Central America to determine the feasibility of a railroad and to insure the selection of the best route. This portion, with that in Central America requiring attention, can be finished within a year, if the requisite appropriation should be obtained, since two-thirds of the main line have already been surveyed.

A failure to appropriate would necessitate a cessation of the work by the end of the present fiscal year, the recall of the parties from the field with unfinished tasks, at a sacrifice in the way of an enforced sale of animals, instruments and equipments, in short an abandonment of the entire project without an opportunity to collate and publish the valuable information obtained.

Very respectfully,

R. M. G. BROWN, Executive Officer.

HON. JAMES B. McCREARY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Chairman, it is clear to my mind, as a business proposition, that we ought now to appropriate $65,000 rather than let the work stop, rather than sell out equipments, animals, and instruments now being used in the survey, rather than stop when no report has been made of the work by the three corps of engineers that are in the field. The necessity for the appropriation is so clear to my mind that I think it must be clear to all the members of this House. It was discussed freely in the Committee on Foreign Affairs, having under consideration the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and the committee voted unanimously, with one exception, in favor of putting in this paragraph, with nobody voting against it except the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if I comprehend this matter, the International Conference, composed of representatives of the Argentine Republic, Colombia, Ecuador, Paraguay, Peru, Venezuela, Salvador, Mexico, and the United States, agree upon the survey and construction of an international railway extending from this country through Mexico and Central and South America. It is now proposed to appropriate an additional sum of $65,000 towards paying the cost of surveying the route. I oppose this measure for several reasons. I oppose it because the agreement has not been complied with by at least some of the parties to it.

Mr. McCREARY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. McCREARY. I desire to ask my friend from Tennessee if he has noticed that the paragraph in the appropriation bill provides that we are not to pay any of this money until all of these other republics have paid the amount of their assessments?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I have noticed that paragraph in the bill; but the fact remains that some of the parties to this agreement, as I have already stated, have not complied with its terms.

But, Mr. Chairman, I oppose this measure for the further reason that it is a scheme which not only contemplates the survey of the route, but the construction of the railroad itself. I oppose it because it is projected on the assumption that it is to receive concessions—land grants and subsidies—and is to be exempt from taxation for all time to come. I oppose it, sir, because it is a plan to find an outlet for the sale of our manufactured goods, which, by reason of the protective policy, have been excluded from the other countries of the world, while at the same time the burdens of the Government have been placed upon the shoulders of the consumers of this country, and our commerce has been restricted, embarrassed, and crippled with those nations to which we must look to find a market for the products of the American farm.

I oppose this measure, sir, for the further reason that the survey or construction of a railroad through Mexico, Central and South America, by the aid of this Government, is not within the scope of its objects and purposes. I oppose it because it is not governmental in its nature, but simply a business enterprise. It is not within the purview of the Constitution, but a mere adventure to make money. There is not a member on this side of the Chamber who would vote a dollar to survey or construct a line of railroad anywhere within the limits of the United States. Then for what reason will a Democrat vote to survey or construct a railroad through Central America? There is not a member on this side of the Chamber who would vote a land grant or a subsidy to a railroad situated within our own territorial limits. Then I ask by what process of logic will a Democrat find his way to the conclusion that he can support a scheme which contemplates land grants and subsidies to a railroad situated in South America?

Mr. McCREARY. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him for the purpose of asking a question? Is there anything in this bill that looks to any appropriation on the part of this Government for the construction of a railroad or the donation of land for that purpose?

Mr. BLOUNT. You will most likely find an answer to that by looking at the language of the report. It is set forth by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I will reply to the gentleman's question by saying that I am not basing this argument on the face of the bill which is now before us, but upon the agreement of these parties as set forth in the report of the chairman of the committee. The twelfth subdivision of the agreement of the International Conference is as follows:

That the execution of a work of such magnitude deserves to be further encouraged by subsidies, grants of lands or guarantees of a minimum of interest.

Mr. McCREARY. Now, I ask the gentleman to read the names of the persons signed to that proposition.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. No, I will not take the time to read them. It is not necessary for my argument.

Mr. McCREARY. Then, let me ask the gentleman from Tennessee this question: If sixteen gentlemen from Central and South America do not sign that, and I ask him further if they do not build railroads down there by means of land grants?

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the gentleman from Kentucky if the names of H. G. Davis and Andrew Carnegie do not also appear as signing this document?

Mr. McCREARY. They do and fourteen or fifteen South Americans.

Mr. BUTLER. Well, they are Americans.

Mr. BLOUNT. They prepared the report.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have not been taught to believe that our Government was instituted for the development or for the accomplishment of enterprises such as this. Its glory is not made manifest in the construction of railroads, a subsidized commerce, the pomp of an army, the splendor of a navy, or the glitter of diplomats in foreign courts; but in the dignity, the virtue, the courage, the enterprise, the matchless energy, intelligence, and individuality of its citizens. That spirit which in our brief history has leveled forests, bridged rivers, built cities, and interlaced like a mesh the vast area of the Republic with railroads and telegraph lines—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LANHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I shall only want a moment. There was no objection.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. That spirit, Mr. Chairman, which has erected colleges, fostered the development of the arts, advanced science, and promoted Christianity; that spirit which has astonished the world and blessed mankind by its achievements, is not the result of governmental aid, control, or interference, but it is the inspiration of liberty, made manifest in the grand march of a free people in their progress to the highest intellectual, moral, and material development yet known to the race. It will in the fullness of time, when the exigencies of civilization and commerce demand it, construct the interoceanic canal and the intercontinental railway without governmental surveys, land grants, subsidies, or exemptions.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to oppose my plain speech to the eloquent periods of the gentleman who has just taken his seat, and I should not venture to do so only that I believe that he labors under a misconception of the situation when he claims that the amount herein to be appropriated is in any sense a subsidy.

The grounds which the gentleman takes in his argument against subsidies are high and virtuous grounds and meet my hearty approval.

Before I was a member of this body, and while accorded the privileges of the floor as a member elect, I made my position in relation to them plain to members by opposing the bill which was at that time before the House.

But this contribution towards the expenses of a survey of the territory of our neighboring republics and in concert with them is a temporary expedient resorted to for the purpose of indicating to private enterprise when railroads may be built advantageously, an effort to hasten up by joint effort the development of countries which are the natural friends, allies, and customers of our own. As we increase the surplus of our production it is a question of the first importance to our agricultural and manufacturing interests that these countries shall as quickly as possible become consumers of that surplus.

Every million of dollars that we add to our exports furnishes labor and sustenance to about 12,500 of our people. The nine hundred and fifty-two millions of our exports supports one out of every six of our population. Our population and our productions are increasing with marvelous rapidity and we must resort to unusual means to find consumers if we would avoid suffering on the part of our laborers and ruinously low prices for our producers.

In no direction can we look for a better market for our staple agricultural productions than we will find in the Central American Republics; theirs are the products of tropical and semitropical climes, and they need the wheat and other products of the temperate zone.

They are now comparatively small consumers because their products can not find a market except at too great an expense for transportation. If through the information given by these explorative surveys private enterprise constructs roads which will carry their productions to the world's markets, they will very quickly become consumers on a liberal scale. If this result is brought about by our assistance and coöperation, nothing will be more natural than that they should look to us for their supplies; the very friendship evolved by the joint effect will go far to accomplish that result.

I do not say that private enterprise would not in time make these explorations and open up the various countries to commerce. All that I claim is that by this concert of action which we ourselves invited we will hasten that opening by a generation.

Already some wonderful results have been achieved and I point to one in particular, the discovery of the fact that it is feasible to build a railroad at small expense from Antioquia through the Cauca Valley to Quito, and this is but one of the problems that have been solved.

Gentlemen have expressed fears that in doing this we are committing ourselves to a policy of national railroad building and subsidies. This point has been so thoroughly covered by the gentleman from Kentucky that it is unnecessary for me to consume any of your time in repeating it.

So far nothing of the kind has been proposed or even hinted at. How could we as a nation become owners of a road the first link of which is on Mexican soil and owned by private owners?

As to grants of land and relief from taxation, how can they apply to us when not a foot of the roads are on our soil? There can be no other interpretation, and it has never been hinted until this discussion was opened, but that those clauses referred exclusively to the countries through which the roads were to be built, and were given as a voluntary concession upon their part in order to hasten their construction.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the Congress of the Latin nations of this continent which was convened by our invitation and suggestion was a wise measure. It sought to bring the family of republics upon this continent nearer together. It was the natural outcome of the great Monroe doctrine. We realized that in order to be consistent we must cultivate closer and more helpful relations, having by our attitude prevented European nations from assuming that relation.

In furtherance of that idea certain things were decided upon and the faith of each solemnly pledged. I ask you, sir, in what attitude shall we stand towards them, in what estimation shall we be held if we, the first of all, cancel those agreements? Will it tend to increase their friendship or respect for us? Will it increase our respect for ourselves?

Will they in future trust to the good faith of a people which so easily forgets its obligations voluntarily assumed? Can we in the future blame them, if, refusing to trust to our professions, so belied by our actions, they, turn their eyes to Europe.

I can not, sir, understand the shortsighted policy which will at this stage of the enterprise, when everything is auspicious, when results so satisfactory to all have been accomplished, and when the end is so near abandon it, under circumstances so discreditable to ourselves, and so destructive to our interests.

No portion of our people have a more lively interest in this matter than the gentlemen from agricultural States, and if they would look upon it in its true light, they would insist that the amount appropriated by the committee ($65,000) should stand—

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this is the first opportunity the Democratic members of this House as representatives of the Democratic party have ever had to consider this measure. It is here that this measure begins, so far as the Democratic party is concerned. This side of the House is in no sense responsible for what has occurred. If there should be on us a responsibility for this measure, if we are to be led into this thoroughly unamerican policy by committing our country to entangling alliances with those nations of Central and South America, and with the granting of subsidies, the beginning will be with us here to-day, when this measure shall pass, if it does pass the House, and go to the Senate for the certain approval of that body. Up to this day the Democratic party has no responsibility for this scheme of subsidy. Will we to-day commit the Democratic party to this policy?

Gentlemen of course are not deceived as to the effect of the act of the Fiftieth Congress. It simply proposed a conference between the United States, Mexico, and the Central and South American states and islands lying in the two oceans on either side of the coast of South America; but in the issuing of that invitation, following out the policy which has ever controlled the Democratic party in our foreign relations, Mr. Bayard, then Secretary of State, made use of the following language:

I have to call your attention, your particular attention, to the scope and object of the conference suggested, which, as will be observed, is consultative and recommendatory only. The proposed conference will be wholly without power to bind any of the parties thereto.

This was the call made under the act of 1890. This is the call upon which this conference was held.

Now, sir, there has been a departure, and my friend from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] must observe the fact, as I have again to say, a very grave departure, and one much more significant than would be any further departure, even that by which we would be solemnly committed to carry out the provision made in the eighth section of the agreement reported by the conference—the construction of the railway in Central and South America.

Now, sir, starting out from that beginning, up to this time the Democratic party as represented in this House is in no sense nor in any form committed to this policy. If it shall be committed to it in the future it will be by the act of Democratic members to-day agreeing to this appropriation of this $65,000 in aiding to complete this survey. But before I leave that point I want to say further that by every parliamentary method and compelling five consecutive roll calls the Democratic members of the House in the Fifty-first Congress struggled to obtain even a hearing on the appropriation of the first $65,000; and it was forced through the House by a count of the House, in defiance of all fairness and of all sense of justice. So that, gentlemen, this point in the agreement was carried out by legislation against which Democrats were protesting solemnly from the beginning.

So I say, again, as far as we are concerned, now is the beginning of responsibility, if any shall be assumed. Now is the beginning of the responsibility which will rest upon the Democratic members of this House if this scheme is finally carried out.

Gentlemen, what is the purport and meaning of this scheme as developed under the auspices of this Administration. Let us see. I call gentlemen's attention to just a few specific facts as to what is intended. I wish to call attention only to the eighth, twelfth, and fifteenth provisions in the agreement made by Henry G. Davis and Andrew Carnegie, pretending to act upon the part of the United States, assuming to act for the American people and the American Government, and those other gentlemen who signed the agreement for certain South American states. Now, gentlemen, I hope that it will not be overlooked that up to the time the paper was signed, not one word had been said, either by your Secretary of State or by Congress, which intimated that these gentlemen were authorized to execute an agreement in relation to this railway and for any other purpose, yet what will be found to be the ultimate expression of the opinion of our present Secretary of State, Mr. Blaine?

Now, let us see what these three propositions are:

8. That in case the results of the survey demonstrate the practicability and the advisability of the railroad, proposals for the construction of either the whole line or of sections thereof shall be solicited.

Mark the language! Then comes another:

12. That the execution of a work of such magnitude deserves to be further encouraged by subsidies, grants of land, or guaranties of the minimum of interest.

Can anything be clearer than that? Can those who shall succeed us here, when a proposition is brought forward to appropriate money to construct this railroad with high guaranties by the United States—for if it is ever constructed under this agreement it will be by the United States—can they then pretend that there was ever any misapprehension as to the basis upon which the matter proceeded?

Mr. McCREARY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCREARY. The gentleman states that if this road is ever constructed, it will be constructed by us.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir. I think so.

Mr. McCREARY. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the Argentine Republic has not already constructed 982 miles of this railroad up to the Bolivian line, and whether Mexico has not constructed over 1,000 miles?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not talking about any railroad already constructed; I am talking about the road that is to be constructed.

Mr. BLOUNT. The road to which the gentleman from Kentucky refers was all constructed before this survey.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, that was all built before the survey was made. I have reference now only to this survey and the road for which the survey is made and which is yet to be constructed.

Mr. McCREARY. I want to ask the gentleman further whether 387 miles of this road have not been finished with the last year and 1,800 miles of it put under construction?

Mr. HOLMAN. That has nothing at all to do with this matter. I make no answer except this: If so large a portion of the road is already constructed, why can you not rely upon those nations and private enterprise to complete the balance? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, if this measure passes and both parties are thereby committed to this policy, this will not be the last time that this unfortunate paragraph will be read in this House and rung in the ears of our successors; this paragraph which says that "the execution of a work of such magnitude deserves to be further encouraged by subsidies, grants of land, or guaranties of the minimum of interest." Who drew up that paper which it is proposed to ratify by the act of the Democratic party? Who drew it up? Two men, professing to act for you and for the American people, Henry G. Davis and Andrew Carnegie. Will you ratify their unauthorized act?

Mr. McCREARY. Read the other names.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am speaking of those for whom the gentleman claims that we are responsible. I have read those. We are not responsible for the others, the representatives of Central and South American States. Now, Mr. Chairman, one step further—and I ask the serious attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] to this matter. Let us see what is the interpretation put by this Administration upon the paper—the alleged agreement—from which I have read. Mr. Blaine, Secretary of State, says:

A very important feature of the report to which I specially direct your attention will be found in the international declaration—

He calls the agreement an "international declaration"— that the line of the proposed railway shall be forever neutral territory; that the materials necessary for the construction and operation of the road shall be admitted free of customs duty, and that its property and revenue shall be always exempt from all forms of taxation. This guaranty—

Does my friend from Kentucky misapprehend the meaning of that word "guaranty" used by the Secretary of State in interpreting this act?

this guaranty having all the force of a treaty.

That is the language of your Secretary of State.

Mr. COOMBS. I will ask the gentleman if that does not mean the guaranty that the road passing through those South American countries shall be free from taxation by them?

Mr. HOLMAN. The language of the Secretary of State is, "This guaranty having all the force of a treaty." Does not my friend see that if any part of the paper has the force of a treaty the whole of it has?

Mr. COOMBS. It does not apply to us. There is not a mile of the proposed road that is to be within our territory. We can not make any guaranty of that kind, because we will not have any control of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. "This guaranty having all the force of a treaty"—guaranty of what?

Mr. COOMBS. A guaranty that the line of the road and its property in those South American countries shall not be taxed.

Mr. HOLMAN. A guaranty of the minimum amount of interest, a guaranty of subsidy, a guaranty of land grants.

Mr. COOMBS [emphatically]. That language does not affect us one iota.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend must not get excited over this matter. [Laughter.] I know that when these great schemes are on hand gentlemen are apt to have their interest and feelings aroused. They naturally beget an active interest in the measures. I remember seeing it when the Union Pacific bill was passed here at the dead hour of the night. Yet my friend is pleasant and good natured about it.

Mr. SIMPSON. All these schemes have found somebody to support them.

Mr. COOMBS. We want to make a market for our agricultural products.

Mr. HOLMAN. You want to make a market for our agricultural products! Does my friend expect anybody to adopt that view of this project? Do they not raise at the other end of this continent the same products that we do?

Mr. COOMBS. Not through all Central America.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not the Argentine Republic sending thousands of bushels of wheat abroad? Has it not a climate similar to our own? This project would simply open up facilities for the Argentine Republic to reach the markets that we desire to reach.

Mr. COOMBS. The Argentine Republic would not be affected by this line. It is on the other side of the mountains.

Mr. BLOUNT. I insist that the gentleman from Indiana be permitted to proceed without interruption.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, one other point. I have not been able to get my friend from Kentucky to answer my question, by what agreement have the States south of us, alleged to be involved in this matter, made themselves responsible for one dollar of the cost of this survey? Let us see.

Mr. MCCREARY. Do you want an answer?

Mr. HOLMAN. Not now; I will yield a little later.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope my friend from Indiana will be allowed to continue five minutes longer. He has been interrupted a good deal.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call attention to the fact that, as shown by this record, there is no agreement upon our part to pay a dollar, or on the part of anybody else.

Mr. MCCREARY. Upon whose part?

Mr. HOLMAN. Upon the part of the United States.

Mr. MCCREARY. Do you want an answer to that question?

Mr. HOLMAN. If you will read—

Mr. MCCREARY. The gentleman asked me a question. Will he stop long enough to allow me to answer it?

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not, unless my friend—

Mr. MCCREARY. You ought not ask me a question unless you will give time to have it answered. I can answer it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have heretofore asked the question twice; this is the third time.

Mr. MCCREARY. I am ready to answer it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will try to answer it myself. I will answer it by reading instead of by arguing.

It was resolved—

This was the last meeting, as I understand, of this Conference.

A MEMBER. From what page are you reading?

Mr. HOLMAN. Page 63.

It was resolved to request the delegates of the countries that have accepted the recommendations of the Pan-American Conference respecting the Intercontinental Railway to communicate with their respective governments in regard to the payment into the United States Treasury of the proportion agreed upon by each of them towards meeting the expenses of the intercontinental railway commission, it being necessary that the committee on finance know the amount that can be depended upon.

"This committee wishes also to inform the delegates—

This refers to the money for the survey—

"This committee wishes also to inform the delegates of the commission that the Government of the United States, in addition to $65,000, the amount of its appropriation towards this fund for the present year, appropriated an equal amount for the coming year. It would consequently seem advisable—

Very mild—

"and important—

That is better—

"that the other countries act in the same manner, in order that the progress of the work of the commission might proceed accordingly.

"The meeting was then adjourned, subject to the call of the chairman."

"In this connection the chairman of this committee stated that in regard to the manner of inviting the other governments to pay their quota of the fund into the United States Treasury the delegates should act accordingly to their own judgment.

Now, let us see what their action was.

Mr. Guirola desired to have a better understanding as to the exact agreement come to by the countries in regard to this "quota." His notion was that the money to be paid by each government in proportion to its population was to be paid but once, although he was entirely satisfied that this amount would be inadequate for the carrying out of the work of this commission. His country was willing to do all that would be deemed necessary, and thought the other countries would do likewise.

As there was no positive understanding upon this question, Mr. Parraga believed that it would be advisable to establish an approximate estimate of the cost of the projected preliminary work and obtain accordingly the necessary appropriations from the government.

This point being fully discussed, it was resolved, on motion of Mr. Rengifo, that the committee on surveys be requested to prepare a report in regard to the approximate cost of the projected work, in order that the question of procuring money may be discussed with better knowledge at the next meeting.

There, gentlemen, ends any pretense of agreement on the part of the United States or these other States to furnish any portion of this fund for the survey. It was left in abeyance. But I refer to proceedings further on. When the Argentine Republic was reached, inasmuch as they had already constructed an extensive railway system in their country, they declined to have anything to do with this. That is the great republic at the other end of this great hemisphere—

Mr. COOMBS. The other side of the mountains.

Mr. HOLMAN. A country with a climate similar to our own and producing similar products. They thought it was enough to tax their people for matters within their own country, without going into foreign countries to find objects upon which to expend taxes drawn from their people. Further on we find the action of the little Republic of Uruguay; and it is from these smaller republics that a great government like ours may sometimes learn a sublime lesson of justice. When that little republic was appealed to, this is the language of their spokesman:

The Republic could not, in justice, tax its citizens twice for the same cause, neither could the Government recommend the payment for what has already once been paid. It would be as natural to contribute pro rata to the cost of surveys to be made in corresponding parts as it would be unequitable under the pretext of future studies, to pay for surveys already made.

Mr. COOMBS. The gentleman will allow me to point out that Uruguay and Buenos Ayres and the Argentine Republic could have no part in this project, because they are on the other side of the Cordilleras.

Mr. BLOUNT. They were, however, allowed to vote upon it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly. They were parties to this agreement.

There is another fact to which I wish to call attention. Our people are to be burdened with taxation to carry on this foreign scheme—to encourage this policy so much in conflict with the spirit of our Government and the advice of our most illustrious men, Washington and his immediate successors having warned the people against "entangling alliances" with any foreign power.

Let us see, Mr. Chairman, how we have drifted along in this matter, how eager gentlemen unconsciously have shown themselves to impose taxes upon our people, to use their money in foreign enterprises, when other nations are more cautious and more provident in the care of their own people. How much have we paid on this account? Two appropriations of $65,000, or $130,000 in all, and, if this report contains all the information we have, gentlemen, all of these other countries together paying only $8,028.12.

Mr. COOMBS. Twenty-three thousand five hundred and eighty-four dollars.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Indiana reads from the report of the Secretary of State, which is embodied in the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. COOMBS. Well, here is a later report than that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I admit that there is another item here which gentlemen may possibly take into their calculation. We find that Chile has paid $3,028.12, Colombia $4,000, Costa Rica $1,000. That is all of the actual cash paid. But there is another item here.

Brazil, in process of collection, $15,000.

"Process of collection." That means, gentlemen, that the matter is under diplomatic investigation, that Brazil is being requested by our Minister of State to pay the money, and that it is "in process of collection."

Mr. MCCREARY. I know the gentleman desires to be accurate in his statement. Will he not permit me—

Mr. HOLMAN. Not now. I say, Mr. Chairman, that in the face of this you have gone on and appropriated $130,000, and now wish to appropriate $65,000 more, and there have been $8,028.12 collected from all of these other nations combined.

Mr. MCCREARY. I know the gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MCCREARY. I want to read to him the report from the State Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will yield to the gentleman presently.

I say, Mr. Chairman, this is a matter of sixty-four millions of people in this country appropriating $130,000, against on the other hand an appropriation by some fifty millions of people of the other nations of only $8,028 for this alleged international purpose, when the whole money is to be spent on their soil.

Mr. MCCREARY. The gentleman is wrong in his calculation. I have in my hand a letter from the Department of State of April 15 in response to a telegram which I sent asking for information, and find that the amounts contributed towards the intercontinental railway survey to be as follows: Chile, $3,028.12; the United States of Colombia paid August 20, $4,000; Costa Rica, $1,000, and Brazil $15,000. Brazil has now paid that amount, so that about $24,000 have been paid.

Mr. COOMBS. Brazil has paid the $15,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, made one payment, and we are asked now to make the third.

Mr. COOMBS. But that one payment includes two years.

Mr. MCCREARY. In addition to that Bolivia has paid $2,000, and Ecuador and Nicaragua $2,000, or $1,000 each.

Mr. HOLMAN. So, then, Brazil has now paid her first quota. That results, when all is told, in showing that they have paid, assuming these corrections to be included, to this fund to which you have appropriated $130,000 the sum of a little more than $23,000 on the part of a population of 50,000,000 of people.

Mr. MCCREARY. Why, Brazil alone has paid $15,000.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. But that, I understand, is for two years.

Mr. BLOUNT. And Brazil has 15,000,000 of population, it should be remembered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I correct myself here. Brazil's $15,000 is to be added to the $8,028.12. This will cover the whole amount paid into this fund by these South American republics, assuming the statement of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] to be correct, which I of course do.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I close with this reiteration of what I have already said to the House, that until now you gentlemen on this side of the House, and the party which you represent, have been in no shape, manner, or form, by your action in connection with this matter, responsible for what has been already done here. Your responsibility begins now, and need I say that if you appropriate this $65,000 to ratify what has transpired in the light of the interpretation placed upon this agreement by the Secretary of State, Mr. Blaine, you do it with your eyes open, understanding fully the responsibility that it imposes? Need I say beyond that, that in my humble judgment you will irrevocably commit the Democratic party, so far as your action could do it, to that line of policy denounced by the Democratic party through its whole history unless it shall rise up and indignantly reject your action.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. The question I would like to ask is for the purpose of obtaining your views as to how we are going to guarantee the neutrality of a railroad which exists in a foreign country?

Mr. HOLMAN. Why it is the easiest thing in the world. You simply tax your people to raise an army and send them down to these nations of Central and South America to protect the road. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX of Tennessee. Well, that is the only way that I could see to do it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Your action here in adopting this proposition would be a guaranty on your part, because you are legislating in full view of the interpretation the Secretary of State has put upon this question. I ask you, gentlemen, can you, when the injustice to your country and to the traditions of your party of this measure so clearly appears—can you say that you are justified in giving this measure your support? You vote, gentlemen, for or against this appropriation of $65,000 with a full knowledge of all of the facts, and I appeal to you in behalf of the Democratic party, with its unwavering policy, its history and traditions of a hundred years, that it shall not suffer at our hands in this House, thereby irreparably injuring the best interests of our Government. [Applause.]

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] rise to oppose the amendment?

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. I rise for the purpose of speaking on the pending question.

The CHAIRMAN. Which side?

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. I am in favor of the report of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. I thought the Chairman was going to ask me on which political side, and it would have been a difficult matter to say, after the appeals that I have heard made to members of the Democratic party to stand by its traditions and its history. It is pretty hard to tell what is Democracy, if you are to judge by the statements of certain members of the party. It is a broad party, having many peculiar elements in it with an omnibus clause for the general welfare that embraces us all. I find here in the Democratic platform of 1884 the following words:

We favor an American continental policy, based upon more intimate commercial and political relations with the fifteen sister republics of North, Central, and South America, but entangling alliances with none.

Mr. HOLMAN. This measure proposes entangling alliances.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. I was a member of the Fiftieth Congress, in a Democratic House, and that House conceived the idea of the Pan-American Congress. The bill being presented, I believe, by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY]. It became a law, and that congress held its meetings under the auspices of a Democratic national administration.

Mr. MCCREARY. Approved by President Cleveland.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. The bill was approved by President Cleveland.

Mr. MCCREARY. And Secretary Bayard sent out the invitation.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. And the invitations were sent out by Secretary Bayard.

Mr. HOLMAN. Did that include this railroad survey?

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. My dear friend, if a railroad through the three Americas should logically result from that convention, would you object to it?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, I should.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. You would object to a railroad. You would prefer the old ox team, I suppose?

Mr. HOLMAN. Greatly, greatly. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Well, fortunately for the country the Democratic party is a progressive party. It is a party which, in spite of some of its members, is bound to keep up with the procession, and those members have either got to keep up or fall out of line, one or the other. They can not read us out of the party because we are a little ahead of them, because we prefer modern thoughts, modern inventions, and recognize the events of to-day. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, I come from a section of the country that is vitally interested in this question of building a railroad through Central and South America. I come from the West—from the queen city of the West—the city of St. Louis. I have the honor to be a representative in part of that magnificent city, and I know the people of my city are a unit without regard to party in appealing to Congress and saying: "Do all in your power toward bringing about the happy union with these people of Central and South America. We want to deal with them. We want to bring them closer to us in the bonds of commercial union and of brotherhood."

This is free America, North, Central, and South, and we are all one, aiming in the same direction; and there is no grander inspiration to-day than taking the engines of to-day's civilization, your railways, and penetrating through that section, bringing commerce to those people and to us, and letting us deal with them as brothers. We will get the lion's share of the trade. We will divert to the United States the hundred and more million dollars of trade they now annually send to England. The manufacturers of this country will pour their products into those countries, and in return it will receive their products. In Mexico to-day what has been the result of the introduction of these railroads?

Mr. MCCREARY. The trade has been quadrupled.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. I have had the pleasure of visiting portions of that country, and there you will find branches of every American enterprise represented, branches of your workshops and factories dealing with them directly. Let us stop this small five-cent way of doing business. [Applause on the Republican side.] Let us rise to the dignity of a nation, and a nation that Central and South America to-day looks to with pride; they will feel that here is a nation that has the strength and courage to defend not alone our own liberties, but their liberties if necessary, and to perpetuate on American soil free institutions in America, whether North, Central, or South. [Applause.]

Mr. REED. Those sentiments are very beautiful, but they are not Democratic. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word on the question before the committee. It has been urged by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in favor of the motion made by the chairman of the committee to strike out the appropriation for the continuation of this survey in Central and South America, that we have had no understanding that we were to make any appropriation on the part of this Government.

In the remarks which I had the honor to make to the House the other day, and which I will not now recur to, because I wish to discuss this upon the simple motion made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], I demonstrated by the publication of the law itself that this appropriation of $65,000 made by a former Congress, and proposed to be made again by this, was simply an appropriation made by the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives in accordance with existing law. We passed the act when the gentlemen from Indiana and Georgia were in the Congress calling this Pan-American Congress into existence, and we appropriated $75,000 to pay its expenses.

Delegates were sent from Mexico and from every other one of the Central and Southern American republics. They came here at our invitation and held this conference with us; and among other subject-matters that were brought to their attention was the feasibility of connecting the three Americas together by a line of railway. Everybody conceded that if that were practicable it was a matter greatly to be desired in the interest of North America, Mexico, Central, and South America. There was no difference of opinion upon that question, and we have always been of the opinion that we ought to draw close the lines of commercial relations and friendly relations between our own and the sister republics lying in Central and South America.

This opinion has been expressed by both political parties as being a desideratum, something very much to be wished for by all. The question then arose before that conference, How shall we ascertain the fact of the feasibility of connecting the three Americas by a railway? The answer was plain and evident: it was the only answer that could be made. The instrument of the engineer alone can demonstrate the feasibility of constructing this longitudinal railroad, extending from North America, through Mexico to Central America and South America.

The question then arose before the Commission in Washington, How can we best ascertain the fact, and see certainly whether upon the sides of the Andes we can construct a railway? A great many said it could not be done; and that was said when the proposition was under consideration as to whether we could construct a railroad across the Rocky Mountains. Everybody was contending that it was impossible. Then the great Senator from Missouri [Mr. Benton] said to the doubting people of that day: "Yes; you can build it"; and when he was asked, "Which line will you go?" he said: "Follow the steps of the great engineer of the forest, the buffalo, who always crosses the mountain at the lowest dip and nearest the water." They did it, and you have that fact accomplished which was thought to be impossible, a railroad running through the Sierra Nevadas and terminating on the Pacific coast. So the question arose as to the feasibility of the construction of this road; and they said we will try it by a preliminary survey.

The gentleman from Indiana wants to know what was this agreement. "We will agree that we shall pay for this preliminary survey so much for every million of population, to furnish the sums which will be ample to equip this preliminary survey party, and send them to make their reports to all the governments concerned in it."

The gentleman was very careful to read some portions of this matter, but not the other. We want a free, full, and fair consideration of this whole matter, and if it is susceptible of the construction that is placed upon it by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] then you ought not to vote for it; but I think I can demonstrate that there is no such objection, as they seem to believe, on account of the agreement made in this Pan-American Conference.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCCREARY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi be allowed to proceed for five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I thank the committee.

The thirteenth section of the agreement of the Pan-American Conference on that subject, relating to the survey, makes this provision:

That the salaries of the commission, as well as the expense incident to the preliminary and final surveys, shall be assumed by all the nations accepting, in proportion to population, according to the latest official census, or in the absence of a census by agreement with the other several governments.

Now, it was ascertained upon that basis, according to the census of 1880, that the share of the United States would be $65,000 per annum until the survey was completed. We have made two appropriations of $65,000, and this report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs proposes simply another appropriation of $65,000. It was said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that these other governments had not paid their proportion. Why, by this letter, dated April 16 of this year, from the Secretary of State, it is shown that the various Governments of Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, and Brazil have actually paid $23,028.12 of their quota on the amount to be paid by them for carrying on this survey.

Mr. BLOUNT. What about the other ten?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. The gentleman asks, "What about the other ten?" Why, by your own bill you have expressly provided that not a dollar of the $65,000 shall be expended unless all the other Central and South American nations pay their amounts, so that we guarded your bill better than you thought.

Mr. MCCREARY. Is it not true that the Argentine Republic declined to contribute money, but agreed to build the railway through her entire territory?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Undoubtedly so.

Mr. MCCREARY. And is it not also true that Mexico declined to contribute money on the ground that she was building a railroad through her territory?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Yes; and that she had already largely completed it. Now, Mr. Chairman, this provision, which is for the carrying out of a portion of that agreement, in which my friend from Indiana seems to see a treaty by which we are bound to build this road—

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Blaine says so.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Well, I do not agree with that construction. I do not agree with your construction or with the construction of any gentleman who takes that view. The language of the agreement does not justify it. The gentleman from Indiana is simply imagining something which does not exist, and which the very terms of the agreement show does not exist. If the gentleman will refer to the ninth paragraph he will find this:

That the construction, management, and operation of the line should be at the expense of the concessionaires, or of the persons to whom they sublet the work or transfer their rights with due formalities, the consent of the respective governments being obtained.

So it will be seen that there can not by possibility be any call upon the Government of the United States for the construction of the railway through these Central and South American countries. Who are to be the conceders? Only the Central and South American Republics. The Government of the United States can not be called upon to concede an acre of land or to subscribe one dollar in bonds or in any other form.

Why? Simply because the lines of road through the United States which are to be regarded as part of the line are already completed and in operation, and the parts of the line that remain to be constructed are all in Central and South America. It is clear, therefore, that the Central and South American countries are the ones who are to make the concessions of land or subsidy, whatever they may be, and not the United States. And, Mr. Chairman, we have guarded this bill (the majority of the committee agreeing) by providing that not one dollar of this $65,000 shall be available until the Central and South American Governments shall have paid their quotas.

Mr. HITT was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi.

Mr. HEARD. Will the gentleman from Mississippi permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Certainly, sir.

Mr. HEARD. The gentleman states that our agreement as to this survey has been consummated with the exception of this payment—that this will complete our contribution.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Undoubtedly. We have a corps of engineers in the field there now, with an officer of the United States at the head of them, who are investigating and reporting upon the feasibility of the construction of the line, and a single appropriation more of $65,000 on the part of the United States, with the contributions of the Central and South American Republics, will be sufficient to complete the work. That is shown by the report.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it may be said, and it has been said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], that those countries have not contributed all that they agreed to contribute. Admitting that, we guard this appropriation by providing that if they do not pay their contributions this money shall not be available. Thus our action is made a spur to them, so that if they really want this road built, of which they are to be the principal beneficiaries on account of the undeveloped condition of their territory, they will be all the more likely to come forward and contribute their quotas.

Mr. HEARD. In other words, this is an inducement to them.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. It is an inducement to them to pay their share. This provision has received the approbation of the whole committee and it is simply carrying out the agreement made in terms.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Under this agreement the United States agree that this road shall be neutral. Now, suppose that Mexico and any of the other nations down there should become engaged in war, would they, or either of them, be allowed under that provision to ship troops over this road, or would not the United States be bound, under this guaranty, to interfere to prevent the Government of Mexico, or of any of these countries, from shipping provisions, munitions of war, or troops over the road, and would we not thus be involved in their struggles?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Not at all. The idea is that when this railway is constructed, whoever may construct it, it shall be neutral territory to this extent, that there shall not be any obstruction interposed to the transportation of freight or passengers through these countries. That is all. The object is to secure this road as a neutral road under all the mutations and changes which may occur in Central and South America. Now, the proposition is to strike from the bill the provision which has been put in by the committee to carry out in good faith our agreement. Sir, shall it be said that it is not important to North America, to Central and South America, and to Mexico, to demonstrate by the actual alignment made of this road along the sides of the Andes that such a thing is feasible?

It is a great enterprise in which we take no more and no other interest than simply to demonstrate to the capitalists of the world, whether they come from across the water or are within our own borders, that such a railroad is feasible. We are not committed to the appropriation of one dollar. We are not committed to subscribing a single dollar in bonds or otherwise. We could not give land if we wanted to, because there is not an acre of American soil over which this railroad will pass. I say, therefore, the objections to this proposition do not rest upon tenable grounds. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I may be strangely deluded, but I have been taught to believe that Republicanism and Democracy are both opposed to subsidies. Yet, from the course assumed by this debate I find there is in this House a very strong party in favor of subsidies. Now, I may be singularly constituted; but I am internally, externally, and eternally opposed to subsidies. [Applause.] Such being the case I feel like raising my voice at this time against our putting our hands into the Treasury of the United States and paying out the money collected from the hard earnings of the people in order to create a subsidy or to prepare for a subsidy. Believing such a proposition to be anti-Republican, anti-Democratic, anti-American, and contrary to the best interests of all or nearly all classes of the people of this country, I feel it my duty to oppose the proposition.

What is proposed to be accomplished? It is proposed to investigate whether a certain route be practicable or impracticable for the construction of a railroad to a section of country in which a railroad, if it be built, can not pay, taking into consideration the entire trade that we have to-day with the South American and Central American States, 1 per cent interest on the cost of building the road. Our experience has been that, in order to make our trade with the South American States prosperous and successful, we have had to subsidize to a certain extent the shipping interests of this country. Now, if you will look at the amount of trade we are doing with the South American States, if you will consider our shipping interests with that country, which, as I understand, have been subsidized to a certain extent, you will find that the building of this road, even if a practicable route be found, could not possibly pay 1 per cent on the amount of trade that we have with those countries.

Mr. COOMBS. How do you make those figures?

Mr. BAKER. I have simply here the statement—

Mr. COOMBS. Please give us the figures; it is easy to make statements.

Mr. BAKER. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me.

[Here the hammer fell.]

[In the absence of objection, Mr. BAKER was permitted to proceed.]

Mr. BAKER. I will allow the gentleman to make the figures and give the demonstration, and I will give him a part of my time that he may do so. I have figured far enough to know that my statements are true, taking into consideration our entire trade with those countries.

In the next place, could the railroad which we may construct in those South American states compete with the shipping interests of this country, even if the route be a practicable one, even if the road were built—even if the interests of trade demanded apparently that it should be built? Let us ask ourselves that question. Capital is very wary. Men never invest their money except upon a strong probability of realizing a fair return on their investment. Private individuals are not willing to invest money in this survey.

The man who stands at the head of this interest is, I understand, one who has been subsidized by the Congress of the United States to the extent of a million and a half of dollars annually for the last twenty-five or thirty years; and he asks now that we put our hands into the Treasury of the United States and vote $65,000 toward making this survey in order to ascertain whether a practicable route can be found for building a railroad connecting this country with the South American States. They tell us that a certain amount of railroad has already been built in these Southern States; yet if you will turn to page 43 of this report you will find that those roads will not be directly in line with this road, but it is proposed to use existing lines as far as possible.

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to occupy further time, but I do hope there is in this land a class of men who will say to the Congress of the United States, "Stay thy hand in the subsidies thou art creating and which are oppressing the millions in order to build up classes in this country." [Applause.]

Mr. KYLE. Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of this session of Congress when resolutions were solemnly adopted by members of this House, with every indication of an earnest purpose to carry them out, against subsidies, I was encouraged to believe that the day for subsidies by this Government was at an end. But, sir, before this Congress is near through with its session, we find a proposition presented here for appropriating $65,000 of the people's money for what purpose? Gentlemen, I appeal to you to call a halt right here. I ask each and every one of you to present, to ask yourself the question, for what am I voting this money; where is it going?

Mr. Chairman, the idea of subsidizing railroads has become obnoxious to our people. We hear the cry going up all over our land against it. There is not a Democrat on this floor to-day who would have the temerity to stand here and to propose to vote a subsidy to a railroad in our own country. But what is the proposition here? It is to vote a subsidy to aid in the survey of a railroad—not in America—it has not even that much merit—but a survey of an imaginary route in South America and these other countries.

I ask you, sir, upon what sort of a pretext can any Democrat on this floor justify himself in that course before his constituents after having voted for the resolution that we passed here early in this session? I ask how can any man justify himself now who supports this measure? It is said that we have already begun the work and we ought to carry it on. In reply to that my judgment is that it was wrong in the beginning and we are only intensifying the wrong to continue the work. It is time to stop now before we go further.

And not only that, Mr. Chairman, but I ask you and these gentlemen to put the question squarely to yourselves. Gentlemen, is it right? Predicated on this bed rock, and tested according to this idea of fairness and justice, is it right that the money of the American people shall be appropriated to any such purpose as we contemplate here? I doubt not, sir, that the mere statement of the question carries with it the negative of that idea. What, take money out of the pockets of our own people, who are already to-day being taxed beyond their capacity to pay, as I think I can truthfully assert, take their money and vote it to be used in surveying a route for a railroad in South America!

Are you dealing justly by the constituencies who sent you here when you engage in such business as that? Where is your warrant for it? Under the Constitution, do you think you will be justified in such action? Do you think that you are conscientiously and properly discharging the high trusts confided to you when you engage in such an enterprise? Do you think this right at any time, but especially when you hear a cry coming up from all parts of the land, from Maine to California, amongst the agricultural people, who are telling you that you are already taxing them beyond their capacity to pay?

Where is this thing to stop? Can you not stop with your subsidies in America? Can you not be contented with having voted away all the immense domain of this country? Can you not be content with having subsidized the steamships, and having voted the money of the people to railroads, without now seeking to enlarge your boundaries and go into foreign countries and take the money from your own impoverished citizens and vote it to construct railroads for their benefit? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, this question is one that can not be decided by excitement or undue enthusiasm. It is a cold proposition and ought to be weighed and considered in that manner.

Mr. HOUK of Ohio. A very cool proposition.

Mr. BUTLER. There is no question in the mind of any member of this House that the time never has been when the railroads, mile for mile, could compete with water transportation. That time has never been. There is no point on the eastern or northern seacoasts of South America but that is nearer to us by water than by rail. There is no point on the western coast of South America but is nearer to the United States, nearer to the harbor of San Francisco, than it is by rail, and we can not build a railroad through Central America and South America to compete mile for mile with the water transportation we have already, so that there will be no lessening of transportation, and no advantage to be gained in that way.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, even the new markets that it opens up, it having to pass through the interior region of Central and South America, will be agricultural markets, and will therefore create more open and direct competition with the agricultural interests of this country, rather than with the manufacturing or other interests. Furthermore, let me ask, if it were possible that it could be built, is this the way to do it? When this report was first made Secretary Blaine made a report to the President, in which he said that our share of the assessment for the surveys would be $65,000. We have paid that sum twice over, and still they come back and ask us for $65,000 more. The whole of it was to be but $65,000 originally, and we have paid $130,000 already, and now they want $65,000 more. Where is it to end?

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] says that we have guarded it about with a provision that these other nations must pay their proportion first. But we have already paid twice, and they have not paid once. The whole amount that they have paid is only $24,000, paid by all of them combined, and we have paid our own assessment twice, a total of $130,000, and we are called upon for a third payment now, when one payment was to suffice in the beginning.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] made an eloquent argument trying to drive us into the idea that this must be a grand and not a 5-cent country. Every time any attempt is made here in America to loot the Treasury we are appealed to to sustain our national pride; and this appeal is made simply for the purpose of fooling the people and making them willing to submit to robbery under the hope that the great American eagle can thus soar a little higher than it might under other circumstances. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia—

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I shall not occupy the attention of the House but a few moments. I feel that certain arguments have been presented to the committee which should not pass unnoticed. It has been stated by the opponents of this appropriation that we are leading them on to subsidies and to Government aid in the construction of this railroad. There is nothing in this bill that seeks to appropriate one dollar for the purpose of constructing a railroad. The purpose of this bill is simply to appropriate $65,000 more to finish the preliminary survey.

Mr. SCOTT. Would not that lead to an appropriation for the railroad?

Mr. McCREARY (continuing). That is all there is in it, and it does not lead to a subsidy. It does not lead to Government aid.

Mr. SNODGRASS. The $65,000 itself is a subsidy.

Mr. McCREARY. It does nothing more than was done when officers of the United States Government were sent down to Nicaragua to make a survey to ascertain if the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans could be connected by a canal. The Government of the United States made an appropriation for that survey. We also sent officers to Panama to make a survey to ascertain whether it was feasible to construct a canal at Panama. The reports made by Sullivan and by Selfridge are interesting, and their work was paid for by the United States.

When we have nearly finished this survey, when we have appropriated $130,000 for it, when $65,000 more will finish that work, we are asked to abandon the work, we are asked to sell out the equipments, instruments, animals, etc., that the surveying corps have been using, and to lose by a forced sale nearly as much as the $65,000 we are now asked to appropriate.

Mr. CARUTH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McCREARY. Yes.

Mr. CARUTH. Is it a fact, as claimed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BUTLER], that the original estimate for making this survey was $65,000?

Mr. McCREARY. It is not the fact. The estimate was $65,000 per annum.

Mr. CARUTH. For how many years?

Mr. McCREARY. During the making of the survey.

Mr. SNODGRASS. For all time to come, and increasing annually.

Mr. McCREARY. This matter grew out of the holding of the International American Conference. A bill passed this House, which was signed by President Cleveland, providing for "the consideration of questions relating to the improvement of business intercourse and means of direct communication between the countries of the western hemisphere."

When Mr. Bayard invited the delegations from the various Central and South American republics to come here, in the invitation he set forth the very language that I have read; and when the International American Conference assembled the first thing it did was to appoint a committee consisting of the two United States commissioners and fifteen gentlemen who represented the republics south of us to look into the subject of improved business intercourse and into the question of commercial union between the countries of the western hemisphere, and that committee reported an agreement, which has been read to-day by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

That agreement does not pledge the United States to the payment of a dollar in aid of the construction of the railroad. The only pledge that that agreement put upon the United States was that the people of the United States would pay $1,000 for every million of inhabitants that we had in the United States toward the preliminary survey, and the delegates from the other republics agreed that those various republics that were represented should pay $1,000 for every million of inhabitants annually during the making of the survey.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I wish to ask my colleague a question.

Mr. McCREARY. I would like to yield to my colleague [Mr. MONTGOMERY] to answer his question.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman from Kentucky was asked whether the statement I made regarding the first estimate of the cost of this survey was true, and he said it was not. That makes a straight question of veracity between us. I wish to answer his question. May I have the privilege?

Mr. McCREARY. Yes. I was not contradicting you, but denying the correctness of your information—

Mr. BUTLER. I read from the letter of James G. Blaine to the President, on page 44 of the report:

It is proposed that a survey to ascertain the best and most economical routes be made under the direction of an international commission, and that the expense be shared by the several nations of the hemisphere in proportion to their respective populations. The share of the United States is estimated to be $65,000, and I would respectfully suggest the propriety of securing from Congress an appropriation for that purpose.

There is not a word about per annum in it, but it is a direct statement that $65,000 is the estimated expense on the part of the United States.

Mr. McCREARY. My answer to the gentleman from Iowa—

Mr. BUTLER. Is this, that I told the truth.

Mr. McCREARY. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BUTLER] has read a letter written by Mr. Blaine.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. CARUTH. I ask unanimous consent that it be extended. Several members objected.

Mr. McCREARY. I am anxious to answer the question of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman should have the privilege of answering. Of course, if he says anything new on the subject, I would like the same privilege.

Mr. McCREARY. The gentleman from Iowa has read from the letter of the Secretary of State [Mr. Blaine], and it contains exactly the language he referred to. If, however, he will look, as my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia, and other members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs know at the proceedings of the International American Conference, he will find that it was agreed that each country should pay until the work of making the preliminary survey was completed, an amount equivalent to $1,000 per million of inhabitants. The Secretary of State may have thought that the work could be finished within one year, but he was mistaken in that.

I have here a statement of the chief officer of the international survey, in which he says one more appropriation will be sufficient to finish the preliminary survey of the continental railway; and, I say, as we have gone this far in this preliminary survey, and as it has been instrumental in leading capitalists already to invest their money, because about 1,800 miles of this line of railway have been put under contract within the last year, we should now go on and finish it.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman was allowed to proceed to answer that question, and that answer was made over my objection, and when the question was asked if any one objected, I objected; but the gentleman has consumed more time than any other member of this House on this debate, and was so courteous during that time that he would not allow me ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the objection of the gentleman from Tennessee. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. BLOUNT. I only wish a few moments. I have stated already largely what I desire to say. I wish to call attention to the fact that it is alleged that the Government of the United States is obliged to make this appropriation of $65,000 in this bill.

This would be the third appropriation made by this Government in pursuance of what the Pan-American Congress agreed ought to be the share of the United States. I want to invite attention to the utter failure of most of the other governments under this rule to make any contribution at all. The population of the republics south of us represented in that conference is estimated at 50,000,000. If, according to that rate, they had made their second contribution, they would have paid $100,000, whereas we have paid $130,000; if they had paid one-third, as we are invited to do, it would have been $150,000, and we are now proceeding to make ours amount to $195,000.

Mr. COOMBS. You are making—

Mr. BLOUNT. I am making a statement, and I will not be interrupted.

Gentlemen have said there were 50,000,000 in those countries, and I object to interrupting. Gentlemen have stated that Brazil had 7,000,000, and I call his attention to this partial report where it is said it had 15,000,000; and I do not want to be continually making corrections of this sort.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what have these republics done? They voted that they should pay $1,000 on each million of population. Of the thirteen of them, four of them only, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, and Brazil, had made any payment at all. These four republics have paid $23,000 instead of $100,000 that should have been appropriated.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to know upon what principle of ethics gentlemen are insisting that we shall go on and pay our proportion when the other republics are absolutely refusing, save four. The engineers in connection with that board have been here within two days, and have stated that the reasons why these republics are not paying is because they distrusted the purpose of this movement of getting into their country. Why, the very appropriation to be made is for a preliminary survey, and they refuse to make that appropriation. Where, then, are gentlemen to go hereafter when the little contribution for the survey is not going to be paid for by them?

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. I can not yield.

Mr. HOLMAN. Listen to this question.

Mr. BLOUNT. Very well; I will.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. I will hear the gentleman's question?

Mr. BUTLER. Is not an appropriation in aid of a survey as much a subsidy as though it were in aid of building the road?

Mr. BLOUNT. It would seem so to my mind. I may not be very analytical about the matter, but that is my view.

Mr. MCCREARY. Did we not make an appropriation for a survey for the Nicaragua Canal?

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman has already reminded the House of that two or three times, but it is not a very fortunate reference for his side of this question, because people are here now attempting to get appropriations for that work. We have not got rid of that business yet. It is working now at the other end of this Capitol. Make this survey and Mr. Carnegie or some other enormous capitalist or syndicate of capitalists will be here using the making of this survey and the terms of this report of the committee as arguments for insisting that you are morally bound to go on and aid this work with land grants, with subsidies, with guarantees of interest, with protection to the concessionaires of all their rights of property, real and personal, that you are bound to guarantee the admission of the materials free of duty, that you are bound to guarantee the neutrality of the road—all these things will be insisted upon, for they are all parts of one great scheme.

Mr. HOLMAN. And it will be claimed that the Government is already committed to this policy and that its honor is involved.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, it is idle to say that this appropriation of $65,000 is all there is in this scheme. That is all the money there is in this bill for this purpose, but why not open your eyes and see the great movement that is operating in this report of the Pan-American Congress, this scheme looking forward to Government aid by land grants and by subsidies, looking forward to the participation of the various governments concerned in giving guarantees to this railroad corporation in South America, even to the extent of carrying the armies of the United States down there to enforce the rights of the concessionaires in those republics. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. BLOUNT, and the Chairman declared that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the motion be stated, that the paragraph in the bill sought to be stricken out be read, and then that the vote be taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the paragraph, and then the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINENTAL RAILWAY SURVEY.

Payment of the share of the United States of the expense of a preliminary survey for a continental railway, as recommended by the International American Conference, to be available when the other nations mentioned by the International American Conference pay all their respective assessments, $65,000.

Amendment proposed by Mr. BLOUNT: Amend page 9, lines 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18, by striking out all of said lines.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division on the amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 113, yeas 73.

So the amendment was adopted. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL UNION OF AMERICAN REPUBLICS.

Commercial Bureau of the American Republics, for the prompt collection and distribution of commercial information, as recommended by the International American Conference, $25,000, to be available when the other nations mentioned by the International American Conference pay all their respective assessments. The sums contributed by the other American Republics for this purpose, when collected, shall be covered into the Treasury, $25,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, with the view of perfecting that paragraph I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 25, amend by striking out "The sums contributed;" also, by striking out lines 1, 2, and 3, on page 10.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will ask the gentleman from Georgia whether it is his purpose to move to strike out this paragraph?

Mr. BLOUNT. It is.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have a proviso which I desire to offer as an amendment, but I do not care to offer it if the paragraph is to be stricken out.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend on page 9, lines 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, and 25, by striking out all of said lines.

The question was taken on the amendment; and the Chairman declared that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 97, yeas 68.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OATES, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7624) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I ask for a separate vote on two amendments: First, the amendment striking out the appropriation of $65,000 for preliminary survey for a continental railway; and, second, the amendment striking out the appropriation of $25,000 for the bureau of information.

The SPEAKER. If no further separate vote be desired the Chair will put the question on the remaining amendments in gross.

There being no objection, the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole, excepting the two on which separate votes were demanded by Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi, were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the first amendment on which a separate vote has been demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following:

"CONTINENTAL RAILWAY SURVEY.

"Payment of the share of the United States of the expense of a preliminary survey for a continental railway, as recommended by the International American Conference, to be available when the other nations mentioned by the International American Conference pay all their respective assessments, $65,000."

The SPEAKER (having put the question). The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. McCREARY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 145, nays 86, not voting 97; as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

On motion of Mr. BLOUNT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out on pages 19 and 20:

"INTERNATIONAL UNION OF AMERICAN REPUBLICS.

"Commercial Bureau of the American Republics, for the prompt collection and distribution of commercial information, as recommended by the International American Conference, to be available when the other nations mentioned by the International American Conference pay all their respective assessments. The sum contributed by the other American Republics for this purpose, when collected, shall be covered into the Treasury, $25,000."

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I demand a division.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let us have the yeas and nays:

So the amendment was rejected.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. CUMMINGS with Mr. REYBURN.

Mr. ROCKWELL with Mr. TOWNSEND.

Mr. ENLOE with Mr. PICKLER, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire at this time to proffer a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOCKERY. The House having refused to agree to the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole to strike out the provision for the Commercial Bureau of American Republics, I ask unanimous consent to offer the following proviso to that paragraph at this time.

The SPEAKER. The proposition will be read subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 10, at the end of line 3, insert:

"Provided, That any person employed under, and paid a salary from, this appropriation, shall not receive therefrom as such salary a sum which, added to any amount paid to such person by the World's Columbian Exposition for services rendered to it, will make a total annual compensation in excess of $5,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. REED. What is this?

Mr. VINCENT A. TAYLOR. I object.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow a statement before he objects?

Mr. BURROWS. Let us have the regular order, Mr. Speaker. Objection has been made.

Mr. DOCKERY. The officer in charge of this Bureau is receiving $8,600— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. ENGLISH. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. BLOUNT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CUMMINGS for one day—May 4—on account of important business.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6185) "to absolutely prohibit the coming of Chinese persons into the United States."

It also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals in the United States for the calendar year 1891, 6,000 extra copies, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the Senate, 2,000 for the House, and 3,000 copies for the Director of the Mint.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The following reports of committees were handed in at the Clerk's desk and referred to their appropriate Calendars as indicated below:

ESTABLISHMENT OF CIRCUIT COURTS OF APPEALS.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with amendments the bill (S. 2729) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals, and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States," and for other purposes: which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely the bill (S. 1615) to facilitate the disposition of causes in the Court of Claims; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, in the nature of a substitute for Senate bill 1907, a bill (H. R. 5951) to amend section 3 of the act approved June 27, 1890, granting pensions to soldiers and sailors; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DONATION OF LAND TO THE CITY OF SIDNEY, NEBR.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 5982) donating 20 acres of land from Fort Sidney military reservation to the city of Sidney, Nebr.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PROCEEDS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. BYNUM, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 7322) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay over certain moneys to the State of South Carolina, as prescribed by the act of August 30, 1890, entitled "An act to apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to the more complete endowment and support of the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and mechanic arts established under the provisions of an act of Congress," approved July 2, 1892; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RATE OF PENSION FOR CERTAIN CASES OF DEAFNESS.

Mr. MCKINNEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back adversely the bill (S. 349) to increase the rate of pension for certain cases of deafness; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS OF CERTAIN SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. MCKINNEY also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably a bill (S. 1910) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the pensions of certain soldiers and sailors who are totally helpless from injuries received or from diseases contracted in the service of the United States," approved March 4, 1890; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LIMITATION OF THE HOURS OF DAILY LABOR.

Mr. TARSNEY, from the Committee on Labor, reported back, as a substitute for bills H. R. 257, H. R. 276, and H. R. 442, the bill (H. R. 8537) relating to the limitations of the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon the public works of the United States and of the District of Columbia: which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bills numbered 257, 276, and 442 were laid on the table.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back to the House the Army appropriation bill, and to ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE], chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, presents the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6923) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and to ask for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. BLANCHARD moved that the House do now adjourn.

He also presented a petition of Berlin Heights Grange, No. 345, Patrons of Industry, of Ohio, and a petition of Smithfield Grange No. 676, Patrons of Husbandry, of Ohio, praying for the free delivery of mails in rural districts; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of Typographical Union, No. 219, of Canton, Ohio, praying for the passage of House bill No. 257, constituting eight hours a day's work; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of Convoy Grange, No. 153, Patrons of Husbandry, of Ohio, praying for the passage of legislation to prevent the adulteration of food and drugs; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of C. W. Harshman, in behalf of a number of other citizens of Charlestown, Ohio, praying Congress to make no further appropriation for the World's Columbian Exposition except on condition that the Exhibition be closed on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of the Chillicothe (Ohio) Board of Trade, praying for the passage of the Torrey bankruptcy bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of Roberts Post, No. 672, Grand Army of the Republic, of Poplar, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of any legislation for the free coinage of silver; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the memorial of B. B. Francis and 20 other members of the Seventh-Day Adventist Church of Licking County, Ohio; the memorial of 46 citizens of Reedsville, Ohio, and the memorial of 56 members of the Seventh-Day Adventist Church of Henry County, Ohio, remonstrating against Congress committing the United States Government to a union of religion and the state by the passage of any legislation closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday, or in any other way committing the Government to a course of religious legislation; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented sundry petitions collected by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Ohio, containing 223 individual signatures, praying that no exposition or exhibition for which appropriations are made by Congress shall be opened on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the repeal of section 3519 of the Revised Statutes authorizing the Postmaster-General to have return requests printed on envelopes; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2472) for the relief of Thomas G. Corbin, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 262) for the relief of Jabez Burchard, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GIBSON of Louisiana. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report the following amendment to the bill making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and for other purposes, to come in on page 13, line 16, after the words "eight hundred."

Naval reservation, Algiers, La.: Toward the construction of a dry dock at Algiers, La., in accordance with the recommendation of the two commissions, and for the purchase of such land as is shown by the report of said commissions to be necessary for this purpose in addition to the present Government reservation, $250,000; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to make a contract for the construction of the said dry dock, the cost thereof not to exceed $840,000.

I move that the amendment be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill, and moved its reference to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. By direction of the Committee on Foreign Relations I report back favorably an amendment to the bill (H. R. 7520) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and for other purposes. The amendment increases the proposed appropriation for executing the Chinese exclusion act from $50,000 to $100,000. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1044) to correct the military record of Jesse C. Taylor, Sixth Tennessee Cavalry;

A bill (H. R. 5108) to establish a military post at or near the city of Helena, in Lewis and Clarke County, in the State of Montana; and

A bill (H. R. 7557) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Indians residing on the Colville Reservation, in the State of Washington, with certain modifications, and to make appropriations to carry into effect the same.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 3060) granting a pension to Isabella W. Newkirk; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3061) to pension Edith S. Read; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. STANFORD introduced a bill (S. 3062) for the relief of Mary A. Swift; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PASCO introduced a bill (S. 3063) granting a pension to E. A. Tucker, of Pasco County, Fla.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3064) for the relief of Holliday S. Ravell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3065) for the relief of the estate of William B. Pool, late of Jefferson County, Ark.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PADDOCK introduced a bill (S. 3066) to amend the third paragraph of section 4693 of the Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. CASEY, it was Ordered, That James W. Foley have leave to withdraw his papers and petition from the files of the Senate, subject to the rules.

DISTRICT BUILDING PERMITS.

Mr. HARRIS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the resolution (H. Res. 118) to suspend the issue of permits to erect dwelling houses in alleys in the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the first amendment and agree to the same with an amendment, namely, strike out the words "the first session of;" so as to read: "That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby instructed not to issue any more permits for buildings intended for human habitation, in alleys less than 40 feet in width in the District of Columbia during the Fifty-second Congress."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the second amendment and agree to the same, namely: Strike out the words "until further provided for by Congress," and add the words "and that all such permits heretofore granted on alleys less than the width aforesaid, shall be revoked where construction shall not already have been actually begun."

E. O. WOLCOTT,

JAMES McMILLAN,

ISHAM G. HARRIS,

Conferees on the part of the Senate.

J. R. FELLOWS,

JNO. T. HEARD,

WM. COGSWELL,

Conferees on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

DISTRICT PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer a resolution for which I ask immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas complaint is made that the public schools of the District of Columbia are unable to prepare students to pass the admission examination for Harvard College, the requirements for which are readily met by high schools of the best grade: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be instructed to make a careful inquiry into the matter and to report the result to the Senate at as early a day as possible.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know if any serious complaints have been made of the character stated in the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state for the information of the Senator from Missouri that I hold in my hand a letter from the secretary of Harvard University, which I will read:

HARVARD UNIVERSITY, Cambridge, May 2, 1892.

DEAR SIR: I have recently received a letter from Washington complaining that the public schools of the District of Columbia are unable to prepare students to pass the admission examinations for Harvard College. I send you by this mail a copy of the Harvard University Catalogue for this year, and call your attention to the admission requirements as stated on pages 152-158. These requirements are readily met by high schools of the best grade in various parts of the country, and I think you may be interested to know that competent judges in Washington are dissatisfied with the present school requirements in the District.

Yours, very truly,

FRANK BOLLES, Secretary.

Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER.

I know nothing whatever of this matter from personal knowledge, but if there are serious complaints made against the public schools in this District, schools which ought to be above the average of the high schools in the country because they have greater facilities by way of libraries and otherwise for instructing their pupils, it seems to me that an inquiry as to the facts would be in order and I trust it will be made.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator to read the first part of the letter again. I did not catch what it was. There is so much conversation in the Senate Chamber that it is very difficult to distinguish the many voices.

Mr. GALLINGER. The secretary of Harvard University says:

I have recently received a letter from Washington complaining that the public schools of the District of Columbia are unable to prepare students to pass the admission examinations for Harvard College.

Then he afterwards says—

Mr. COCKRELL. That is what I wanted to get, simply as to the information from Washington. I do not know as to the precise requirements in the catalogue of studies here in the high schools and at Harvard. I know, however, a number of students who have graduated in the high schools here have passed a satisfactory examination and are at Harvard College now.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, that is the case.

Mr. COCKRELL. Still it will do no harm to make an inquiry under the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I state, I have no personal knowledge or feeling in the matter, but I think no harm will come from an inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL subsequently said: I should like to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that probably the resolution in reference to the District schools ought to go to the Committee on the District of Columbia. They have more direct jurisdiction of the matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think that would be a better reference.

Mr. HARRIS. The District Committee has absolute control over the subject-matter of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the vote by which the resolution was passed will be regarded as reconsidered, and the resolution will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, this day received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

The bill (H. R. 1044) to correct the military record of Jesse C. Taylor, Sixth Tennessee Cavalry; and

The bill (H. R. 5108) to establish a military post at or near the city of Helena, in Lewis and Clarke County, in the State of Montana.

The bill (H. R. 7557) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Indians residing on the Colville Reservation, in the State of Washington, with certain modifications, and to make appropriations to carry into effect the same, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT M'KEESPORT, PA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further morning business, that order is closed, and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. QUAY. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1915) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at McKeesport, in the State of Pennsylvania.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 13, after the words "one hundred thousand dollars," to insert "which sum is hereby appropriated."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PILOTAGE ON AMERICAN COASTWISE VESSELS.

Mr. COCKRELL. The regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

The bill (S. 1282) exempting American coastwise sailing vessels piloted by their licensed masters or by a United States pilot from the obligation to pay State pilots for services not rendered, was announced as first in order on the Calendar.

Mr. BUTLER. That is a very important bill, and I trust it will not be called up for consideration under Rule VIII.

Mr. FRYE. It was passed over a day or two ago on the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], and I gave notice that immediately after the conclusion of the present unfinished business I should ask the Senate to take it up for consideration, not of course in the morning hour and not under Rule VIII.

Mr. BUTLER. I have been necessarily absent from the Senate for the last four days, and I was not aware of the fact that the bill was coming up. I shall therefore ask that it go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, retaining its place.

Mr. FRYE. Let it retain its place on the Calendar. I have already given notice that on the conclusion of the unfinished business I shall move that the Senate proceed to its consideration. That will not be under Rule VIII.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like very much, if it would be entirely convenient to the Senator, that the bill might go over for a day or two. I have not had an opportunity to examine some papers.

Mr. FRYE. It will go over for a day at any rate, because the unfinished business will occupy that time.

WITNESSES BEFORE DISTRICT TRIAL BOARDS.

The bill (H. R. 6295) to punish false swearing before trial boards of the Metropolitan police force and fire department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. CALL. I should like very much if the Senator who reported the bill from the committee would submit some explanation of the necessity for it. It is a bill imposing severe pains and penalties upon persons for not attending court here, I understand, and we ought to know something about it.

Mr. PERKINS. The report is not lengthy, and perhaps will give the information that the Senator and Senate desire.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report (submitted by Mr. PERKINS March 21, 1892), as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6295) entitled "An act to punish false swearing before trial boards of the Metropolitan police force and fire department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," after having considered the same, make a favorable report to the Senate, for the reasons set forth in the following letter from the District Commissioners:

"COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

"Washington, February 19, 1892.

"SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia transmit herewith draft of a bill 'to punish false swearing before the trial boards of the Metropolitan police force and fire department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes,' and request that you will be kind enough to urge its early presentation and enactment. Testimony frequently given before the police and fire department trial boards indicates a lack of due appreciation of the obligation of an oath, while the immunity from punishment in the premises begets an impression of security in misrepresentation and evasion, which is prejudicial to the discipline of both of those departments.

"Very respectfully,

"J. W. DOUGLASS,

"President of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

"Senator JAMES McMILLAN,

"Chairman Senate Committee on the District of Columbia."

Mr. PERKINS. I will state in addition that the Commissioners are of the opinion that under existing law there is no provision for the punishment of false swearing in these courts of an inferior order in this District. The Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate, upon investigating the matter, were disposed to think the same and to concur in the opinion of the District Commissioners, and hence thought it was best to report favorably the bill, which was prepared in the office of the District Commissioners or of the District attorney and recommended to the Senate for favorable consideration. We thought there ought to be some provision of law for punishing offenses of that character.

The bill was passed.

SOLDIERS' HOME IN KANSAS.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask consent to call up the bill (S. 2140) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the State of Kansas certain lands therein named for homes of old soldiers and their families, etc., which was passed over yesterday without prejudice.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask that that bill be laid over, unless the Senator can give me some information which I have not had time, since it was passed over yesterday, to look up. I was under the impression that we had already given one military reservation in the State of Kansas for a soldiers' home, and I wanted to look and see if we had not done so. I know we have established in the State of Kansas a volunteer soldiers' home at Leavenworth, supported by the National Government. It would seem probably at first blush that it would be unimportant to the Senate whether a State home was established or not; but when we consider that we already have thirteen State homes and that one-half of all the expenditure in those State homes is paid out of the United States Treasury and amounts to over a million and a half dollars a year, we see that we are just as much interested in the State homes as in the national homes. I hope the Senator will not call up the bill this morning, unless he knows definitely that there has been no such previous bill passed.

Mr. PEPPER. The bill as it has been reported to the Senate contains an amendment proposed by the Committee on Public Lands. The committee have very carefully examined the measure and there is no objection made to the amendment of the committee, which provides simply that the use of a small portion only of the tract may be ceded to the State of Kansas, reserving the fee in the Government, and for the purpose of a soldiers' home, to be provided and maintained wholly at the State expense, so that the Government will be at no expense whatever.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, one moment. Does the Senator suppose that the State of Kansas, represented by two distinguished Senators as it is, would permit every other State home in the United States to have half of its expenses paid by the General Government and those two Senators not ask the Senate to pay one-half that expense? There is no use in thinking that the State of Kansas is going to maintain this home at its own expense when no other State is doing it. That will not bear investigation.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator knows that the people of Kansas are somewhat peculiar in that respect and in some others.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. PEPPER. We are asking no appropriation whatever from the Government. We are asking simply the use of a portion of the land which the Government is not now using to be used for a soldiers' home at our own expense, and the remainder of the land to be opened to homestead settlement. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, is familiar with the history of the case, and I shall be pleased to have him make a statement for the information of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DOLPH. The bill as introduced by the Senator from Kansas proposed to provide that the whole of this military reservation shall be given to the State of Kansas. It is a small reservation. I think it embraces either 5,000 or 7,000 acres of land. Upon examination we found that at the last session the bill had been reported by the then chairman of the committee, the late Senator Plumb, in the shape in which the committee now report it.

Mr. PADDOCK. The bill was originally introduced by him.

Mr. DOLPH. The bill was originally introduced by him. The bill as introduced by him proposed to give more land to the State than the committee determined should be given to it. I do not understand that the question of appropriation made by the General Government to support State homes is at all involved in this case.

Mr. COCKRELL. As a matter of course it is. If the Senator will permit me, I want the question answered positively, when we are paying one-half of all the expenses of all the other State homes, will the State of Kansas sit back and pay all the expenses of this home without asking the Government to pay half its expenses? We know that it is absolutely ridiculous to expect any State to do it.

Mr. DOLPH. It is not a question of legal right. It is not a question of present law. It is a mere supposition as to what the State of Kansas may do when she has provided a home for disabled soldiers. The Senator will understand that in this bill Congress is not authorizing the State of Kansas to erect and maintain a soldiers' home which shall be supported in part by the General Government. The State of Kansas may go anywhere and buy land, if it does not possess it to-day, and erect a soldiers' home.

All that is done by this is merely to make a grant of a few acres of land that are eligibly situated for a soldiers' home to the State of Kansas. It does not involve the question of expense to the General Government at all. If the State of Kansas does not use it for that purpose it reverts to the United States. Certainly it does not involve a question of any expense to the General Government to support homes, and we can not prevent the State of Kansas from erecting a soldiers' home if we tried. It is the privilege of the State of Kansas to erect as many institutions of that kind as it chooses, and it may appropriate money from its treasury to purchase the ground. Everything that is proposed to be done here by Congress is simply to give the use of a few acres of ground to the State of Kansas to aid in this matter, and if it is not used for that purpose it comes back to the General Government.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] that in the event this bill should become a law and the State of Kansas should erect on these lands a soldiers' home we shall be no less modest than the other States of the Union and shall want such assistance as is granted to like institutions in other States.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is manly, and that is just.

Mr. PERKINS. I have not any doubt that that will be so, but I desire to suggest to the Senator from Missouri that it does not seem to me that it is a good objection to this bill to say that there is already a national home in the State of Kansas. It is true that at Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, there is a National Soldiers' Home, open to the State of Missouri and open to all the States in that region of country, as it has been to Kansas, and there are no more Kansas inmates in that soldiers' home in proportion to population than there are from the adjacent States of the country.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right. Now, will the Senator answer whether Congress has donated any lands heretofore to Kansas for a State home? I may be mistaken, but I think that heretofore a bill passed the Senate granting a military reservation to Kansas for a State home. Whether it ever became a law or not I do not know, and that is what I wish the Senator to answer.

Mr. BERRY. I will state to the Senator that this is the same bill that passed the Senate during the last Congress.

Mr. PERKINS. I was going to suggest in that connection that it is true that this bill, or substantially this bill, in the early days of the present session, was reported by the Committee on Public Lands and passed the Senate; but subsequently information was brought to the Senators from the State which induced my colleague to introduce this bill, which has been amended somewhat by the committee. As presented in the present form this bill is more satisfactory to the delegation from the State than the bill which passed this body heretofore in the early days of this session. That bill I believe is pending in the House. If this bill passes that bill will not be called up for consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is this the same military reservation?

Mr. PERKINS. The same military reservation, the Fort Hays military reservation, in the State of Kansas.

It does seem to me, as suggested before, that because we have a national home in our State we ought not to be precluded from receiving such privileges as may be granted to other States.

This reservation is no longer needed by the Government of the United States, and it is no longer used for military purposes. There are buildings there which were constructed at the expense of the Government that are valuable for the purpose proposed by this bill. They are standing there idle and unoccupied. There is a custodian paid by the Government of the United States at this time to take care of and preserve this property. There is no reason, in my judgment, why this bill should not receive the favorable consideration of this body, and why we should not be permitted as a State to utilize this property and to create there a soldiers' home.

It is but fair that I should say in this connection that Kansas has more ex-Union soldiers in proportion to population than any other State in this Union. They went there from all the States in the Union in the early days of the settlement of our State. It seemed to be an inviting field for those who were discharged from the military ranks of the Government; they settled there by thousands, and the State is anxious to make some provision for them.

This is an eligible, a beautiful, and healthy site, and if this bill passes I believe the State will make ample provision for the poor and the unfortunate. To that extent it will assist the Government in providing for them, and to that extent will relieve the Government of their maintenance and support.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That there is hereby granted to the State of Kansas the right to occupy, improve, and control for the purposes of a soldiers' home, to be established and maintained thereon by said State, two sections and one-half of the lands embraced within the Fort Hays military reservation, to include the buildings located thereon, and to be selected by the governor of the State of Kansas according to legal subdivisions and contiguous, on condition that said State, shall, within two years, establish such home, at which provision shall be made for the care and maintenance of officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines who have served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, their dependent parents, widows, or orphans, and under such rules and regulations as said State may provide; and there is likewise granted to said State from said reservation, to be selected by the governor, two and one-half sections of land to embrace the timber on the reservation, such selections to be made to correspond to the legal subdivisions and to adjoin the first-named tract. Said last-named tract is granted for the purpose and upon condition that the State of Kansas shall make of the same and maintain thereon a public park, and shall fully protect from destruction and damage said timber: Provided, That the United States reserves to itself the fee and the right forever to resume possession and dispose of the said lands whenever it shall appear that the State of Kansas has ceased to use the same for such public purpose.

SEC. 2. That all the remainder of said reservation after said selections have been made shall be open to settlement under the homestead laws only: Provided, That no entry shall embrace more than 80 acres.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, there is an error, I think, in the statement that this bill passed during the present session of Congress. It passed in the last Congress.

Mr. PERKINS. It passed the Senate.

Mr. PADDOCK. It passed the Senate at the last Congress, but has not been passed in this Congress.

Mr. PERKINS. I was of the opinion that the bill passed in December before my appointment, but it may be that I am in error in relation to that.

Mr. COCKRELL. As Kansas comes in for this bill now, frankly admitting the situation, and not under the false pretense that it is not going to impose any burdens on the Government, I shall not oppose the bill any further.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, this bill in its present form looks toward an experiment that has interested almost every man who has felt concerned in the proper care of the class of persons named in the bill.

The United States, in the first instance, established homes where men were isolated. It also established soldiers' orphan homes where the children were isolated. It has always been thought that an experiment that would authorize any of the States to collect and employ and educate the families of certain classes of soldiers and sailors would be a wise experiment, and probably lead to the solution of the difficulty which we have all experienced. We have a large orphan home in Illinois. I have felt always the embarrassment of separating these children from their parents and from home associations and caring for them in the sort of semimilitary way that is necessary to be employed in governing them in the homes.

At Dayton, where there are many thousands of soldiers, I had the honor for several years of being one of the managers of the National Home. I found a difficulty almost incurable in the separation of soldiers from their families and from home associations. When I saw this proposition to lend to the State of Kansas—for, after all, it is no absolute gift, unless Congress shall hereafter, for reasons that may subsequently occur, choose to convert it into a gift, it is a loan of the land in this bill to the State of Kansas—that the State may with its own resources make the experiment of bringing soldiers, decrepit old men and their families, to a home where home life can be enjoyed by these old men. I know of but very few things more pitiful than the necessity that separates an old man, an old soldier, from his family, and in order to enjoy the benevolence of the Government to abandon the care of all those whose care would be so precious to him. In this proposition an opportunity is given to the State of Kansas to make the experiment of caring for these old men and their old wives and bringing them together, and in that way promote the happiness of all.

I understand this thing may be carried very much too far, but it seems to me this bill meets the exact point to which we have already been looking as an experiment.

As to the State of Kansas, it has in it relatively more soldiers than any other two States, I think, in the Union. I went over not long ago on the sad errand of conducting the remains of a late Kansas Senator to his home, and at different points in Kansas I found a number of old associates and a number of men who had come to the State that was actually surprising. They will grow old like other men; they will be objects of care like other men, and the State of Kansas will have a very large burden thrown upon it, no matter what the Government may do.

But I wanted to say merely that I regard this as a loan of land that the Government no longer needs, and that it shall be for the State of Kansas to make this experiment in which old men, at least, are so deeply interested, of bringing the old soldier, decrepit as he is, to this home that Kansas will provide and bring with him the children, if there are any who are still objects of care, and there are decrepit children of these old men who will cling to them for life. I know of instances where these old soldiers have decrepit children who have been by nature rendered incapable of self-help and self-care.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. PALMER. I am very glad to hear it has, for I needed some such check to bring me to a conclusion. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLISON. I do not understand that this bill provides any special plan such as suggested by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. PALMER. My time has expired, but I understood the matter in the way I have stated.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not understand that this soldiers' home is to be established in any other way than the ordinary soldiers' homes, except that dependent mothers, widows, etc., may be admitted there.

But I do not rise to make any observation respecting the character of this home. I wish, however, a little information respecting the Fort Hays military reservation. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of this bill what is the extent of the Fort Hays military reservation?

Mr. PEPPER. Five or six thousand acres, I think. I have forgotten the exact number.

Mr. DOLPH. I think it is about 7,000 acres.

Mr. PADDOCK. All the land there is not proposed to be donated by the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. It gives five sections, or about 3,000 acres.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desired to get some information in regard to it.

Mr. PEPPER. I have forgotten the exact number of acres contained in the entire reservation, but it is somewhere about five or six thousand acres, as my memory is impressed.

Mr. PERKINS. Between six and seven thousand acres, I think.

Mr. PEPPER. Between six and seven thousand acres, but the bill does not propose to give the use of more than a small portion, two or three sections.

Mr. COCKRELL. Two and a half sections.

Mr. DOLPH. Two and a half sections of timber land merely for a park.

Mr. COCKRELL. Five sections altogether, or about 3,200 acres.

Mr. ALLISON. I notice that section 2 of the substitute provides that the remainder of this land shall be opened to homestead settlement. It seems to me that that is hardly a fair provision respecting this land, situated as it is in the very heart of the State of Kansas, to allow this small tract to be opened to homestead settlement.

The custom is, I believe, with these military reservations to have them sold. I should be glad if the Senators who have charge of this bill would state some reason why this remnant of lands should be left open to homestead settlement only. Why should it not be sold and the proceeds paid into the Treasury?

Mr. PADDOCK. Under the act of 1884 abandoned military reservations are surveyed, appraised, and sold for cash at public sale under the old rules of sale.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand.

Mr. PADDOCK. But the practice has been, and the rule has been well established here during the past two or three Congresses, to turn these lands over to homestead settlement, as all other lands are now disposed of under that rule. A number of bills have been passed turning over abandoned military reservations to homestead settlement. That rule seems to have been pretty well established in quite a number of cases similar to this.

Mr. ALLISON. I can very readily see why that would be a proper rule in uninhabited regions or regions where the lands were not specially valuable; but it is manifest that these are valuable lands.

Mr. DOLPH. I have not understood that they were anything more than ordinary agricultural lands, but they may be a little more valuable than more remote lands. The homestead claim is reduced to not exceeding 80 acres to each person, reduced one-half the ordinary homestead claim.

I do not understand that this is near a city or village, or near to a town, or that the land is valuable for any other purpose than for agriculture. The committee so understood, and I think that must be the case, because the bill was thoroughly discussed by the late Senator Plumb. These lands are understood to be only agricultural lands.

In the case of lands that are especially valuable for town-site purposes, or being near a large city, or if there is any reason why they should not be sold as agricultural lands, they are taken out of the operations of the general law, but in all these outlying military reservations in recent years we have reported separate bills putting them under the operation of the homestead law, sometimes giving persons who are in possession a prior right.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the bill, but my understanding was that these lands are very valuable. If, as the Senator now says, they are not, I do not wish to interfere with the bill.

Mr. DAWES. Can a homesteader obtain 160 acres of this land without paying anything?

Mr. PERKINS. Eighty acres only can be obtained by any one person under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. DAWES. We have for the last two or three years compelled every homesteader who goes on the poorest part of an Indian reservation, on all that land in the Indian Territory and all up in the Northwest, to pay a dollar and a half an acre. Now, here is land in the heart of Kansas. I do not know how good it is, but I do not believe there is an acre in all Kansas that is not worth five times as much as the average acres on the Cherokee Outlet, and yet we compel the homesteader in all this region to pay a dollar and a half an acre for the land.

I do not know anything about the merits of this bill, but I do not see why a homesteader, since we have adopted that rule, should not be compelled, without regard to the quality of the land, if he desires it for a homestead, to pay a dollar and a half an acre for it and give him four years to pay it in.

Mr. DOLPH. The homestead law does not require any payment whatever, unless the homesteader commutes, as the law now stands, at the expiration of two and a half years. It used to be at the expiration of six months' residence and cultivation. The homesteader may commute and pay a dollar and a quarter an acre and get his title. If he does not do that, he has to wait five years to get his title. That is the general provision of the homestead law, and the pending bill puts the land referred to under that law.

Mr. DAWES. I know that is the general homestead law, but it seemed to Congress to be wise, and the homestead law in that respect has been modified as to all the lands opened from the Indian reservations, amounting in the last three years to 20,000,000 acres.

Mr. DOLPH. These are exceptions to the general rule. There are special enactments for the disposition of lands ceded by the Indians to the Government, and the reservations are sold upon the basis of the treaty, which requires a certain amount to be paid to the Indians for the land. The object of legislation requiring payment, I suppose, is to reimburse the General Government for the money paid to the Indians; but the homestead law itself requires no payment if the homesteader lives five years on his land before getting his title. If he chooses to commute after a partial residence, then he has to pay for the land.

Mr. PADDOCK. We can not afford to be quite as generous with other people's land as we can with our own. The Indians own their land, and therefore we have to account to them for it.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I desire to say briefly to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] that these adjacent lands were entered, as a rule, under the homestead law or under the commuted provision of the homestead law. Under the provisions of this bill the settlers who take possession of this land will be treated as settlers on the adjacent lands are treated with the exception that in this case settlers are limited to 80 acres each.

It is true, as suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, that under the provisions of the bill to ratify the agreement with the Cherokee Indians, we propose to charge the settlers $1.50 an acre, but that is to reimburse the Government. The Government is proposing to buy those lands from the Cherokee Indians, and to reimburse the Government we propose to charge the settlers $1.50 an acre. The settlers recently located in the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Reservation in Kansas are required to pay to the Government $1.50 an acre to reimburse the Government for what it paid to the Indians. In the Sac and Fox and Iowa Agencies in Oklahoma, and in the Seminole lands, and the Creek lands, we only charge the settlers $1.25 an acre, and we only charge the settlers away up in Dakota $1.25 an acre.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. PERKINS. I think not.

Mr. DAWES. It is true that when Oklahoma Territory was established the public lands opened at that time were opened at $1.25 an acre, but since then I have no knowledge of an acre having been opened. I know we purchased 3,000,000 acres of the Crows last year at 30 cents an acre, and every settler upon that land is obliged to give $1.50 an acre. If the Senator desires to say that there is an acre of land in Kansas that is not worth three times as much as that land up there is I would not have it reported.

Mr. PERKINS. I think myself this land is more valuable than some of the Indian land that has been opened up for settlement; but, as has been stated, that land has been reserved by the Government from its general domain. The Government is not buying this land; the Government is making no expenditure, and Congress, if this bill passes, opens the land which has been retained heretofore from settlement under the provisions of the homestead law, as has been suggested.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] has expired. The Senator from Kansas is speaking by consent of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. PERKINS. I will take the floor in my own right, then.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator has already occupied his full time under the rule.

Mr. CALL. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas if I understand this reservation to be 3,500 acres?

Mr. PERKINS. Between six and seven thousand acres.

Mr. CALL. And that is to be opened for settlement under the homestead law?

Mr. PERKINS. Under the homestead law, except 3,200 acres, which are to be given to the State of Kansas under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. CALL. Three thousand two hundred acres?

Mr. PERKINS. The use of 3,200 acres by the provisions of this bill is to be given to the State of Kansas for the purpose of this home. The remainder of the reservation is to be opened to settlement under the homestead law. Settlers, however, are limited to 80 acres each.

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him what is the necessity to the soldiers' home of 3,200 acres of land—what use would it be?

Mr. PERKINS. Two sections and a half are reserved for a park by the provisions of this bill—timber land. It was thought wise that that should be preserved; and under the provisions of this bill it is to be preserved; the timber is not to be destroyed, it is not to be cut down. The land is simply loaned to the State of Kansas for the purpose of a park, and two sections and a half given for the use of the home proper.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. CALL. I ask if there is any length of time for the loan of the land?

Mr. PERKINS. Only that when it ceases to be used for the purpose proposed by the bill, or in the event that it is not used for that purpose, it reverts to the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out the second section of the amendment reported by the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 2 of the amendment, as follows:

SEC. 2. That all the remainder of said reservation after said selections have been made shall be opened to settlement under the homestead laws only: Provided, That no entry shall embrace more than 80 acres.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say a word upon my amendment. Here is a donation to the State of Kansas for the use of one-half of a reservation of 7,000 acres, and we are told that this land will revert to the Government of the United States when the State of Kansas ceases to use it for a soldiers' home, the remaining 3,200 acres to be opened to settlement under the homestead law. The theory of homestead settlement is that all the lands of the United States are open to all the people of the United States for such settlement. Now, I venture the assertion that these lands are worth $10 an acre; they certainly will be worth that much after this law passes, and probably twice that much. It is certain that only a few people in the immediate neighborhood of these lands, probably not 10 miles distant, will gather in there and take up the lands.

If any Senator can give me a reason why this little residuum of these lands should be given away to the people who happen to be in that neighborhood I may be disposed to vote for this second section, but I should say that if this land is to be given to the State of Kansas for the purpose of establishing a home, we had better give the whole 7,000 acres for this purpose than to allow a few people who may live in the immediate neighborhood of Fort Hays to grab this land under the homestead law.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not understand the effect of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, and I should be glad to have him explain it to the Senate. I am not familiar with these laws, and my impressions are favorable to his view of the case, but I do not understand how these lands will become subject to sale if the Senator's amendment should prevail. I should be glad if he would explain that to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. If section 2 is struck out, the remainder of these lands will be subject to future disposition, unless there is some general law whereby they can be sold. They will remain the lands of the Government of the United States until we authorize their sale. If this donation is given upon the idea that at any time these lands shall revert to the United States, why not give the whole of it, with these buildings and this beautiful and lovely park, to be decorated and ornamented by the State of Kansas, and why not enlarge and amplify it, and give the entire 7,000 acres, instead of the 3,500?

My point is that if we are to dispose of the whole of this land, we had better give it all to the State of Kansas for this purpose. The State can utilize it very well in many ways, by cultivating it for the use of these old soldiers and in other ways, rather than to allow a few people who live in the neighborhood of Fort Hays to grab this land to the extent of 80 acres each and and sell immediately at $20 an acre.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Iowa does not suppose that any portion of this land will ever be returned to the United States Government, does he?

Mr. ALLISON. I was laboring under that pleasant delusion after the statements made by the Senators from Kansas. I may be mistaken about that, but, if not, let us give the whole of it to Kansas.

Mr. BUTLER. If there is an instance in the history of the Government where anything has come back to the United States I fail to remember it. Perhaps the Senator from Iowa may.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not remember any special instance of it. Mr. JONES of Arkansas. My inquiry was addressed to the Senator from Iowa in good faith. I had an impression that if his amendment should prevail, under the law as it stands, these lands would be sold at public sale to the highest bidder, perhaps, in some way as prescribed by law.

Mr. PADDOCK. As I stated awhile ago, there is a provision in the act of 1884 regulating the sale of land in military reservations.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then I should like to know why it would not be a proper thing for these lands to be disposed of under the operations of that general law.

Mr. McPHERSON. What is the general law?

Mr. PADDOCK. The act provides for the survey, appraisal, and public sale of the lands.

Mr. BUTLER. To the highest bidder.

Mr. PADDOCK. The rule which has obtained in recent years in respect to the sale of public lands in remote sections was by special acts to set them aside for homestead settlement. That rule has been observed by Congress for several years. The lands covered by this bill are no better than other lands in that region of country which are subject to homestead settlement. I venture to say that these lands are no more valuable than other unoccupied lands within 20 miles of them.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me ask if the rule which the Senator refers to about the change of the law of 1884, which required improvements and the lands to be appraised and then sold at public sale to the highest bidder—if the change to the homestead policy in regard to reservations has not been confined to those reservations which are in a wild and unsettled country and are no more valuable than the adjoining lands? Has that principle of the homestead law ever been applied to a valuable reservation such as that down near St. Louis, the Jefferson Barracks, or any of those reservations which are worth thousands of dollars?

Mr. PADDOCK. This land is in the newer section of Kansas. The rule I have referred to was applied to the lands in the newer sections of Kansas, Nebraska, Wyoming, etc. A few Congresses ago, I think so early as the Forty-sixth Congress, a special act was passed authorizing the sale of the Fort Kearney military reservation in our State. The land was as good land as that referred to in this bill. There were settlements not very remote from the reservation, and the lands possibly might have been sold at public sale at some advance above a dollar and a quarter or even two dollars and a half an acre. They might have reached that price, but under the general principle that lands shall be disposed of to actual settlers to be improved for the purpose of developing the country and enriching it by cultivation it was concluded not to take that course with that tract.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to ask a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Arkansas has expired under the rule.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wanted to ask a question, Mr. President, and rose for the purpose, but I believe the Senator has occupied the whole of my five minutes' time and I can not ask the question. When some other Senator takes the floor, I shall endeavor to ask my question in his time.

Mr. PADDOCK. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not know I was occupying his time.

Mr. CULLOM. I have not risen to make a speech. As I understand it, if the amendment of the Senator from Iowa prevails, it strikes out the second section of the bill, and out of the consideration in connection with the bill one-half of the land, or whatever it may be included in this reservation, so that 3,000 or 3,500 acres of land remain in the possession and ownership of the Government of the United States, to be disposed of hereafter as the Government may see proper to dispose of it.

Mr. DOLPH. To be appraised and sold under existing law.

Mr. CULLOM. To be appraised and sold under existing law. In my judgment, the best thing to do is to strike out that section, and I think the friends of this bill are not particularly opposing that view of it. I hope it will be disposed of in that way.

Mr. PERKINS. No, we are not opposed to it.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Kansas states that he has no objection to it.

Mr. PADDOCK. There is no real objection to it.

Mr. PEPPER. We have no sort of objection to striking out section 2. The bill as originally presented proposed that Congress grant to the State of Kansas the use of the entire reservation for the purpose of establishing and maintaining by the State a home on the lands, but the Committee on Public Lands saw proper to amend it by giving the State the use of only a portion of the reservation, and it is section 2 of that amendment which the Senator from Iowa proposes to strike out. That would leave us, by a proper amending of section 1, just where we were in the beginning, granting to the State the use of the entire reservation. I am not at all satisfied but that the Senator's view is entirely correct and that it would be better to keep the reservation in one body, because the bill as originally drawn did not propose to part with the fee, with the title to the land, but to retain it in the United States.

Mr. DOLPH. I will state to the Senator from Kansas that the Committee on Public Lands would not consent to that without a re-reference of the bill.

Mr. PEPPER. I will only state to the Senator that so far as the people of Kansas are concerned and the Senators representing the State upon this floor, we are not tenacious about retaining the second section in the bill at all. That is the point we make.

Mr. DOLPH. Then let it be stricken out.

Mr. PEPPER. If the section is stricken out, it will keep the reservation in a body, so that when the final disposition of it is to be made it will be in one body and can then be governed by the general law regulating such matters or by a special act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to strike out section 2 of the committee's amendment.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, as far as I am concerned I shall never give a vote in this body for the withdrawal of public lands from the policy to which they have been dedicated by the action of Congress as free homes for the people of the United States who will occupy and cultivate them. I believe that policy is absolutely necessary to the preservation of this Government.

But where lands have been improved and a special value given to them, as in the immediate vicinity of a city, they can no longer be said to be taken for agricultural purposes or for the purposes of occupation and cultivation. In this case, it seems to me, the Government having made a reservation for military purposes and built upon it substantial buildings, it would not be right to give this increased value under the guise of enabling some person to occupy and cultivate it for agricultural purposes. It would be a violation of that policy. Therefore I think the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is a proper one.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa, whose position I think is very correct in regard to this matter, if section 2 be stricken out, which appears to be a direction with respect to the disposition of the residue of the lands, will it not be necessary, in lieu of section 2, to provide some special authorization in the act for the survey and disposition of these lands under the general law which has been heretofore quoted?

Mr. ALLISON. I understand not from the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. I understand the remainder of these lands will continue in their present condition without any change whatever.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understand the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands to say that in case the amendment of the Senator from Iowa prevails, these lands would then become subject to sale under the general law, which provides for their appraisal and sale. I should be glad to know if I understood the Senator correctly?

Mr. DOLPH. There is such a law in force. I do not know how promptly sales are made under it, but when a reservation is abandoned for military purposes and the lands are agricultural lands and not specially valuable, the rule has been for Congress to pass special laws directing how they shall be disposed of and providing that they shall be disposed of under the homestead law only. Now, if it is supposed that these lands are or will become specially valuable by the erection of this home, taking one-half the reservation for that purpose, I see no reason why they should not be appraised and sold.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. But the question I had in my mind was, by the operations of the law alone, if the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is adopted, whether these lands will become subject to sale under the provisions of that general law without additional legislation?

Mr. DOLPH. They may be sold under that law without additional legislation.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It seems to me that would be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. PADDOCK. And turned over to the General Land Office.

Mr. PALMER. I have no disposition to interfere with this bill except to know about its present status and form, but it occurs to me that the proposition of the Senator from Iowa is an exceedingly proper one. If these lands should be disposed of under the homestead law, they would be gobbled up by somebody in the neighborhood.

Now, I suggest to the gentlemen who have charge of this bill that the second section be stricken out, and that the words "two sections and one-half," in line 6 of section 1, and the words "in line 8, "and to be selected by the governor of the State of Kansas according to legal subdivisions and contiguous," be stricken out, so that the whole body of the land be transferred or loaned to the State of Kansas for the purpose of a soldiers' home.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senate Committee on Public Lands could not assent to that, and would have to oppose the passage of the bill if that proposed amendment should be adopted.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask permission to make a statement to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. PALMER. I shall be glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to state for the information of the Senator from Illinois further, that the motion made by the Senator from Iowa to strike out the second section of the bill, is entirely satisfactory to those of us who represent the State of Kansas, and we shall make no further objection nor shall we propose to amend the bill in any other way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOLPH. I think the title should be amended so as to read: "A bill granting to the State of Kansas the right to occupy, improve, and control, for the purposes of a soldiers' home, certain lands in that State."

The committee amendment simply grants the right to use the land.

Mr. PERKINS. There is no objection to that.

Mr. PEPPER. That will be satisfactory.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title will be so amended in the absence of objection.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICT IN MONTANA.

The bill (S. 878) creating two additional land districts in the State of Montana was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The first section provides that all that portion of the State of Montana commencing at a point on the southern boundary of the State of Montana where the range line between ranges 2 and 3 east of the principal meridian will, when extended, intersect the same, and running thence north along said range line to the first standard parallel south; thence west on said standard parallel to the point where the range line between ranges 2 and 3 west of the principal meridian intersects the same; thence north along said range line between ranges 2 and 3 west of the principal meridian to the base line; thence with said base line to a point where the same, when extended, will intersect the main divide of the Rocky Mountains; thence southerly, following the main divide of the Rocky Mountains, to the boundary line between Idaho and Montana; thence with the boundary between Montana and Idaho to the place of beginning, be constituted a new land district, to be called the southern land district, and the land office for the district shall be located at the town of Dillon, in the State of Montana.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That all that portion of the State of Montana bounded and described as follows: Commencing at the northeast corner of the State of Montana, and running thence south on the line between the States of Montana and North Dakota to the south boundary of the Fort Buford military reservation, as declared by Executive order of August 18, 1898; thence west to the Missouri River; thence westerly along said river to the point where the range line between ranges 12 and 13 east of the principal meridian intersects said river; thence south along said range line, between ranges 12 and 13 east, to the fifth standard parallel north; thence west along said standard parallel to the Montana principal meridian; thence north with the line of said meridian, when extended, to the north boundary of the State of Montana; thence east with said north boundary of the State to the place of beginning, be, and the same is hereby, constituted a new land district, to be called the northern land district, and the land office for said district shall be located at the town of Fort Benton, in said State of Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section (3) 2, after the word "appoint," to strike out "registers and receivers" and insert "a register and receiver;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is hereby authorized to appoint a register and receiver for such land districts, who shall discharge like and similar duties and receive the same amount of compensation as other officers discharging like duties in the other land offices of said State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SANDERS. The title should be changed, so as to read: "A bill creating an additional land district in the State of Montana."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That modification of the title will be made in the absence of objection.

TOWN OF FERRON, UTAH.

The bill (H. R. 1080) for the relief of the inhabitants of the town of Ferron, County of Emery, Territory of Utah, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the probate judge of Emery County, Territory of Utah, to enter in trust for the inhabitants of the town of Ferron, for town-site purposes, section 16, in township 20 south, of range 7 east, Salt Lake meridian, subject to the provisions of sections 2387, 2388, and 2389 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to town sites.

Upon the passage of this act the Territory of Utah, through its proper officer, shall be authorized to select as indemnity for said land, and in full satisfaction thereof, and for the purpose stated in section 1946 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, one section of the public lands at any land office in the Territory, the selection to be made in a body, according to legal subdivisions.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report (submitted by Mr. CAREY, March 21, 1892):

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1080) for the relief of the inhabitants of the town of Ferron, county of Emery, Territory of Utah, submit the following report:

The section of land referred to in the bill is already occupied in part by the town of Ferron, this school section being the only land surrounding or adjoining the town that is suitable for town-site purposes. The land on the north and west of the town is too hilly and broken, and that on the east is swampy.

Houses have been built, irrigation ditches constructed, town lots and gardens improved, and streets laid out on the land in question under the belief that Congress would grant the relief sought by this bill. Congress has heretofore passed similar bills for the relief of towns built on school sections.

The committee recommend that the bill pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. SANDERS. I should like to have that bill reported at length again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been read at length. It will be again read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I should like a little explanation of this bill. I desire to inquire why, if this school section, which is near a town, is to be sold, the schools should not have the benefit of what it brings; why the school fund should not derive the advantage of the sale, and why the authorities of the Territory should be compelled to select, in lieu of it, a section somewhere, which probably might not be one-tenth of the value of the present school section?

Mr. DOLPH. To the State the school lands are granted, for the Territory the school lands are reserved. They are not granted until the Territories are admitted as States of the Union. It seems that here is a town so located in a cañon around the mountains that the only available land for a town site is a section that is reserved for schools. As stated in the report, the town is already built upon the school section, and it is proposed to authorize the county judge to enter the section under the town-site law, under which the lands are sold to the occupants or conveyed to the occupants for the benefit of the town, as really no money comes to the General Government, and to allow the Territory to select another section in lieu of the present section from lands that are already reserved to the Territory. The selection will be only to reserve that section for the Territory when admitted as a State.

Mr. SANDERS. I am not satisfied with the explanation. In the first place, as to the size of this town, whether 640 acres is an appropriate quantity of land, we are not advised by anything in the report of the committee. While it is true, as the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands says, that these lands are simply reserved from sale and are not granted to the Territory, it is just as competent for the Congress of the United States to provide that that section of land shall be sold to occupants for a price that it will bring under the town-site laws, or otherwise, and that that money shall go to the schools of Utah.

I see in the bill a despoilment of the common-school fund of the future State of Utah. I think the circumstances are such that we have a right to interfere with it, and I think that the money which it brings should either be given to the Territory of Utah to be used for its common schools, or that it should be reserved until the Territory of Utah is admitted as a State.

It is idle to say that there is any hope of selecting a section of land which shall be equal in value to the one upon which a town is built. My own observation of these matters in the Territories of the West is that, whenever a school section becomes valuable, all sorts of excuses are made to withdraw it from the future school fund of the State into which the Territory may be organized, to divert the values from that fund and to try to satisfy the general conviction which prevails, that these schools are entitled to that which we have promised them by offering them something in lieu thereof.

I do not desire any action upon this matter in the absence of the member of the committee who made the report, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], and I suggest that it go over, without prejudice to its place on the Calendar, for consideration when he shall return.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I trust the Senator will not urge his objection. The school sections in the Territories are reserved in the manner explained by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. There is a law providing for town sites, so that a town in a Territory, and I presume in a State, can make entry and receive certain lands. The towns do not pay any amount of money for the lands. It is in the nature of a homestead. So, were these lands not school lands, the Government would receive no payment of consequence for them. The inhabitants receive the land without price, except what the necessary expenditures, legal or otherwise, may be in securing it.

Here is a case where a growing town is situated between the hills in a canyon, and the only direction which it can properly grow is out over the school section.

There are reasons why Congress in its wisdom has not seen fit heretofore to give statehood to the Territory of Utah. Those reasons will probably prevail for some time. The only way in which the growth of this town can be provided for is under some arrangement whereby this school section can be made available. This piece of land would be given almost free were it not school land for the town. There is no reason, in my judgment, why a piece of school land should not be disposed of in the same manner and the settlers receive the benefit, provided the Territory or the State reimburses itself by further selection of school land, as it can do under the statute.

I simply ask if the bill does go over that it may go over without prejudice, so that my colleague may take care of it. I believe, however, if the Senator from Montana would reflect a moment he would see that to postpone action on the bill is a very severe hardship. The town is desirous of getting title and securing not only the present settlers, but further settlers. I do not believe we ought to interpose any objection that may retard the growth of any portion of this country, especially of the West, and more especially of the Territories.

Mr. SANDERS. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he knows where in Utah this town is located?

Mr. WARREN. I can not describe it as to metes and bounds.

Mr. SANDERS. In what vicinity? I am somewhat familiar with that Territory, but this town is new to me.

Mr. WARREN. The subject is new to me as to the town, except as to the explanations I have received. The subject of the town-site law and the troubles of new town-sites that are located on school lands I am very familiar with, because I have lived for more than twenty years in a town where the most valuable portion is yet a part of the school section.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President, I do not still feel like surrendering my objection to this kind of legislation. In the State which I have the honor in part to represent, I know of an instance which, I should judge, was very like unto this, where, immediately adjacent to the town, and in fact, for that matter, cornering into it, there is a school section. This occurred while it was a Territory. No doubt it would have been gratifying to a great many gentlemen if they could have had the reservation of that section removed, and the future State of Montana mocked by an offer to give them something in lieu of it—"reimburse them," is the language used by the honorable Senator from Wyoming—but it would take a great many sections of land such as they could select to actually reimburse them for the value of that section.

I am not undertaking to make any objection which shall interfere with the growth of the alleged town of Ferron, or that shall put in peril any squatters' rights or any ultimate title that they may obtain. As to those towns, however, that are so entered, the laws require that the occupants of these lots shall pay a certain amount per lot, which goes, more or less of it, to the payment of the expense of entering the land. Now, there is not any pretense whatever that these 640 acres of land, which is a piece of land a mile square, is occupied as a town. It is said there are some buildings upon it, that there are irrigating ditches upon it, that there are gardens upon it.

For one, I do not feel, as being to some extent the guardian of the future educational fund of the State of Utah, in which all the people of the United States feel, if possible, a profounder interest than they do in any other educational fund in the United States, like giving away this mile square of land because it is valuable and because it is desirable, remitting the future State of Utah to the selection of a piece of ground because it is not equally valuable.

I say it is competent, if it is wise, to prepare such a bill as that those people who shall move upon this town site and shall select a lot 42 by 150 feet, I believe is what is provided in the act, can get a title, but whatever amount they pay should certainly be reserved for this school fund. If it be true that nothing is paid except what is expended for the entry of the lot, then the balance of that section, which will be contiguous to the town, ought to be reserved and ought to be owned by the State of Utah, when it shall be created, for the use and benefit of its common schools.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). Does the Senator desire the bill to go over?

Mr. SANDERS. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. WARREN. I understand the bill retains its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill retains its place on the Calendar. It is passed over without prejudice.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the Calendar shall be proceeded with to-day under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CULLOM. All day?

Mr. SHERMAN. Until the adjournment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that during the remainder of the day the Calendar may be proceeded with under Rule VIII, not displacing, however, the unfinished business, as the Chair understands.

Mr. SHERMAN. Leaving all the orders stand as they are.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be adopted.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In view of the fact that the Senate will devote to-day to the Calendar, I ask that the present unfinished business may, by unanimous consent, be taken up to-morrow immediately after the conclusion of the morning business and proceeded with during the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the unfinished business may be taken up to-morrow morning at the conclusion of the routine business and proceeded with during the day. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that will be considered the order of the Senate.

PUBLIC LANDS IN ALABAMA.

The bill (S. 1696) to further provide for the disposal of certain lands in the State of Alabama was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 3, before the word "public," to strike out "proceeds of the sales of the;" in line 4, after the word "now," to insert "remaining;" in line 5, before the word "under," to strike out "and are required to be sold;" in line 8, after the date "1883," to strike out "and any rents, issues, and profits that may accrue therefrom under the provisions of this act;" in line 10, after the word "hereby," to strike out "set apart" and insert "granted;" in line 11, after the word "Alabama," to strike out "as a fund;" in the same line, before the word "exclusively," to strike out "employed" and insert "applied;" in line 16, after the words "production of," to insert "coke;" in the same line, after the word "thereof," strike out "and" and insert "to be used;" in line 18, after the word "Alabama," to strike out "in" and insert "for;" in the same line, before the word "industrial," to insert "such;" in line 19, before the word "shall," to strike out "fund" and insert "lands;" and in line 20, after the word "applied," to insert "to the foregoing trusts;" so as to make the section read:

That the public lands in the State of Alabama which are now remaining subject to sale under the provisions of "An act to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands," approved March 3, 1883, are hereby granted to the State of Alabama to be applied exclusively in promoting technical education in any school, college, or university that the Legislature of Alabama shall designate, in the branches of learning connected with the mining of coal, and iron ore, and the production of coke, iron and steel, and the manufacture thereof, to be used in the discretion of the Legislature of Alabama for the promotion of such industrial education in that State. Said lands shall be under the control of the General Assembly of Alabama, and shall be applied to the foregoing trusts and administered under the laws of said State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the lands in said act mentioned shall be sold, in accordance with the provisions thereof, at such times and in such quantities and legal subdivisions as may, from time to time, be designated by the governor of the State of Alabama, and the Legislature of Alabama shall have authority to select and set apart any of said lands for the purpose of being leased to miners, the rental or royalty to be paid into the treasury of the State of Alabama for the purpose declared in the first section of this act, and the proceeds of any sales of said lands, made as herein provided, less the expenses of selling the same, shall, from time to time, be paid, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to the proper officer of the State of Alabama authorized by law to receive and receipt for the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I shall not oppose the passage of this bill, but I wish to state for myself that I believe every withdrawal of the public lands of this country from the use and occupation of the people upon the condition of cultivation for free homesteads, is a wrong policy and a great injury to the country. I should prefer myself that, in the first instance, all wild land should be subject to the sole condition of occupation for free homes by the families of the American people, subject to the condition of cultivation and residence alone.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suppose this bill is one which has been on the Calendar for some time and substantially the same bill which was upon the Calendar in the last Congress.

Mr. MORGAN. This is the third time it has been reported.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will ask the Senator, first, whether the amendments which have just been adopted are those which are contained in the bill as printed and now upon the Calendar?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. So that the bill now before the Senate reads exactly as the bill was reported from the committee?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to have the Senator make a statement concerning these lands, showing us in what quantity land is being granted to Alabama by this bill, and why the United States should make this donation?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the report of the committee, which I will ask the Secretary to read, contains a full statement upon those propositions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report (submitted by Mr. MORGAN, March 22, 1892):

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1695) "to further provide for the disposal of certain lands in the State of Alabama," have examined the same, and respectfully report the same to the Senate, with certain amendments, and recommend its passage.

Before the development of coal and iron production in what is termed the mineral district of Alabama, the public lands had been offered at sale at $1.25 per acre. After that these lands were offered at a rate as low as 25 cents an acre, and were kept on the market at that price for several years without being disposed of. They are located in a country that is not useful for agricultural purposes, except in small, detached parcels along the small streams flowing from hills of 300 to 1,000 feet above their beds. The result has been that few of these lands have been or ever will be taken up for agricultural purposes, either at the public sales or by private entry or under the homestead laws.

When, on the 3d day of March, 1873, the coal lands in the several States were withdrawn from private entry and from the operation of the homestead laws by act of Congress, and were included in a new system of laws for the disposal of coal lands in the public domain at $10 and $20 per acre, only a few persons were residing on any of these lands in Alabama as homestead or preemption claimants.

Prior to the passage of the coal-land laws (Rev. Stats., secs. 2347 to 2352) land grants were made and confirmed to certain railroads located through or near to the coal district in Alabama. These grants included large bodies of the best coal lands in that region, and private capital had taken up, for speculation chiefly, all of the great coal fields in Alabama except the small remnant of detached parcels of land covered by this bill.

The act of March 3, 1883, dealt with this remnant of the coal fields, still in the ownership of the United States, and put them all on the basis of ordinary agricultural lands as to the manner of their disposal. The rights of all homesteaders and preemption claimants who were residing on those lands at the date of that act were saved to them and their claims, made in good faith, were confirmed. So that every homesteader and preemption claimant who resided on any of said land at the date of said act of March 3, 1883, had its title placed under the protection afforded by the homestead and preemption law.

Prior to the passage of said act the Department of the Interior, Mr. Schurz being Secretary, sent out Mr. Winter, a geological expert, to examine the coal regions of Alabama, and to designate the lands of the United States in that region that were to be classed as coal lands. His examination and designation of the coal lands in Alabama was reported by him to the General Land Office, in which report he designated, chiefly by townships and ranges, the coal lands of that region, and made and filed in the General Land Office maps which he prepared, on which such designations were noted.

Those lands described in Winter's maps were entered upon the tract books of the General Land Office, and are the same that were included in said act of March 3, 1883. The identification of the lands which were thus designated and reported by Winter as coal lands was rendered certain and accurate on the books of the General Land Office. After the passage of the act of March 3, 1883, Congress granted to the University of Alabama about 40,000 acres of land, which were located on the area that was described and designated as coal lands by said Winter, and the General Land Office in making up to Alabama a deficiency of acreage in the sixteenth sections reserved to the State for township schools allotted to those purposes about 40,000 acres, which allotments have been confirmed, and include together about 80,000 acres, all of which are marked on the tract books of the General Land Office.

After deducting the lands so granted to the University of Alabama, and allotted to the sixteenth sections that were less in size than 640 acres, there remains about 200,000 acres that will be disposed of by this bill, if it should become a law, less the amount that may be included in grants to railroad companies.

These lands were proclaimed for sale under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1883, by the President, and were advertised in handbills, copies of which were appended to this report.

These offerings for public sale were withdrawn and the sales were postponed indefinitely by the order of the President.

No reason has yet appeared for this refusal to obey the plain mandate of the law, and the lands remain in their wild state and without yielding anything to anybody. Not only are they utterly useless as they stand, but they embarrass the full and proper development of mines that are near them, or by which they are surrounded. They are in bodies too small and too detached to be available for the purposes of mining, except by companies operating coal mines near to them. They would be of little value, if any, to any other person or corporation, and no private owner would undertake to hold them against the larger mining enterprises operating in their vicinity.

The State of Alabama, as the owner of these parcels of land, in trust, and not subject to taxation, can hold them until their fair value can be obtained, either by leasing or selling them to adjacent proprietors. In this way alone can it be expected, reasonably, that these lands can ever be of any real value to any persons except the holders of large bodies of coal lands contiguous to them. And in this way a fund can be raised that will probably increase every year for a great number of years, which the State of Alabama, as required by this bill, will faithfully apply to the purposes therein declared.

It is a just and wise policy to use the remnant of these lands for the education of the children of the mining and industrial classes who will occupy this mineral region and will bring its great wealth into the channels of commerce, through their skill and personal toil. This is a natural resource for these wise and benevolent purposes that Congress should not deny to the miners and producers of the metals that abound in the mineral regions of Alabama, where the products of agriculture are meager and there is no other important inducement to labor except in the mines and furnaces. Education in respect of these industries will contribute greatly to the improvement of the people living in that country and will promote the welfare of the whole country.

No. 902.

PROCLAMATION BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

In pursuance of an act of Congress of March 3, 1883, I, Grover Cleveland, President of the United States of America, do hereby declare and make known that a public sale of valuable Government lands will be held at the land office in Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, on Thursday, March 11, 1886, at which time will be offered a portion of the lands not previously disposed of that were reported to the General Land Office prior to the passage of the act as containing coal or iron, in the undermentioned townships and parts of townships, viz:

North of the base line and east of the St. Stephens meridian:

Township 21, ranges 9 and 10.

South of the base line and west of the Huntsville meridian:

Township 22, ranges 5, 8, and 9.

Township 21, ranges 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10.

Township 20, ranges 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, and 11.

Township 19, ranges 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11.

Townships 18 and 17, ranges 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11.

Township 16, ranges 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11.

Township 15, ranges 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11.

South of the base line and east of the Huntsville meridian:

Townships 21 and 15, range 1.

Township 18, ranges 2, 3, and 5.

Township 17, range 3.

Townships 16, 14, and 13, ranges 3 and 9.

Lands appropriated by law for the use of schools, military, or other purposes, or reserved for railroad purposes, will be excluded from sale. The offering of the above lands will be commenced on the day appointed, and will proceed in the order in which they are tabulated until the whole have been offered and the sales thus closed, but the sale shall not be kept open longer than two weeks, and no private entry for any of said lands will be admitted until the day after the close of the public offering.

All lands will be disposed of at not less than the minimum price of $1.25 per acre.

Lists of sectional subdivisions are in the hands of the district officers, and will be open for examination by those desiring to purchase.

Given under my hand, at the city of Washington, this 28th day of November, A. D. 1885.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

By the President:

WM. A. J. SPARKS.

Commissioner of the General Land Office.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 26, 1885.

POSTPONEMENT.

By order of the President, of December 19, 1885, the above sale is postponed to Thursday, April 22, 1886.

WM. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

No. 903.

PROCLAMATION BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

In pursuance of an act of Congress of March 3, 1883, I, Grover Cleveland, President of the United States of America, do hereby declare and make known that a public sale of valuable Government lands will be held at the land office at Huntsville, in the State of Alabama, on Thursday, March 25, 1886, at which time will be offered a portion of the lands not previously disposed of that were reported to the General Land Office prior to the passage of the act as containing coal or iron in the undermentioned townships and parts of townships, viz:

South of the base line and west of the Huntsville meridian:

Township 14, ranges 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11.

Township 13, ranges 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11.

Township 12, ranges 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11.

Township 11, ranges 8, 9, and 10.

Township 8, ranges 9 and 10.

South of the base line and east of the Huntsville meridian:

Township 13, ranges 1, 3, and 4.

Township 12, ranges 1 and 10.

Township 10, ranges 5 and 7.

Townships 9 and 8, range 7.

Township 7, range 8.

Township 6, range 9.

Townships 5 and 4, range 10.

Lands appropriated by law for the use of schools, military, or other purposes, or reserved for railroad purposes, will be excluded from the sale. The offering of the above lands will be commenced on the day appointed, and will proceed in the order in which they are tabulated until the whole have been offered and the sales thus closed, but the sale shall not be kept open longer than two weeks, and no private entry for any of said lands will be admitted until the day after the close of the public offering.

All lands will be disposed of at not less than the minimum price of $1.25 per acre.

Lists of sectional subdivisions are in the hands of the district officers, and will be open for examination by those desiring to purchase.

Given under my hand, at the city of Washington, this 28th day of November, A. D. 1885.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

By the President:

WM. A. J. SPARKS.

Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the resolution of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] relative to President's message upon the appropriation of March 3, 1891, for payment to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations for their interests in the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Reservation. By the order of the Senate the unfinished business is to be laid aside to-day, to be taken up to-morrow at the conclusion of the routine morning business.

Mr. CHANDLER. I notice by the reading of the report that President Cleveland offered these lands for sale, and, after advertisement, they were withdrawn. The report says these offerings at public sale were withdrawn and the sales were postponed indefinitely by order of the President. But the report gives no statement of the reasons why the attempt to realize money and put it into the Treasury of the United States was abandoned.

I am not myself averse to making donations of remnants of the public lands in the States to those States, and do not think there is any injustice in doing so. I certainly have no illiberality in my own mind in that connection; but the question necessarily comes up, as it seems to me from glancing at the bill and the report, whether or not this final closing out of all the public lands in the State of Alabama by donating them to that State for educational purposes will not be followed by requests that similar donations shall be made to all the remaining States, certainly to all the remaining States which have within their borders only the remnants of public lands. The question certainly arises in my mind, as to which I need enlightenment, how far we shall go in this direction and where we shall stop. Does this bill follow others of a similar character, or is it the precursor of bills of a similar character which we shall be asked to pass?

This bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], in whose State these lands are located, I assume, with the concurrence of all the members of the committee. But here seems to have been a decision made that an attempt on the part of the President to realize the cash value of these lands and put it in the Treasury should be abandoned, and in the place of that effort comes this proposition to donate all the lands to the State of Alabama in order that the State may use the proceeds of the lands for the promotion of industrial education.

I am not prepared to say that I shall vote against the bill, though I know there are Senators who have been disposed to oppose it. One Senator in particular I remember, who opposes the bill, is now absent. Certainly I should like a statement from the Senator, reiterating my request and perhaps interrupting him in the statement he was about to make, indicating how far this proposition as to Alabama may require us to go in the case of other States.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the report which has just been read, if any attention has been paid to it at all, gives a complete history of the legislation upon the subject of these remnants or fragments of coal lands remaining undisposed of in Alabama. In five minutes' time I would not undertake to go over that again. I trust the Senate has observed what has been said in the report.

In reply to the question of the Senator from New Hampshire, this bill has neither a precursor nor will it have a successor. It is a bill which stands entirely upon its own foundation, aside from and disconnected with every other scheme of legislation in the world that I have ever heard of or dreamed of. It is made necessary by the fact that these lands have been put in a very peculiar attitude or condition by the legislation of Congress, which did not at the time receive my entire assent.

The Senate has noticed first of all that while Mr. Schurz was Secretary of the Interior, in order to execute the provisions of the coal-land laws of the United States he sent a geological expert there for the purpose of defining and reporting to him what lands fell within the operation of those laws that had not theretofore been disposed of. He made a list of them and filed it in the Department of the Interior, and that list has been followed by the proclamations of the President offering these lands for sale. Those proclamations were put in for the sake of a perfect identity of the land. The area included in Mr. Winter's exploration was not a large one as compared with the whole body of the coal fields for the reason that he took the idea, it may be correct or it may be incorrect, but he took the idea, however, that the available coal lands in that part of the State of Alabama were confined to an area that was about one-third of the entire coal measures, as they are called.

Mr. Winter made his report, in which he designated the lands still remaining in the hands of the United States Government as coal lands and others that were agricultural lands. They were little patches of land about on the small streams and down in the dales produced by the opposition of the high hills, upon which there have been settlements by different small farmers. They had not taken out, many of them, homestead entries or any other entries for these lands at the time that legislation was proposed here, under an act which I have before me, to make a disposition of the coal lands in Alabama.

The question that was presented to Congress in a bill that I had the honor to introduce here, I believe (and in the other House it was introduced by one of my colleagues from Alabama), was whether the coal lands which had not been taken up, those belonging to the Government of the United States, should remain under the general coal-land laws of the country or should be regarded as they had been in Kansas, Missouri, Michigan, and several other States, as agricultural lands for purposes of public disposition.

These lands had first of all been offered for sale at public sale at $1.25 an acre at Huntsville, then the land district. After that the graduating act came in, and it provided that certain lands that had remained for such a length of time on the market unsold should be sold at 25 cents an acre, that others which had remained a still longer time should be sold at 15 cents an acre, and others a still longer time should be sold at 12½ cents an acre. These lands remained there. Although the knowledge of the existence of coal was common in the country no attention was paid to these lands. They were regarded as being entirely worthless because they were not in connection with transportation of any kind. They were remote from any water transportation, and there was not a railroad, I suppose, nearer than 200 miles of any part of them.

So these lands were not taken up except by men who went and squatted on them and did not pay anything for them at all. Nevertheless these men were homestead claimants, and when we asked the Congress of the United States to change the lands from the category of coal lands to agricultural lands we made provision in that act for the confirmation of the claim of every man who was then residing upon any of them and claiming a homestead right or qualified to claim a homestead right, thereby confirming the title not of a very large number but of all the settlers who were there and who had occupied these lands which were supposed to be agricultural or partially so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the duty of the Chair to inform the Senator from Alabama that he has spoken five minutes.

Mr. MORGAN. I knew that I would not be able to explain the bill in the time prescribed by the rule.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very much interested in the explanation of the Senator from Alabama, and if I can be accorded the floor I should like to ask him a question or two in respect to this matter.

Mr. MORGAN. I should be very glad to go on. I will say, if the Senator will allow me, that this is the third time the bill has been reported to the Senate. It has had very little opposition at all from anybody, and that opposition has been founded entirely upon mistaken ideas of the facts, and I have never been able to get it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa desire to ask a question of the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will be allowed to go on.

Mr. CULLOM. By unanimous consent certainly he may be allowed to complete his statement.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not want to violate any rule, but it is the third time the bill was reported from the committee, and it has been done after the most scrutinizing examination.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Alabama may be allowed to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection the Senator from Alabama will be permitted to proceed.

Mr. MORGAN. I shall try to economize the time very closely in order to get the facts before the Senate.

Now then, we confirmed in the act which I have before me here the title of those settlers to this land. So that really disposes of all the class in respect of whom the Senator from New Hampshire feels any concern—the people who had gone there and for years had been gathering there to take up their little homestead entries, or whatever you might please to call them. They were squatter locations. That bill was presented here to take these lands out of the category of public lands, as has been done in the various other States, it being perfectly obvious that not one acre of them ever would sell, and no acre ever has sold, for either $10 or $20.

There is no chance to make any combination of the sort that is provided for in the coal-land laws upon these lands, because they are in scattered fragments lying about in this place and that and the other, not happening to have been taken up under the $1.25 law, or the 25-cent law, or the 15-cent law, or the 12½-cent or any other law. They are mere fragments lying about that could not be used in respect of the provisions of the laws of the United States that control the disposal of the coal lands. So Alabama was relieved, as these other States had been, from the operation of those laws in respect of this fragmentary portion of this general body of land. Now, here is the act:

That within the State of Alabama all public lands, whether mineral or otherwise, shall be subject to disposal only as agricultural lands.

That puts them all on the footing of agricultural lands. Now—

Provided, however, That all lands which have heretofore been reported to the General Land Office as containing coal and iron shall first be offered at public sale.

That provision was put in there by the Interior Department. They made a communication to the other House in which they insisted that the lands should be offered for public sale. Then I had not any idea in the world, no conception of an idea, that these lands could be made available for the purposes of education or anything else. I did not like that provision, but still it went into the bill. Now, the next proviso is as follows:

And provided further, That any bona fide entry under the provisions of the homestead law of lands within said State heretofore made may be patented without reference to an act approved May 10, 1872, entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," in cases where the persons making application for such patents have in all other respects complied with the homestead law relating thereto.

Under that provision the Secretary of the Interior went on and confirmed a great number of entries. I say a great number, but that is not the fact, because there were not a great number of people there, but he confirmed all the entries in favor of these squatters exactly in conformity with what I wanted to be done, because I sympathize fully with the idea that the agriculturists shall have all the lands in the United States that are fit for agriculture, and I am in favor of the homestead laws; I have always been a warm advocate of it, and I was here in this bill.

Now, the land was brought into that condition. The President of the United States issued his proclamation to sell these lands. After the proclamation was issued, by the intervention of some person whom I have never been able to trace out, that proclamation was withdrawn. I went to Mr. Lamar, who was then Secretary of the Interior, and asked him the reason for it. He could not assign any reason. I asked him for any opposition or suggestion that might have been made by any private person against the sale. There were none on the record. Twice I have called on the Administration then in power and the Administration now in power for information of any complaint or objection made by any person to the sale of these lands, and I have the official answer here from the Interior Department that there has been no complaint; that no objection has been lodged against it at all.

I have stood with my eyes open and my mouth open wondering how it could be that a law of that kind, peremptory in its character, should be refused execution by the Department of the Interior, and why President Cleveland had ever seen proper to withdraw his proclamation, and I am as ignorant to-day of the causes of it as the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is it not to be inferred that there was no sale because there were no offers for the land? Is not that the natural solution of it? The lands were offered for sale. They could not have been sold without buyers.

Mr. MORGAN. They were not offered. The proclamation was withdrawn before the sale.

Mr. CHANDLER. They were not actually put up?

Mr. MORGAN. No.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yet I understand the Senator to say that no persons have complained that they did not have an opportunity to buy so far as he can learn by inquiry.

Mr. MORGAN. No persons complained that they had no opportunity to buy that I have ever heard of.

Mr. CHANDLER. When the Senator says the plain provision of the law was not complied with he means that the law required the question as to whether there were purchasers should have been decided by an actual offering?

Mr. MORGAN. As a matter of course; and the President of the United States made his proclamation providing for the sale, and then before the sale took place withdrew the proclamation.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now, I will ask the Senator if there had been persons who desired to buy would they not have made their wishes known either by complaint to the Interior Department or in some way?

Mr. MORGAN. That is more than I know, whether they would or not. I suppose they would not have known anything about the President's intention to withdraw the proclamation. I do not wish to be unfair or unjust to anybody in the world about this matter, but I know from statements made to me by a distinguished capitalist in that country that a combination had been formed to buy all of these coal lands at the sum of $1,000,000. They intended to go in and buy up these lands, and why did they want them? Not because independently the lands are worth anything to them or to anybody else or are of any great account, but because they lay adjacent to properties which they had already compassed and included in large schemes of purchase. The President may have got ear of that; I do not know. I said nothing about it, although I would have said something about it if that sale had gone on.

From that time to this I have been watchful to see who it was who was thus interrupting the laws of the United States for the sale of these lands. I found that I could not get an administration to act upon it, but I could not find out who was objecting and who was interposing these objections. I could not move at all. There occurred to me then a thought, and it is a very favorite thought with me, that these fragmentary lands can be taken by the State of Alabama and held on to, the markets for them watched, and the necessities of these large mining proprietors observed, and that the State can work out of these lands a fund for the education of the children of miners there who have no other fund to be derived from an agricultural or any other source that we can contribute or that anybody else can contribute to their education.

Certain gentlemen and ladies in the city of Birmingham have started on their own private account a technical establishment, which has not yet been organized, but to which the subscriptions, I understand, of good money are $250,000, for the benefit of the horde of children of miners who have gone there to settle. I wish to say in behalf of those miners in Alabama that we have been very careful, very prudent, I think very wise, in selecting and locating upon all the lands in that country the very best class of mining population that we could find. We did not want to have the uproar of strikes and difficulties which occur among people who are imported merely to work a few days and then perhaps go away. We wanted permanent settlers; and so it has turned out that there has never been a strike in the coal mines of Alabama amounting to more than ten or twelve hours at one or two smaller mines. The business of coal mining there has gone along profitably to the miner as well as to all concerned, and certainly with great benefit to the general community.

Now, they are raising their children. They are poor men; they are hard-working men. I maintain that a school of technology, a simple plain school of instruction in mining, engineering, and in the properties of coal and coke, in chemistry, and the like of that, can be and will be maintained out of the fund that I propose to devote to it in this bill, which will furnish to the children of these miners the only opportunity they can ever have to acquire a scientific knowledge of the business in which they are brought up and in which their fathers have made a living for them, and to which they are dedicated by the laws of society. So my heart has been very earnestly set upon this, and I have been watching these lands to see what harpy, what scoundrel might interfere here for the purpose of taking them up and putting them in his pocket so as to deprive these children of these blessings and benefactions.

Three times the Committee on Public Lands, fully informed by printed reports and by testimony brought before them of the whole situation, have recommended this bill, with some little variations in the phraseology and method of disposal. But when the case came up at the last session of Congress the then Senator from Vermont, Mr. Edmunds, made objection that perhaps the bill had not sufficient definiteness to describe the lands. So I put in here the proclamation of the President to leave no doubt about it. There can not be any doubt about the description. Then it was suggested also that the State of Alabama, instead of having all this right to sell and lease and the like of that and come here for patents, should receive the lands by a straight donation in trust that the State would apply them to the purposes of technical education in that quarter of the country.

Now, you may refuse to pass my bill, but then you have got to do one of two things. You have got to sell these lands and let them pass into the hands of these large corporations, or else you have got to repeal the proviso in the act of 1883 and let the lands go under homestead entry, for the law of homestead entry is all the law we have now for their disposal. If you repeal it there will not be a homestead entry in that country, unless it is some entryman that will be put down there for the purpose of capturing the land by a big syndicate. There will not be one single honest homestead entry for agricultural purposes in that region, but the men who have already very large mining interests there will take Tom, Dick, and Harry, as they have done, and put them up in goods' box shelters, in shanties, so as to get the first call on the lands whenever the law could be repealed. It will take a long time to repeal that law, to get it out of the way. That will not be done in a great many years, if it is ever done at all; but I claim that these lands ought now to be dedicated to this purpose of education. You can not show that the Government of the United States will ever realize $10,000 or $5,000 from the sale of these lands in the shape that they are in now.

There is nobody but myself responsible for this measure whom I know anything about. I have not conferred with any of my colleagues anywhere; I have not even conferred with the people down there, except that they have a very lively and cordial approbation of the course I am taking in regard to it, for they know perfectly well that if the bill I have before the Senate now does not succeed those lands will become merely a fund to attract the attention of speculators. The men who formed that million-dollar syndicate will come along and purchase the lands and drive off all other purchasers, if they are sold under the statute, or if they are homesteaded they will merely plant their stakes about, put in one man, and another, and another, as they have done heretofore, having scoured the very purlieus of the large cities of Alabama for the purpose of getting the very worst characters there that they could hire to go upon these lands under the pretense of calling them homesteaders.

So, Mr. President, I trust that the Senate of the United States will pass this bill and let us dispose of that little body of land. It is only a small body in a circumscribed area, and there can be no objection to the measure unless the objection is in the direction of trying to get these lands at last in the ownership of these big syndicates.

Mr. CHANDLER. Before the Senator sits down I should like to ask him a question. The bill provides for the donation to Alabama of the public lands now remaining subject to sale. Does that language interfere in any way with the rights of homesteaders and preemption claimants which were saved by the act of March 3, 1887?

Mr. MORGAN. It could not. All their entries have been confirmed.

Mr. CHANDLER. It saves them all?

Mr. MORGAN. It is perfect in that respect.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator state whether he thinks that the Legislature of Alabama in dealing with this subject in its discretion will be able to make proper headway against this band of speculators?

Mr. MORGAN. The band of speculators are trying to get the title. If you give the title to Alabama, of course they have made all the headway they can.

Mr. CHANDLER. They do not seem to have obtained it, but under the proclamation of the President the title of the land now is in the United States. We pass it to the State of Alabama, and then may not the Legislature of Alabama, having this discretion, be in some danger of being seduced into an improper disposition of the lands by these speculators? What is the plan of the Senator with reference to enabling the State of Alabama to realize money out of these lands for industrial education?

Mr. MORGAN. I am willing to trust my life, fortunes, character, and reputation, and that of my children, to the honor of the State of Alabama; and I think in doing that I can trust this little body of coal land to the people of that great Commonwealth for a fair disposition.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will ask the Senator how Alabama is going to get money out of it?

Mr. MORGAN. I propose to leave that to the Legislature. I think it will be several years before Alabama can realize much of the school fund out of it, but they will have to do it by waiting. As soon as speculators find the State has possession of the title, they will undertake to make arrangements for the purchase of these fragments which they want to add to their possessions, and the State will be there to protect itself and the heritage we propose to bestow upon them. It will be remembered that the Senator's State, New Hampshire, the great State of Texas, and all the original thirteen States of the Union got every foot of their public land when they came into the American Union. They came in with this enormous dowry of land, and we have got nothing except a few little reservations that we have been able to pick up here and there. While I have no complaint to make of Congress about it at all, when we come to a purpose of this sort I think the Senate ought to credit us with good faith, because the very object of bringing the measure here for consideration is the public education of a poor class of people who are unable to take care of themselves.

I do not think it is necessary that I should defend the State of Alabama in the past, or present, or prospective in regard to anything, but I will call the Senator's attention to one fact about the honor of Alabama. During the war we owed a public debt of about $5,000,000 in London. We got the coin in the State of Alabama and we put it upon blockade runners, and every installment of that debt was met by gold coin shipped from the State of Alabama through the blockade to pay our debt. So I do not think that we are under the slightest possibility of impeachment as to public integrity. We may have done some very unwise things and all that, but so far as the public integrity of the Legislature and State of Alabama is concerned, its character certainly is as high as any Commonwealth in the American Union.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator will not understand me as undertaking to impeach the honor of the Legislature of Alabama; but I thought it was quite right, inasmuch as the inducement offered by this bill for the grant of these lands by the United States is the expectation that they will be useful in promoting industrial education in Alabama, to ask the Senator, whether he succeeds in his expectation or not, how he hopes to realize any considerable sum of money from these lands which have been so useless in the hands of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has just informed me that his State took the coal lands that we conceded to her under a similar law and sold them out, and put the money in the treasury for the benefit of the common school fund. No complaint has been made against any State, and need not be. There will not be any occasion. It is not a very large fund. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that my idea about it is that the State will find bidders for these lands in small parcels from the different large syndicates whose lands abut against them. As is well known, you can not establish a coal mine at all except upon a large area of land.

You can not establish a coal mine upon a quarter section or a half section of land. You have got to drive shafts and all that sort of thing, and it would be utterly futile to expend a great amount of money when you have no coal area of more than a quarter section or half section. It requires section upon section to induce men to put their money into such a scheme. Here are these little pieces of land they could not get hold of, lying around them in different locations in the coal field, and the State of Alabama of course will be able to realize from these lands by selling them in parcels to these larger bodies of men as they want them. They want them and would like to gain the whole of them, and perhaps they would be willing to give a good deal of money if they could get them all into one possession. If a club could be formed to buy them all up and then speculate upon them these large holders would have very great advantage, and I do not want that to be done.

I think I have explained the bill, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. SARAH J. WAGGONER.

The bill (S. 1708) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah J. Waggoner was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Sarah J. Waggoner, widow of Louis C. Waggoner, late a corporal in Capt. John E. Crouch's Company, Regiment of Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, Florida war, of 1839, and pay her a pension of $25 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CUARTEL LOT IN MONTEREY, CAL.

Mr. COCKRELL. Order of Business 465, Senate bill 2599, was passed over yesterday at my instance. I ask that it be now considered.

The bill (S. 2599) releasing the right, title, and interest of the United States to the piece or parcel of land known as the Cuartel lot, in the city of Monterey, Cal., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yesterday I proposed an amendment and called the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] to it, who reported the bill. Now, I propose an amendment, to strike out all after the word "Monterey" in line 7 and insert. It will leave the bill just in the form it was in the last Congress when it was passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment moved by the Senator from Missouri.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "Monterey," in line 7, in the following words:

That the city of Monterey, Cal., is hereby designated as the trustee of the original grant made by the Mexican Government of pueblo lands to the pueblo of Monterey, as the successor of said pueblo, to hold the same in trust for the uses and purposes of the original grant, and confirmation is hereby made to said city of said lands as patented November 19, 1891.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CENTENNIAL MEMORIAL.

Mr. CULLOM. By request I offer a concurrent resolution for reference to the Committee on the Library. I think the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] was to have done so, but he is not here.

The concurrent resolution was read and referred to the Committee on the Library, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the sanction of Congress is hereby given to the acceptance by the President of the United States, for preservation in the archives of the executive department, of one copy of the "State edition" of a memorial entitled "The Administrators of the United States Government at the Beginning of its Second Century," in accordance with the terms of the contract executed September 4, 1891, between the World's Columbian Exposition and James D. McBride.

COURTS IN OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Calendar will be proceeded with.

The bill (S. 2240) to extend the jurisdiction of courts in Oklahoma Territory over certain classes of crimes, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 3, after the words "courts of," to strike out "said" and insert "the;" in the same line, after the word "Territory," to insert "of Oklahoma;" and in line 4, after the word "any," to strike out "case of murder, assault with intent to kill, assault with intent to do bodily harm, assault and battery, rape, assault with intent to commit a rape, robbery, arson, and larceny," and insert "crime;" so as to make the section read:

That the jurisdiction of the courts of the Territory of Oklahoma shall extend to any crime committed within the body of said Territory, or in any lands or reservations attached to said Territory for judicial purposes, and it shall not be any defense that the offense was committed by an Indian upon another Indian of the same or any other tribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That when such offense is committed on an Indian reservation or other public lands of the United States not opened to settlement (not merely reserved for public uses) the prosecution shall be in the name of the United States of America, and the expenses shall be paid by the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I move to strike out the first section of the bill as amended down to the word "crime," in line 7, and to insert:

That the courts of the Territory of Oklahoma shall hereafter have exclusive jurisdiction of all crimes—

Changing the word "crime" to "crimes."

Mr. CALL. Does that leave the body of the section as it now stands?

Mr. VEST. It will leave the bill as it is. The way the bill reads now it extends the jurisdiction—to any crime committed within the body of said Territory, or in any lands or reservations attached to said Territory for judicial purposes.

Mr. COKE. I will ask the Senator if he proposes that this court shall take the jurisdiction now exercised by outside courts?

Mr. VEST. It of course will take that jurisdiction.

Mr. COKE. Of all the outside courts?

Mr. VEST. The effect of the amendment would be to give exclusive jurisdiction to the courts of Oklahoma Territory over all crimes committed within that Territory and the reservations which are attached to it for judicial purposes.

Mr. President, I have had occasion repeatedly to express my opinion on this subject, and I undertake to say now that no valid argument can be made against this amendment at all. On the other hand, every argument that is possible it seems to me is in favor of the amendment as proposed.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to just one single fact. I have before me the report of the Attorney-General of the expenses of the different judicial districts of the United States for the year 1891. That is the last report made. In the great city of New York, which is in the southern district of New York, there being three districts in the State, the expenses of the Federal courts during 1891 were $39,365.88. In the eastern district of Texas, where the Federal court at Paris has jurisdiction over the Indian Territory under the law of Congress, the expenses for 1891 were $205,220.49, more than $150,000 in excess of the expenses in the great city of the country. Not only that, but in the western district of Arkansas, where the Federal court at Fort Smith has jurisdiction over the Indian Territory, the expenses for 1891 were $48,277.04, or $9,000 in excess of the expenses of the Federal courts in the city of New York.

In the district of Kansas, where the Federal court has jurisdiction over the Indian Territory, the expenses for 1891 were $22,777.90. In the eastern district of Missouri, where is located the great city of St. Louis, the expenses were only $19,237.50 for the same time. In Illinois, for the northern district, where the great city of Chicago is located, the expenses of the Federal courts for the same year were $9,052.63. In Pennsylvania, for the eastern district, where the great city of Philadelphia is located, the expenses of the courts for the same time were $12,058.44, or $10,000 less than the court in Kansas, nearly $195,000 less than the district in Texas where the court with Federal jurisdiction over the Indian Territory is located, and $36,000 less than the expenses of the court for the western district of Arkansas.

Mr. COCKRELL. And that additional expense has been incurred under the claim to get good jurors?

Mr. VEST. As my colleague suggests, the argument that has heretofore been made as overwhelming in favor of this extraordinary anomaly of jurisdiction in making outside courts in the States have the jurisdiction to drag these Indians away and try them before alien juries was that you could not get a jury of sufficient intelligence in the Indian Territory. I have here on my desk a letter from the late governor of Oklahoma Territory in which he states that there is not the slightest difficulty about obtaining juries. I have also a letter from the present judge of the court there, a citizen of my own State, who says that the juries in Oklahoma Territory compare now favorably with those in any of the adjacent States. The great complaint made by the Indians now is that there are too many white men among them, that railroads have been constructed there. The natural and irresistible overflow of population from the adjoining States has rendered the jury system there equal to that in any of the States of the Union, I might say certainly equal to that in any of the States in the West and South.

Mr. President, either in the line of economy or in that broader and more extensive view of the question which involves the civilization of the Indian why should we drag these Indians out of the Territory? After giving them a governor, a court, a judge, a clerk, and a marshal why should we drag them out and try them before white juries in communities where they have never been, thrown into jail without friends, with all the prejudices of a frontier against them? And then we say to them, forsooth, imitate us and learn our civilization and obey our laws!

It seems to me that if there were any argument in the world that could induce those Indians to rebel against the Government it would be the treatment we have imposed upon them in this coercive process. I have labored incessantly for nearly fifteen years in the Senate to do away with this outrage, but the local influences have always defeated it. There are the saloon-keepers, the tavern-keepers, and the storekeepers in Fort Smith, and Paris, and the town in Kansas where the court is held, all of whom are a close corporation to defeat any such legislation. They want prisoners brought there, and witnesses brought there, and attorneys brought there in order to put money in their pockets. They care no more for the Indians than for so many bales of goods that are to be used for commercial purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of the first section down to and including the word "crime," in line 7, in the following words:

That the jurisdiction of the courts of the Territory of Oklahoma shall extend to any crime.

And to insert:

That the courts of the Territory of Oklahoma shall hereafter have exclusive jurisdiction of all crimes.

So as to make the bill read:

That the courts of the Territory of Oklahoma shall hereafter have exclusive jurisdiction of all crimes committed within the body of said Territory, or in any lands or reservations attached to said Territory for judicial purposes; and it shall not be any defense that the offense was committed by an Indian upon another Indian of the same or any other tribe.

Mr. CULLOM. This bill comes from the Committee on Indian Affairs. I see that the chairman of that committee is not present.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator who reported the bill is in his seat. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] reported the bill from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM. Then I have nothing further to say. I thought probably the bill was reported by either the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] or the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. I see neither of those Senators present.

Mr. MORGAN. The bill came from the Committee on Indian Affairs. I will say to the Senator, by way of the Committee on the Judiciary. It was referred to that committee first and they sent it to us.

Mr. CULLOM. I agree with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. MORGAN. I do, too.

Mr. CULLOM. I think this bill ought to be passed. There certainly has been an unnecessary expense incurred and a great outrage committed upon those Indians in the manner in which justice has been administered there.

Mr. VEST. I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a minute or two, in order to explain the status of the legislation now on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senator from Missouri may proceed. The Chair hears none.

Mr. VEST. The first act which passed Congress, and which I had the honor to introduce, is Public Act No. 98, "An act to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," which was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary by myself, passed the Senate, was amended in the other House, and afterwards put in its present form by a committee of conference. The jurisdiction of the court which was established in the Indian Territory—and that was the first court ever established there—is defined in the following language:

SEC. 5. That the court hereby established shall have exclusive original jurisdiction over all offenses against the laws of the United States committed within the Indian Territory as in this act defined, not punishable by death or by imprisonment at hard labor.

SEC. 6. That the court hereby established shall have jurisdiction in all civil cases between citizens of the United States who are residents of the Indian Territory, or between citizens of the United States or of any State or Territory therein, and any citizen of or person or persons residing or found in the Indian Territory, and when the value of the thing in controversy or damages or money claimed shall amount to $100 or more.

That was the extent of the jurisdiction which I could obtain for this court in conference, for I was one of the conferees. It will be noticed that this is somewhat upon the line of the jurisdiction conferred upon the Federal courts generally by the judiciary act of 1789. Afterwards, when we passed the Oklahoma bill, as it was called, an amendment was made to the judicial jurisdiction in the following language:

And the jurisdiction of the United States court established under and by virtue of an act entitled "An act to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes"— approved March 1, 1889, is hereby limited to and shall extend only over the Indian Territory as defined in this section; that the court established by said act shall, in addition to the jurisdiction conferred thereon by said act, have and exercise within the limits of the Indian Territory jurisdiction in all civil cases in the Indian Territory except cases over which the tribal courts have exclusive jurisdiction; and in all cases on contracts entered into by citizens of any tribe, etc.

From which I have just read—

Sections 34 and 35 of the same act are as follows:

SEC. 34. That original jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States court in the Indian Territory to enforce the provisions of Title XXVIII, chapters 3 and 4, of the Revised Statutes of the United States in said Territory, except the offenses defined and embraced in sections 2142 and 2143: Provided, That as to the violations of the provisions of section 2139 of said Revised Statutes, the jurisdiction of said court in the Indian Territory shall be concurrent with the jurisdiction exercised in the enforcement of such provisions by the United States courts for the western district of Arkansas and the eastern district of Texas: Provided, That all violations of said chapters 3 and 4 prior to the passage of this act shall be prosecuted in the said United States courts, respectively, the same as if this act had not been passed.

SEC. 35. That exclusive original jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States court in the Indian Territory to enforce the provisions of chapter 4, Title LXX, of the Revised Statutes of the United States entitled "Crimes against justice," in all cases where the crimes mentioned therein are committed in any judicial proceeding in the Indian Territory and where such crimes affect or impede the enforcement of the laws in the courts established in said Territory: Provided, That all violations of the provisions of said chapter prior to the passage of this act shall be prosecuted in the United States courts for the western district of Arkansas and the eastern district of Texas, respectively, the same as if this act had not been passed.

These are the only acts in regard to jurisdiction, civil and criminal, in the Indian Territory, and it can be stated in one sentence that the result of all of it was that the jurisdiction over the higher classes of felonies was given to the outside courts, namely, at Paris, at Fort Smith, and in Kansas, giving to the court in the Indian Territory which we established originally, by the act from which I have first read, jurisdiction over offenses for manslaughter in the second degree down. In other words, you can take an Indian, when his life is at stake, and drag him over to Fort Smith and try him before an Arkansas jury, or take him to Paris, in Texas, and try him before a Texas jury, or carry him to Kansas and try him before a Kansas jury, and that is called giving a man a right to trial by a jury of his peers!

If that man, however, has stolen a horse, or if he has cut timber on the public land, or if he has been guilty of manslaughter in the second or third degree, you can then indict him and try him at Muskogee, in the Indian Territory. This is the splendid example of judicial justice which we hold out to those Indians when we ask them to accept our civilization and fit themselves to become citizens of the United States!

Mr. CULLOM. The proposition of the Senator from Missouri is to try them for all offenses at Muskogee before whatever court is there?

Mr. VEST. My proposition—and it is the only one which is based upon absolutely equal justice—is to try these Indians in the court in the Indian Territory which we established and to which we gave jurisdiction over that Territory.

Mr. CULLOM. I have always believed that to be right, but we have never been able to succeed in changing the law heretofore.

Mr. VEST. Not one single argument, in my judgment, can be made against it. The juries are just as good there as you can find anywhere. We have a United States judge appointed there.

Mr. PERKINS. If the Senator will permit a suggestion, I think the reason why this jurisdiction was not conferred upon the courts in the Indian Territory when we considered the bill from which the Senator has read, was upon the theory that competent juries could not be obtained in the Territory.

Mr. VEST. I know that was the reason assigned.

Mr. PERKINS. And it was thought necessary to go to these States to get competent jurors; I think the experiences of that court have demonstrated the error of that position.

Mr. VEST. Entirely. The governor of the Territory, the judge of the Territory, and everyone who has lived in the vicinity of that Territory knows that you can get just as good juries there as you can in Missouri, Arkansas, Texas, or any other State. Just as good juries can be obtained there now. I pass through the Indian Territory two or three times every year, and all the evidences of civilization are found along the line of the railroad.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COKE. I think perhaps it would be better to have the bill go over than to attempt to dispose of it under the five-minute rule. There are several Senators who are interested in it who are not present, and I should like to have them present when it is disposed of.

Mr. MORGAN. Before that order is taken, however, I should like to say a word about the bill, if the Senate will indulge me. The attorney-general of Oklahoma Territory came before the Committee on Indian Affairs after the bill had been before the Judiciary Committee and the Senate had then referred it to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and he said it was impossible for him to administer the law in that country so as to protect human life and human property in their present conditions; that certain reservations had been made of jurisdiction in certain cases in favor of the Federal courts at Paris, Tex., at Fort Smith, Ark., and at Fort Scott, Kans., as I remember, and it made a divided power; that the Indians for one character of offenses in Oklahoma were triable by the Oklahoma Territorial laws, and for other offenses they were triable by the laws of Kansas, and so on.

Now, the proposition was this, which is exactly in line with what the Senator from Missouri proposes in his amendment and which I think is really expressed in the bill itself, though I make no objection to his amendment—the proposition was that Oklahoma being a Territory like all other Territories, and these Indians being about all of them to become citizens of the United States under agreements either then pending or actually consummated, the jurisdiction of the Oklahoma courts should extend equally over all classes of citizenship, negroes, Indians, white people, Chinamen, and everybody else, so as to complete the jurisdictional power of Oklahoma Territory. The committee thought that it was a correct proposition and reported this bill, and while I admit that the Senator from Missouri has made it a little more definite in its expression, at the same time I have no objection to his amendment at all. It carries out the idea of the committee.

Since that time the title to these lands has been extinguished by contracts. Not all of them have been ratified and confirmed as yet by the Congress of the United States, but they will all be, and the Indians come then upon the footing of citizenship of the United States as completely as any of us. That being true, I do not see any reason at all why for any offense that an Indian may commit against another Indian (for that is the class of offenses which are now cognizable outside, I understand, or for any other offenses the party should be carried away from his Territorial government).

I reported a bill the other day from the Committee on Indian Affairs to create a new county out of eight Indian tribes up in the northeastern corner of the Indian Territory, bounded on the east by Missouri and on the north by Kansas, with the full consent of all of them. They will enter the Territory of Oklahoma, if that bill is passed, under the title of the county of Cayuga, and it will be a most admirable county in respect of its citizenship, enlightenment, prosperity, industry, good order, and everything of that kind. If we pass the bill which the committee have recommended those Indians will be brought right in under the laws of Oklahoma just as if they were all white people, and there is no reason at all why the government of the Territory of Oklahoma should not dispose of all the property rights and other personal rights of an Indian just as well as it should dispose of the rights of a white man, or a negro, or any person else.

So I fully concur with the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, and I am very sorry that the Senator from Texas thinks it best that the bill shall go over. However, as he objects, of course I can not resist the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Texas to object to the further consideration of the bill?

Mr. COKE. I ask that it may go over.

Mr. COCKRELL. Without prejudice, retaining its place on this Calendar.

Mr. COKE. Without prejudice.

Mr. MORGAN. Very good.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas objects to the further consideration of the bill. It will retain its place on the Calendar, going over without prejudice.

OSAGE RIVER BRIDGE.

The bill (H. R. 5354) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Osage River between the town of Warsaw and the mouth of Turkey Creek, in Benton County, Mo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE AT QUINCY, N. DAK.

The bill (S. 2334) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North at Quincy, N. Dak., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 3, line 1, after the words "as a," to strike out "high span" and insert "high;" in line 2, after the word "bridge," to strike out "and shall contain" and insert "with;" in the same line, after the word "span," to insert "or spans;" in line 3, after the word "dimensions," to insert "and location;" in line 4, after the word "span," to insert "or spans;" and in the same line, after the word "shall," to strike out "be maintained on the main channel of the river at an accessible and navigable point" and insert "have a clear headroom of 36 feet above the high-water plane of 1882;" so as to read:

That said bridge shall be constructed as a high bridge, with a span or spans of such dimensions and location as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, which said span or spans shall have a clear head room of 36 feet above the high-water plane of 1882, and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with, and the bridge itself at right angles to, the current of the river.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 5, after the word "county," to strike out "or;" in line 11, after the word "at," to strike out "all" and insert "average low and highwater," and in line 19, after the word "be," to insert "commenced or;" so as to make the section read:

That any bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be built and located under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and to secure that object the said county commissioners shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawing of the said bridge, and a map of the location, giving, for the space of one-half mile above and one-half mile below the proposed location, the high and low water lines upon the banks of the river, the direction and strength of the currents at average low and high water stages, with the sounding, accurately showing the bed of the stream, and the location of any other bridge or bridges, such map to be sufficiently in detail to enable the Secretary of War to judge of the proper location of said bridge, and shall furnish such other information as may be required for a full and satisfactory understanding of the subject; and until such plan and location of the bridge are approved by the Secretary of War the bridge shall not be commenced or built; and should any change be made in the plan of said bridge during the progress of construction or after completion, such change shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The word "of" is omitted in the print in line 7. The word will be inserted. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARTIFICIAL STONE PAVEMENT PATENTS.

The bill (S. 716) for the relief of the owners of the Schillinger patents was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of John J. Schillinger, and his assignees and their licensees, for compensation for the use of the patented inventions of John J. Schillinger in the laying of the artificial stone pavements in and about the Capitol grounds, under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol, between October 11, 1875, and October 18, 1881.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA.

The bill (S. 795) to provide for the erection of a public building at Charlottesville, Va., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KLAMATH RIVER INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

The bill (H. R. 38) to provide for the disposition and sale of lands known as the Klamath River Indian Reservation was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That all of the lands embraced in what was Klamath River Reservation, in the State of California, as set apart and reserved under authority of law by an Executive order dated November 16, 1855, are hereby declared to be subject to settlement, entry, and purchase under the laws of the United States granting homestead and preemption rights and authorizing the sale of mineral and timber lands: Provided, That any Indian now located upon said reservation may, at any time within one year from the passage of this act, apply to the Secretary of the Interior for an allotment of land for himself, and, if the head of a family, for the members of his family, under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes," and, if found entitled thereto, shall have the same allotted as provided in said act or any act amendatory thereof. And the Secretary of the Interior may reserve from settlement, entry, or purchase any tract or tracts of land upon which any village or settlement of Indians is now located, and may set apart the same for the permanent use and occupation of said village or settlement of Indians. And any person entitled to the benefits of the homestead laws of the United States who has in good faith prior to the passage of this act, made actual settlement upon any lands within said reservation not allotted under the foregoing proviso and not reserved for the permanent use and occupation of any village or settlement of Indians, with the intent to enter the same under the homestead laws shall have the preferred right, at the expiration of said period of one year, to enter and acquire title to the land so settled upon, not exceeding 160 acres, upon the payment thereof of $1.25 an acre, and such settler shall have three months after public notice given that such lands are subject to entry within which to file in the proper land office his application therefor; and in case of conflicting claims between settlers the land shall be awarded to the settler first in order of time: Provided, That any portion of said land more valuable for its mineral deposits than for agricultural purposes, or for its timber, shall be entered only under the law authorizing the entry and sale of timber or mineral lands: And provided further, That the heirs of any deceased settler shall succeed to the rights of such settler under this act: Provided further, That the proceeds arising from the sale of said lands shall constitute a fund to be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the maintenance and education of the Indians now residing on said lands and their children.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator who reported the bill, I see, is not present, and there is a point or two in it that it may be necessary to have him present to explain.

Mr. FELTON. I think I can explain it to the Senator's satisfaction.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no written report with the bill. Therefore we can ascertain nothing except what is upon the face of it. The whole House bill has been stricken out and an amendment proposed as a substitute by the Senate committee, and there is some difference between them. I should like to know how much land there is in the reservation and how many Indians are upon the reservation. The substitute has a provision in it which authorizes the Indians to make a selection of land in severalty, and the allotment is to be made to them. How long are the lands to be reserved under the bill in order to give the Indians an opportunity to make that selection? There is not a particle of a provision in the bill to that effect, as I understand it.

Mr. FELTON. It must be made within a year.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Indian has a year within which to make his selection of the land, and what is to become of the land prior to that time? When the year has expired there will not be a foot of land upon which he can make the selection. There is no land reserved by the provisions of the bill, and it will be disposed of if it is worth anything. As we know, the pressure to enter upon all these reservations is very great. I should like to have some explanation of these things before action upon the bill.

Mr. FELTON. This bill passed the other House and came to the Senate. It was objectionable in that form to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and to the chairman of the subcommittee which considered it. As the Senator is aware, committees usually do not move without getting a recommendation from the appropriate Department, and the committee in this case had the recommendation of the Interior Department to draw the bill as it is reported. The bill is entirely satisfactory to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], who reported it.

The facts of the case are these: The Klamath Indian Reservation was set apart by a proclamation of the President some twenty years ago, I think. I am not positive about the time. It never has been used as an Indian reservation.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the size of it?

Mr. FELTON. It is about 20 miles long, and I suppose 2 or 3 miles wide. The tortuous, steep bank of the river forms almost all of it. There is an Indian reservation within 20 miles of the river, where these Indians can go if they want to do so. The number is variously estimated at from 40 to 60 Indians. Practically they have no business. They are peculiar Indians. They are creatures of their environment. They are as mild as they may be.

The bill makes provision for them to select allotments in severalty; and if they have Indian villages, which they have not, it allows them to retain those, and it gives them a year's time within which to make selections.

Mr. COCKRELL. Right in that connection, suppose all the lands are taken up in three months after the Indian reservation is opened, what will the Indians then have to select from after they have come to the conclusion to make a selection? There is the material point in the bill.

Mr. FELTON. The point is simply this. There are now a great many settlers upon that land. It is not practically an Indian reservation. It never has been used for that purpose. The provisions of the bill open the land to settlers after providing, as I before stated, in regard to the Indians, and lands more valuable for timber or mineral deposits shall be entered under the timber act and the mineral land laws. Of the arable lands I would not undertake to say just how many acres there are, but I do not think there are 1,000 acres on the whole margin of that river. A few of these Indians live at the mouth of the river, I understand, fishing and hunting and working for the white people. They are nomadic Indians.

I can say to the Senator that this bill has had the scrutiny of the Interior Department and been approved by it. It has had the scrutiny and approval of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], who is always alive to the interests of the Indians. I can see no reason why the bill should not be passed, and these lands allowed to be entered for the use of settlers. All the money that comes from the sale of the lands the bill provides shall be used for the purpose of taking care of these Indians.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that, but if there is any expectation that an Indian will take an allotment and make a selection of it, I see no provision to reserve the land. If the land is worth anything at all, as a matter of course the very moment it is opened it will be taken up, and then if an Indian wants to take land there will be nothing to take.

Mr. FELTON. The Indian has one year within which to make his selection.

Mr. COCKRELL. But there is not an acre of land reserved from settlement and cultivation out of which he can take it after that time. He must take it as quickly as it is opened or he will have no chance.

Mr. FELTON. I say he has an entire year within which to make the selection.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator does not seem to catch the point. He has a year within which to select, but these lands are to be opened upon the passage of the bill to settlement. Suppose every acre of land is taken inside of thirty days and at the end of six months an Indian wants to select a piece for allotment in severalty, how is he going to do it? It has not been reserved. There is no provision for reserving it. There is no restriction upon it, but it is opened to settlement immediately upon the passage of the bill, and there will be nothing for the Indians to select.

Mr. FELTON. I will frankly say that I do not think there is an Indian out of the forty or fifty who are there who will ever take an allotment.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is what I am trying to get at, because if there are any Indians there who are going to make any selections of land in severalty this bill does not protect them at all.

Mr. FELTON. The whole matter was carefully considered by the committee, and there is no doubt but that the Indians will have ample opportunity to make their selections if they so desire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FELTON. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas were appointed.

NATIONAL NEW HAVEN BANK.

The bill (S. 234) for the relief of the National New Haven Bank of the State of Connecticut was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay the National Bank of New Haven $3,519.15.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate do now adjourn. [Putting the question.]

Mr. CAMERON. I move a call of the Senate. There is no quorum here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich.	Daniel.	Manderson.	Ransom.
Allen.	Dolph.	Mitchell.	Squire.
Albion.	Felton.	Morgan.	Stewart.
Bate.	Frye.	Paddock.	Stockbridge.
Berry.	George.	Palmer.	Turpie.
Brice.	Gray.	Pasco.	Vest.
Butler.	Hansbrough.	Peffer.	Walshall.
Call.	Harris.	Perkins.	Warren.
Casey.	Higgins.	Platt.	White.
Chandler.	Hill.	Power.	Wilson.
Cockrell.	Jones, Ark.	Proctor.
Coke.	Kyle.	Pugh.
Cullom.	McPherson.	Quay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question recurs on the motion made by the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CHANDLER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. PLATT's name was called). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR].

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. I will therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. I do not know how he would vote. If he were present I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who is absent, and being absent I suppose he is in favor of adjourning. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—21.
Aldrich.	Cockrell.	Jones, Ark.	Quay.
Bate.	Daniel.	Kyle.	Ransom.
Berry.	George.	McPherson.	Stewart.
Brice.	Harris.	Morgan.
Butler.	Higgins.	Palmer.
Cameron.	Hill.	Perkins.

NAYS—25.
Allen.	Dolph.	Power.	Stockbridge.
Albion.	Frye.	Proctor.	Vest.
Casey.	Gray.	Pugh.	Warren.
Chandler.	Mitchell.	Sanders.	White.
Coke.	Paddock.	Sawyer.
Cullom.	Pasco.	Shoup.
	Peffer.	Squire.

NOT VOTING—42.
Barbour.	Felton.	Irby.	Teller.
Blackburn.	Gallinger.	Jones, Nev.	Turpie.
Blodgett.	Gibson, La.	Kenna.	Vance.
Carey.	Gibson, Md.	McMillan.	Vilas.
Carlisle.	Gordon.	Manderson.	Voorhees.
Colquitt.	Gorman.	Mills.	Walshall.
Davis.	Hale.	Morrill.	Washburn.
Dawes.	Hansbrough.	Pettigrew.	Wilson.
Dixon.	Hawley.	Platt.	Wolcott.
Dubois.	Hiscock.	Sherman.
Faulkner.	Hoar.	Stanford.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

TELEPHONE LINE ON VIRGINIA COAST.

Mr. FRYE. The bill (H. R. 7727) to authorize the construction of a telephone line on the coast of Virginia, from Cape Charles to Assateague Island, in aid of the preservation of life and property, is Order of Business 592 on the Calendar. The Department is very desirous that that bill shall become a law, if it is passed at all, so that a contract may be made immediately for the building of this telephone line. It is a telephone line between seven life-saving stations in Virginia. There is no communication between them now, and there were seventeen disasters there the last season. I ask unanimous consent that that bill may be acted upon.

Mr. BATE. I call for the regular order. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee objects to the request of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BATE. Let us go on with the Calendar in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill on the Calendar will be proceeded with.

MARIA S. WHITNEY.

The bill (S. 817) granting a pension to Maria S. Whitney, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 4, after the word "roll," to strike out "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws;" in line 6, after the word "Whitney," to strike out "as mother" and insert "stepmother;" and in line 8, at the end of the bill, to add the words "at the rate of $12 per month;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Maria S. Whitney, stepmother of John M. Whitney, late acting assistant surgeon United States Navy, at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to postpone action on the amendments of the committee?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report submitted by Mr. GALLINGER March 23, 1892, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 817) granting a pension to Maria S. Whitney, have examined the same and report:

A similar bill passed the Senate during the second session of the Fifty-first Congress, but was not reached for consideration in the House. The main facts are that claimant married the father of John M. Whitney in the year 1854, at which time the son was 11 years of age. She cared for him as a mother until he enlisted in 1862. He was a member of a Massachusetts cavalry regiment, and subsequently hospital steward and acting assistant surgeon, his last duty being on the steamer Norwich. While acting in that capacity he was drowned August 16, 1864, in the St. Johns River, Florida.

The testimony shows that soldier contributed to the support of his father and stepmother, and also that claimant is destitute and advanced in years. Being a stepmother she can not secure pension through the regular channel, and as a necessity comes to Congress. The claim seems meritorious in every particular, and your committee recommend the passage of the bill, with the following amendments:

In lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws;" in line 6, strike out the words "as mother" and substitute the word "stepmother," and add to the bill the words "at the rate of $12 per month."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments proposed by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DABNEY, SIMMONS & CO.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent that the order by which the bill (S. 1426) for the relief of Dabney, Simmons & Co., of Boston, Mass., was indefinitely postponed be reconsidered, and that the bill be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has the bill been once on the Calendar?

Mr. ALLEN. It has not. It was adversely reported by the Committee on Claims and indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When was it reported?

Mr. ALLEN. It was reported April 27, 1892.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill indicated by him was indefinitely postponed on the 27th day of April be reconsidered, and that the bill be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The next bill on the Calendar will be proceeded with.

ABIGAIL L. FINNEY.

The bill (S. 1356) granting a pension to Abigail L. Finney was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 6, after the word "of," to strike out "Abigail" and insert "Abigail;" and in the same line, to add the words "dependent mother of Sylvester P. Finney, late of Company E, Tenth New York Heavy Artillery;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Abigail L. Finney, dependent mother of Sylvester P. Finney, late of Company E, Tenth New York Heavy Artillery.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Abigail L. Finney."

D. D. T. FARNSWORTH.

The bill (S. 2465) for the relief of D. D. T. Farnsworth, of Upshur County, W. Va., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one thousand two hundred" and insert "one hundred and seventy-six;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $176 to D. D. T. Farnsworth, of Buckhannon, Upshur County, W. Va., in full satisfaction for use and destruction of property by the Federal Army during the war of the rebellion.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CITIZENS' BANK OF LOUISIANA.

The bill (S. 145) to authorize the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana, etc., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and enter up judgment, as if it had original jurisdiction of the case, on the claim of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana, with interest thereon, against the United States, growing out of the seizure and covering into the Treasury of the United States of certain moneys of that bank by Gen. B. F. Butler, commanding the United States forces in Louisiana 1862.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 6 I move to strike out the words "with interest thereon."

Mr. WHITE. Those words were left in by mistake.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am glad to know it, because I hoped the committee were not proposing to deviate from the rule.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, I do not think there is a quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania suggests the absence of a quorum. Under the rule the roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It being evident that no quorum is present, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that that motion is not in order until it is determined from the roll call whether a quorum is present.

The following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Felton,	Morgan,	Ransom,
Allison,	Frye,	Padlock,	Sanders,
Bate,	George,	Palmer,	Sawyer,
Berry,	Gray,	Pasco,	Shoup,
Butler,	Harris,	Peffer,	Stewart,
Call,	Jones, Ark.	Perkins,	Stockbridge,
Chandler,	Kyle,	Platt,	Turpie,
Cockrell,	McPherson,	Power,	Vest,
Coke,	Manderson,	Proctor,	Warren,
Daniel,	Mills,	Pugh,	White,
Dolph,	Mitchell,	Quay,	Wilson,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-four Senators, not a quorum, have answered to their names.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. DOLPH. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the Senate adjourn, on which motion the Senator from Oregon demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WARREN (when Mr. CAREY's name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. CAREY] is absent from the city. He is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY].

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I do not know how he would vote if present, and I therefore abstain from voting.

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MILLS (after having voted in the negative). Is the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] recorded as voting?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He is not recorded.

Mr. MILLS. Then I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. TURPIE. I am paired with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], and therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—19.
Barbour,	Daniel,	McPherson,	Ransom,
Berry,	George,	Morgan,	Squire,
Butler,	Gorman,	Palmer,	Stewart,
Cameron,	Harris,	Pasco,	Vest.
Cockrell,	Hill,	Pugh,
NAYS—26.
Aldrich,	Coke,	Mitchell,	Sanders,
Allen,	Cullom,	Paddock,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Dolph,	Peffer,	Shoup,
Bate,	Felton,	Perkins,	Stockbridge,
Call,	Frye,	Platt,	Warren.
Casey,	Gray,	Power,
Chandler,	Kyle,	Proctor,
NOT VOTING—43.
Blackburn,	Gallinger,	Jones, Ark.	Teller,
Blodgett,	Gibson, La.	Jones, Nev.	Turpie,
Brice,	Gibson, Md.	Kenna,	Vance,
Carey,	Gordon,	McMillan,	Vilas,
Carlisle,	Hale,	Manderson,	Voorhees,
Colquitt,	Hansbrough,	Mills,	Walshall,
Davis,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Washburn,
Dawes,	Higgins,	Pettigrew,	White,
Dixon,	Hiscock,	Quay,	Wilson,
Dubois,	Hoar,	Sherman,	Wolcott.
Faulkner,	Irby,	Stanford,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to the bill under consideration.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 5, 1892, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 4, 1892.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Ferdinand B. Earhart, of Louisiana, to be attorney of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana, vice William Grant resigned.

CONSUL.

Richard Lambert, of San Francisco, Cal., to be consul of the United States at Mazatlan, to which office he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate, vice Edward G. Kelton, resigned.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Infantry arm.

First Lieut. Daniel H. Brush, Seventeenth Infantry, to be captain, May 2, 1892, vice Howe, Seventeenth Infantry, retired from active service.

Second Lieut. Daniel B. Devore, Twenty-third Infantry, to be first lieutenant, May 2, 1892, vice Brush, Seventeenth Infantry, promoted.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 4, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ADDITIONAL ROOM SPACE, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Adjutant-General, representing the necessity for additional room space for his office, to accommodate the division of military information as reorganized and enlarged, and recommending that the request be complied with; ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

URGENT DEFICIENCY, SUPREME COURT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting a petition signed by the criers and bailiffs of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and recommending that an urgent deficiency appropriation be made covering this subject-matter; ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

XXIII—246

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER. There are quite a number of Senate bills that came over day before yesterday, the titles of which have been printed in the RECORD. If there be no objection, the Chair will refer them without having them separately read at the Clerk's desk.

There was no objection.

The bills and references are as follows:

A bill (S. 453) granting a pension to Eliza Conroy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 520) granting an increase of pension to Oliver P. Goodwin—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 789) for the relief of Warren Hall—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1140) for the relief of John C. Smith, Milton Evans, and others—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

A bill (S. 1143) granting a pension to Mary A. Wise—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1279) for the correction of the military record of Wilhelm Spiegelburg—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 1348) for the issue of ordnance stores and supplies to the State of Nebraska to replace similar stores destroyed by fire—to the Committee on the Militia.

A bill (S. 1535) to increase the pension of Andrew J. Monro—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1777) for the erection of a public building at Selma, Ala.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 1975) for the protection of livery-stable keepers and other persons keeping horses at livery within the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (S. 2067) for a public building at Altoona, Pa., and appropriating money therefor—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 2087) for the relief of Charles Fletcher, alias James H. Mitchell—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2575) to provide for the sale of certain lots in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (S. 2605) granting a pension to Mrs. Adelia New, of Indianapolis, Ind.—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. ROCKWELL, for ten days, on account of important business.

NEMIAH GARRISON, ASSIGNEE.

Mr. WINN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3508) for the relief of Nemiah Garrison, assignee of Moses Perkins. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Nemiah Garrison, a citizen of the State of Georgia, the sum of $750, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in accordance with the judgment of the Court of Claims in the case of Nemiah Garrison, assignee of Moses Perkins vs. The United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some explanation of it. The report, I suppose, accompanies the bill.

Mr. WINN. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3508) for the relief of Nemiah Garrison, assignee of Moses Perkins, submit the following report:

This claim was submitted to the Fiftieth Congress and a report was made thereon by the Committee on Claims. As the investigations of your committee have led them to substantially the same results as those arrived at by the committee of the Fiftieth Congress, it is deemed unnecessary to recapitulate the facts. A copy of the report in the Fiftieth Congress is attached hereto for information and made a part of this report.

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

[House Report No. 610, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims have considered House bill No. 7109, for the relief of the executor or administrator of the estate of Nemiah Garrison, assignee of Moses Perkins, and recommend that it do pass, with the following amendment: Strike out the words "with interest," in line 7.

This matter received the favorable consideration of the Committee on Claims in the Forty-fifth Congress. The following report from that committee is adopted and made part hereof:

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill H. R. 936, have had the same under consideration, and present the following report thereon: "The facts upon which this claim are based were investigated and determined by the Court of Claims, which rendered judgment against the United States on the 23d day of March, A. D. 1890, as fully appears by a report of the proceedings had in said court made to the first session of the Thirty-sixth Congress (Report Court of Claims No. 252). A copy of the opinion of said court in the case is hereto attached and made part of this report."

Your committee report back said bill, with an amendment, as follows, viz: In line 7, strike out the words "with interest;" and, thus amended, recommend its passage.

Mr. BURROWS. Do I understand this was passed upon by the Committee on War Claims?

Mr. WINN. Yes?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WINN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. WISE. I am instructed by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to report back the bill S. 1295, and to ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of it, and that it be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1295) to authorize the construction of jetties, piers, and breakwaters at private expense in the Gulf of Mexico, at the mouth of Ropes Pass, in the State of Texas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE] asks that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of this bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CHINESE EXCLUSION.

Mr. GEARY. I have a conference report which I wish to present. I send it to the Clerk's desk, and move that it be adopted; and upon that I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The conference report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill H. R. 6185, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

In section 3, line 2, after the word "act," insert the words "or the acts hereby extended."

In section 4, line 2, after the word "descent," strike out the word "once."

In section 4, after the words "United States," in line 3, strike out all down to the word "shall," in line 6.

In section 4, line 7, strike out the words "six months" and insert in lieu thereof "one year."

Add new sections as follows:

"SEC. 5. That after the passage of this act, on an application to any judge or court of the United States in the first instance for a writ of habeas corpus by a Chinese person seeking to land in the United States, to whom that privilege has been denied, no bail shall be allowed, and such application shall be heard and determined promptly, without unnecessary delay.

"SEC. 6. And it shall be the duty of all Chinese laborers within the limits of the United States at the time of the passage of this act, and who are entitled to remain in the United States, to apply to the collector of internal revenue of their respective districts, within one year after the passage of this act, for a certificate of residence, and any Chinese laborer within the limits of the United States who shall neglect, fail, or refuse to comply with the provisions of this act, or who, after one year from the passage hereof, shall be found within the jurisdiction of the United States without such certificate of residence, shall be deemed and adjudged to be unlawfully within the United States, and may be arrested by any United States customs official, collector of internal revenue or his deputies, United States marshal or his deputies and taken before a United States judge, whose duty it shall be to order that he be deported from the United States, as heretofore provided, unless he shall establish clearly to the satisfaction of said judge that by reason of accident, sickness, or other unavoidable cause he has been unable to procure his certificate, and to the satisfaction of the court, and by at least one credible white witness that he was a resident of the United States at the time of the passage of this act; and if upon the hearing it shall appear that he is so entitled to a certificate, it shall be granted upon his paying the costs. Should it appear that said Chinaman had procured a certificate, which has been lost or destroyed, he shall be detained and judgment suspended a reasonable time to enable him to procure a duplicate from the officer granting it, and in such cases the costs of said arrest and trial shall be in the discretion of the court. And any Chinese person other than a Chinese laborer, having a right to be and remain in the United States, desiring such certificate as evidence of such right, may apply for and receive the same without charge.

"SEC. 7. That immediately after the passage of this act, the Secretary of the Treasury shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the efficient execution of this act, and shall prescribe the necessary forms, and furnish the necessary blanks to enable collectors of internal revenue to issue the certificates required hereby, and make such provisions that certificates may be procured in localities convenient to the applicants. Such certificates shall be issued without charge to the applicant, and shall contain the name, age, local residence, and occupation of the applicant, and such other description of the applicant as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and a duplicate thereof shall be filed in the office of the collector of internal revenue for the district within which such Chinaman makes application.

"SEC. 8. That any person who shall knowingly and falsely alter or substitute any name for the name written in such certificate, or forge such certificate, or knowingly utter any forged or fraudulent certificate, or falsely personate any person named in such certificate, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000, or imprisoned in the penitentiary for a term of not more than five years.

"SEC. 9. The Secretary of the Treasury may authorize the payment of such compensation in the nature of fees to the collectors of internal revenue, for services performed under the provisions of this act, in addition to salaries now allowed by law, as he shall deem necessary, not exceeding the sum of $1 for each certificate issued."

And the House agree to the amendment of the Senate to the title so as to read as follows: "An act to prohibit the coming of Chinese persons into the United States."

T. J. GEARY.

J. LOGAN CHIPMAN.

Managers on the part of the House of Representatives.

J. N. DOLPH.

JOHN T. MORGAN.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the conferees on the part of the House was read, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on H. R. 6185 make the following statement to accompany the report of the conferees of the two Houses.

The first amendment merely makes more certain the laws to be continued in force.

The second amendment provides for the punishment of those who attempt to violate the law the first time instead of for the second offense.

The third amendment increases the limit of punishment from six months to one year.

The other amendments explain themselves.

T. J. GEARY.

J. LOGAN CHIPMAN.

Managers on part of House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California demands the previous question upon the adoption of the report.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I hope we shall have some discussion of this matter, or some explanation of the report greater than this small fragment that has been read. I do not understand, and I take it for granted a great many members do not understand, precisely the effect of the report. Therefore I think we ought to have some discussion upon the report. It is a very important matter, one which was very fully discussed when Senator DOLPH made the report in the Senate, and it is one of importance to the House, and it is a question upon which the House ought to pass more deliberately than it did the bill as it originally passed through the House. I think there ought to be a full explanation of the changes that have been made by the committee of conference. I hope the motion for the previous question will be voted down. We passed the former bill under the spur of the previous question, and passed it without the House understanding it.

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I demand a division.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 97, noes 17.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER put the question on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. HITT. Is there no debate upon this question after the previous question has been ordered?

The SPEAKER. There is, if gentlemen desire it, fifteen minutes on either side.

Mr. HITT. I think there ought to be some explanation of this report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HITT. I shall oppose the adoption of the report. I hope the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARY] who brings in the report is willing to explain it so that an intelligent man watching him closely can get some understanding of the bill, whatever it be, contained or implied in this conference report.

Mr. GEARY. It depends upon the degree of intelligence possessed.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, as it has been reported back by the committee of conference, provides for the continuance of the existing law upon this subject, with the addition of a few amendments agreed to by the Senate, and which are intended to make more effective the operation of the existing law. It is not the House bill. All those drastic features that some gentlemen found so much fault with have been eliminated by the Senate. The Senate has agreed to this report, and we are anxious to get the bill through, because the law expires the day after to-morrow.

Mr. HITT. The statement of the gentleman throws very little light upon the bill. A very close search of a series of several obscure documents is required in order to learn the meaning of this conference report. In the first place, it is the House bill amended by the Senate by the substitution of a bill continuing the existing exclusion laws. To that the committee of conference have made a series of verbal and important amendments in different parts of that Senate bill. Added to that are a series of provisions which are wholly new, and which are added by the conference committee.

The Senate bill continuing the existing law, as an original proposition, would to me be objectionable, especially since the decision of the Supreme Court declaring that the existing law contravened the treaty. But I recognize the circumstances that are around us, the urgent need of prompt action, and the wish of the Pacific States that there should be exclusion legislation, and I would assent to continuing the present stringent laws, with the precautions suggested by the Treasury Department, in order to make the exclusion of Chinese laborers more effective.

It is gratifying to know that we do not to-day have to vote upon a measure that openly, defiantly, and insultingly violated faith as did the House bill.

The measure as at present reported, in so far as it continues the existing law, does in some degree trench upon the treaty, as touching merchants, for instance; and it is with some hesitation that I assent to that; but in view of the fact that it has not brought a rupture in our relations with China, and the earnest desire I feel to take every step that we can as men of honor, representing a nation of truth and courage to do what is right, I will go to the last limit possible within those conditions in legislation to exclude Chinese laborers. But here is a new provision added, which could have been stated very simply by the gentleman from California had he wished to.

It compels every man in this country who is a Chinese laborer to go to the collector of internal revenue, prove his title to remain in the country, and apply for a certificate—a pass, a sort of ticket of leave. To obtain it he must himself prove his whole case; he is assumed to be not entitled to it; the burden of proof is all upon him. The rule of all free countries and all civil laws is reversed. He must prove residence here through a long series of years, back to the date of enactment of the whole series of stringent laws since the treaty of 1880. He must find the witnesses in different places where he may have worked or resided, and one witness must be a white man. Even colored men are not admitted as credible witnesses. Everyone can understand how difficult, how almost impossible it is to make out such a long and costly line of proof, especially to a laboring man. This he must prove affirmatively or he can not get a certificate. If he is not granted a certificate, and we can readily see how officers on the Pacific coast would be glad to refuse it, he is arrested, imprisoned six months or less, and then expelled from the country. If he obtains it he must carry it around with him or be liable instantly and always to arrest, imprisonment, and deportation like a convict. It is proposed to have 100,000, or, some gentlemen assert, 200,000, men in our country ticketed, tagged, almost branded—the old slavery days returned.

Never before in a free country was there such a system of tagging a man, like a dog to be caught by the police and examined, and if this tag or collar is not all right taken to the pound or drowned or shot. Never before was it applied by a free people to a human being, with the exception (which we can never refer to with pride) of the sad days of slavery and the ticket of leave given to convicts allowed to go out awhile from the penitentiary, and the deported convicts at Botany Bay, who had to have a ticket of leave. But here are more than 100,000 men, innocent of offense, who must obtain this certificate, this ticket of leave, and carry it around with them in a free country!

Is that the treatment due to a great body of men to whom we have solemnly promised, in the treaty pledge of our national faith, that they shall have all the rights, immunities, and privileges of citizens and subjects of the most favored nation? The treaty by which we are bound says in article 2, "Chinese laborers who are now in the United States shall be allowed to go and come of their own free will and accord, and shall be accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which are accorded to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation." Who rises here to propose labeling an Englishman or German when he goes through this country, or else make him liable to arrest, imprisonment, and expulsion?

By one of these amendments which the gentleman did not explain, the Chinese laborer who is here and has been, not the one returning to the United States in violation of law, and who has not been able to get a certificate and is so adjudged not entitled to remain, shall be imprisoned at hard labor for a period not exceeding six months and thereafter removed from the United States. This is our treatment of the most favored nation; this is our rule to measure the meaning of those words in our treaties. Is this the treatment we would permit any other people to inflict upon Americans entitled in that country by treaty to all the privileges and immunities and rights of the most favored nation?

Think of the difficulty, the danger of failure and imprisonment to these laborers who may have been here many years, in obtaining the ticket or certificate they are condemned to get or go to jail. Remember the storm of public opinion that this poor creature must meet when he goes before an officer, not to meet a charge of offense by answering the proof against him, the right of freemen in all Christian lands, but as one assumed to be violating law, and compelled, with the burden of proof upon him, to prove that he is entitled, by residence established under this long series of laws, to remain in this country—laws that we have contrived with all the skill that lawyers could command to narrow his rights under the treaty and make his position difficult.

By this bill it is made his duty to go and hunt up a collector of internal revenue, 500 miles away in some cases, apply for a certificate of residence, prove his case, and if he gets his certificate, carry it about always to save him from new torment. How easy for him to fail to make out his whole case and the officer refuse the certificate, especially if the public opinion of the community is strongly against him, for we know well the effect of public opinion upon an officer who is not judicial. That officer refusing the certificate, the man has but one thing to do—to fly or go to prison. And this in the face of our solemn pledge in a treaty! Can the oath of a man ever bind with more obligation than a treaty which one nation makes with another?

An additional objection to this proposed bill is, it will prevent our making a new treaty. It will irritate the Chinese Government to be thus dealt with, paltering with our pledges in the past, and harrying Chinese subjects when we have promised in the third article of the treaty that—

The Government of the United States will exert all its power to devise measures for their protection and to secure to them the same rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions as may be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, and to which they are entitled by treaty.

Already, by the act of October 1, 1888, we have pressed hard upon the rights of China as guaranteed in the treaty, while claiming all that is therein guaranteed to us.

Our relations with China to-day are strained; there has been an earnest, emphatic protest filed by the Chinese minister with the Secretary of State against the act now in force, but there has been no rupture. Now, on the top of that, we take over a hundred thousand subjects of the Chinese Empire and tag them like dogs, or mark them for imprisonment and punishment unless they can prove this right to residence, so hard to prove under the present laws, and put upon them the burden of proof.

By a new and defective treaty we can stop all Chinese laborers coming, but we will not succeed in making treaties by breaking treaties. I plead for national faith, I speak for the honor of my country. I entreat you, gentlemen, to keep that plighted word, that solemn promise which is the oath of our country: to observe the obligations of a treaty which the other side has kept, and still keeps though we have already pressed hard upon it. If we would abstain from this system of irritating legislation just before elections—for then it always comes up—and approach China in the spirit in which she has treated us, this burden and trouble of Chinese laborers could soon be removed, the very source stopped, and the whole of this unwelcome immigration prevented by the hearty coöperation of China, which we could secure by a new agreement.

But we have strained relations already. The better plan to prevent a threatened inundation of Chinamen of which gentlemen speak is not to construct a dam in this vicious method and at the expense of truth and self-respect, but go to the source and stop it there effectively and forever. We can readily arrange with the Chinese Government for an efficient system, officers of that country and our own coöperating there to prevent any laborer from coming from that empire to the United States. They have often indicated that, approached in a right spirit, they are willing to aid in discouraging emigration and avoid the troublesome questions to which it has given rise. They would do it if we would only treat them with half-way courtesy. They agreed to the Bayard treaty to keep out all laborers, and it would have gone into force but for the insulting demand upon them to ratify within forty-eight hours, as if they were under a bombardment. A general besieging a doomed city could not have been more imperious. Now we add to the embarrassment already surrounding the State Department in any effort to settle this question of excluding Chinese laborers by a bill which so plainly violates our promises that none can vote for it or mention that vote without a blush.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CHIPMAN addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. GEARY] controls the time in favor of the report.

Mr. GEARY. We reserve that time.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the report.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I want to speak upon it.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman has not the floor.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Have the fifteen minutes on our side been consumed?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HITT] has reserved five minutes.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I hope the gentleman will grant that time to me.

Mr. HITT. I will; but I think the other side should be heard first.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN] wants to speak on the same side as the gentleman from California; there is no reason why I might not proceed now.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, there are a few features in this report which I want the House to understand. I do not know that we shall be able to get anything like an intelligent decision of this question; because, I must confess, that from the reading of the report of the House conferees as to the matters agreed to between them and the Senate conferees I am not able to understand the exact purport of the agreement. It may be that there are gentlemen of greater acumen than myself who have been able to catch the purport of this agreement from this imperfect and insignificant report—insignificant I mean in respect to its brevity and in respect to its failure to explain the purpose and effect of the bill as now submitted.

If I caught correctly the significance of this report, it embraces in the first place an agreement of the Senate and House conferees upon a provision that when a party is arrested for violation of this act the writ of habeas corpus shall be denied. I have never known a time in the history of this country when that writ was ever denied.

Mr. GEARY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. No, sir; you have time of your own; you can make any explanation you wish in your own time. You have called the previous question and limited debate on this matter, as you did when the matter was last before the House.

I say there has never been a time in the history of this country when the writ of habeas corpus has been denied—I mean denied in its entire extent. There has never been a time even in the days of slavery when the humblest slave charged with any offense had not the right to be released upon bail, if the offense was of such a character as to be bailable. This bill, as I understand, virtually denies the writ of habeas corpus, because it clothes the judge with the power of imprisoning the party without bail. Such a thing has never been known in the history of American jurisprudence. You may get glory in this Democratic House of Representatives by putting such a measure upon the statute book. I want to record my vote against it.

There is another feature of the measure as now embraced in this report. It is in absolute violation of the first and second articles of the treaty made with China in 1880. Article 1 of that treaty provides:

Whenever in the opinion of the Government of the United States the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States, or their residence therein, affects or threatens to affect the interests of that country, or to endanger the good order of the said country or of any locality within the territory thereof, the Government of China agrees that the Government of the United States may regulate, limit, or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it. The limitation or suspension shall be reasonable and shall apply only to Chinese who may go to the United States as laborers, other classes not being included in the limitations. Legislation taken in regard to Chinese laborers will be of such a character only as is necessary to enforce the regulation, limitation, or suspension of immigration, and immigrants shall not be subject to personal maltreatment or abuse.

These are the stipulations of the treaty. Thus it will be seen that the right to exclude Chinese laborers was not denied. It was exercised by our Government in the law which was passed providing exclusion for a term of ten years. That law is about to expire; and this bill proposes to continue it, but couples with it provisions denying the right to bail and the writ of habeas corpus to a party arrested under this law.

I want to call attention also to the third article of this treaty:

ARTICLE III.

If Chinese laborers, or Chinese of any other class, now either permanently or temporarily residing in the territory of the United States, meet with ill treatment at the hands of any other persons, the Government of the United States will exert all its power to devise measures for their protection, and to secure to them the same rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions as may be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, and to which they are entitled by treaty.

This article provides that Chinese, whether laborers or others, shall be protected to the utmost extent of the power of the United States; it pledges our Government to exercise its entire power to insure such protection. Are you going to repudiate that article by denying to the subjects of the Chinese Empire the right to bail and the right to the writ of habeas corpus as allowed by the general law? Such legislation is in flagrant violation of this treaty.

But this bill embraces another provision novel in American jurisprudence. It proposes that Chinese now in this country shall by application to certain officers named in the bill get what is known in the penal colony of Australia as a "ticket of leave" which they shall always carry with them and always be able to present. That is what every Chinaman in this country under the provisions of this bill will have to procure and produce, a ticket, which he would be able to show, or be subject to arrest by any officer of the Treasury Department or of the Interior Department or any marshal of the United States. I protest against it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GEARY. Mr. Speaker, the argument of the gentleman from Mississippi is unfortunately based on a false premise. There is nothing contained in this bill that in any way, shape, or form suspends the right of habeas corpus, nor is there anything in the bill that has been prohibited by the common law.

Mr. HITT. It denies the right of bail.

Mr. GEARY. It does not. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. It does not in any case deny that right where it was ever recognized before in this country. It only changes the time when the bail may be given.

Mr. BUSHNELL. Does not it change the universal rule of the presumption of innocence, and make every man presumably guilty until he himself proves to the contrary?

Mr. GEARY. I will answer the gentleman as I proceed.

I say in response to the gentleman from Mississippi that this has always been the practice in habeas corpus proceedings. We apply to the court in the first instance for the writ, and the writ is issued, directing the body of the person to be produced before the court. After the bringing in of the person, and after the hearing has been begun, if the court sees fit to admit the person to bail pending the continuation of the proceedings, it may do so. But you can not find a single instance in any of the legal proceedings in this country, when the indorsement of the court appears on the paper directing the body of the person to be produced in court, where the bail was allowed before the proceedings in court had actually begun by the presence of the person produced under the writ. That has been the practice in the courts in California.

As soon as the writ issued bail was taken and the individual was not necessarily brought before the court, and when afterwards proceedings were had, under the writ, the individual was not to be found, and a worthless bail bond was all that was left in his stead. But I assert that you can not find an instance in the proceedings and practice of any court where bail was permitted before the body of the prisoner was produced.

Now, Mr. Speaker, all that we say in this bill is that you shall not take this bail bond in the first instance; and nothing is contained in the bill to deny the right of the court to admit the person to bail after the examination has begun. There is not a lawyer in this body who does not know that that has been the practice of the courts in habeas corpus proceedings ever since our courts were organized.

Now, my friend has asked a question in regard to the presumption of innocence. I answer him there is nothing new in this. Our internal-revenue law does precisely the same thing. It says, for instance, that every person who engages in the business of selling liquors or dealing in tobacco must first obtain a license, but when we arrest a man for a violation of the revenue laws the burden of proof is on him to establish his right to deal in these articles, and is not on the people to prove him guilty. This bill is precisely similar. It simply requires another individual to produce a license in the shape of a certificate.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we gave away everything in the House bill that was attempted in the shape of legislation here because it was thought to be too radical. This bill proposes simply to stop all the leaks in existing law and leaves the revision of the system to some other Congress. We must have some law in regard to the matter or otherwise all of the Chinamen now waiting on the frontier to come in will come the day after to-morrow, that being the last day; and rather than allow the lapse of time before proper legislation can be had, and in order to check the incoming of these people who are waiting to cross the lines, the people on the Pacific coast have been compelled to accept this law.

Mr. BUSHNELL. Why not extend the law as it now exists?

Mr. GEARY. Because, my friend, we tried for ten years to enforce that law, and our experience in that direction on the Pacific coast proves how defective it is and what radical changes are necessary.

Mr. BUSHNELL. We gave you money enough to enforce it.

Mr. GEARY. We do not want your money. You can take all the money and the Chinese too. We do not want either. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time for debate having expired, the question is on agreeing to the report of the conference committee.

The question was taken; and on a division (called for by Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi) there were—ayes 134, noes 33.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 186, nays 27, not voting 115; as follows:

Mr. FITHIAN with Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois, until the 7th of May, inclusive.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota with Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois, until May 7, inclusive.

Mr. PIERCE with Mr. LIND, for two weeks, from April 30.

For this day:

Mr. CUMMINGS with Mr. HOOKER of New York.

Mr. MCKAIG with Mr. SHONK.

Mr. COMPTON with Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey.

Mr. NORTON with Mr. DINGLEY.

Mr. RUSK with Mr. RUSSELL.

On this vote:

Mr. OUTHWAITE with Mr. BERGEN.

Mr. RAYNER with Mr. LODGE.

Mr. HUFF. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILSON] on political questions, but this not being a question of that character, I have taken the liberty to vote.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL], but on this question it was understood that I was to have the privilege of voting aye, as he would also vote aye.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. GEARY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid upon the table.

BUILDINGS IN ALLEYS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. FELLOWS. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of presenting a conference report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the resolution (H. Res. 118) "to suspend the issue of permits to erect dwelling houses in alleys in the District of Columbia," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the first amendment and agree to the same with an amendment, namely: Strike out the words "the first session of," so as to read "that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby instructed not to issue any more permits for buildings intended for human habitation in alleys less than 40 feet in width, in the District of Columbia, during the Fifty-second Congress."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the second amendment and agree to the same, namely: Strike out the words "until further provided for by Congress," and add the words "and that all such permits heretofore granted on alleys less than the width aforesaid shall be revoked where construction shall not already have been actually begun."

J. R. FELLOWS.

JOHN T. HEARD.

W. COGSWELL.

Conferees on the part of the House.

E. O. WOLCOTT.

JAMES McMILLAN.

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

Conferees on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

The statement of the managers on the part of the House was read, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The resolution as reported by the conference committee provides for the suspension of granting permits for houses on alleys less than 40 feet wide, during the present Congress; also for the revocation of all permits where work has not actually begun. The object is to bring about a stay on the part of the Commissioners of the District, until Congress has had opportunity to legislate fully on the subject of alleys, which legislation is now in progress.

J. R. FELLOWS.

JNO. T. HEARD.

WM. COGSWELL.

Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. FELLOWS. I move the adoption of the report, and on that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FELLOWS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

AMERICAN SHIPBUILDING.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Speaker, I have a privileged resolution which I desire to have read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas a bill entitled "A bill to encourage American shipbuilding was passed by this House on the 24 day of May, under the suspension of the rules without proper explanation and under a misapprehension as to its provisions at the time, the House was led to believe that the ships mentioned in said bill did not come within the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1891, granting subsidies to American ships; upon examination, said bill gives these ships all the rights and privileges of vessels of the United States so far as subsidies are concerned: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Senate be requested to return said bill to the House for reconsideration.

Mr. COCKRAN. I object to the consideration of that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SNODGRASS], as the Chair understands, claims that this is a privileged resolution. The Chair will hear the gentleman on that question.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Speaker, upon this question I think that the resolution is privileged. I do not believe that this House, if it commits a mistake and acts upon premises that are not well founded, or if members are imposed upon by the action of any of its members and passes a measure that they do not understand—

Mr. COCKRAN. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. SNODGRASS. And would not otherwise pass—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COCKRAN. I want to know if it is in order for a member to insinuate in this House that any member has imposed upon his fellow members.

Mr. SNODGRASS. The gentleman from New York is very sensitive. There is nothing in what I have said that can be considered in that light.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman is very much mistaken if he thinks that anything that he could say would in the slightest degree affect me. I am speaking now for the dignity of the House.

Mr. SNODGRASS. The House will take care of itself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to only suppose a case.

Mr. SNODGRASS. As I said, the House will take care of its own dignity and integrity, and this is what I am proposing it shall do.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when this bill was presented to this House there was a statement made, and from that statement the members upon this floor, I am satisfied, concluded that the only thing to be granted to these ships was the right to be registered; that the ships, being foreign built, whenever they should be owned by American citizens they should have a right to be registered and receive the protection of the United States, and not a dollar was to be carried by the bill. But on investigation I find that after they become the property of American citizens and have been registered they will be entitled to all the rights and privileges of American vessels in so far as the subsidy clause in the act of 1891 is concerned.

Mr. LOUD. Do you not know that the right to registry carries all with it?

Mr. SNODGRASS. I understood from the statement that they were permitted to sail under an American flag. Now I take it that this House, the Democratic members of it, and the Democratic party pledged against subsidies to ships, railroads, or corporations, if they had known the import and purpose of this bill, would never have passed it. I take it that it was passed under a misapprehension as to its provisions, and I take it for granted that this House can do no wrong without the right to correct it. For these reasons I believe this is a privileged resolution; that it ought to be passed by this House, and the bill recalled for further consideration. So far as I am concerned, I voted against the bill, and should have contested its passage in every way possible if I had had time and opportunity afforded me, and had known the purport and provisions of the outrageous measure.

The SPEAKER. The only question for the House to consider, is whether this is a privileged resolution, objection having been made to its present consideration. It does occur to the Chair that this resolution can have no privilege. There may be circumstances under which a resolution to recall a bill would be privileged. For an instance, that the clerks, in the enrollment of it, had committed an error, or there had been some action of that sort, making it necessary for the House to recall it; but this resolution, as the Chair understands it, contains the allegation that this bill ought not to have passed because the House did not understand it.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Is it in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed?

The SPEAKER. It is not; because the bill was passed under a suspension of the rules, which suspends all rules. Further than that, even if it had been, it is too late now to move to reconsider. A motion to reconsider is not in order when a bill has been passed under suspension of the rules, because the mere motion to suspend the rules and pass upon it suspends all other rules. Now, if there were any allegation of any error on the part of the Clerk, or anything of that sort, to make it necessary for the House to recall the bill, the Chair thinks it would be a matter of privilege; but where there is merely a question as to the propriety or impropriety of the passage of the bill the Chair does not think a resolution to recall the bill is privileged.

THE SUGAR TRUST.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The report was read, as follows:

Mr. SCOTT offered the following:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish the House of Representatives with information in regard to said American Sugar Refining Company or sugar trust, and of prosecutions of said corporation for violation of the act mentioned herein, giving times at which and places where such prosecutions, if any, have been made.

Your Committee on the Judiciary having had under consideration the preamble and resolution submitted by Mr. SCOTT of Illinois, April 16, 1892, calling upon the Attorney-General of the United States for information respecting the sugar trust, respectfully recommend that the accompanying be passed as a substitute therefor, and that the original preamble and resolution lie on the table.

Substitute for preamble and resolution offered by Mr. SCOTT of Illinois, April 16, 1892.

Resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish the House of Representatives with information as to whether the sugar trust or the American Sugar Refining Company, organized under the laws of New Jersey, has violated the provisions of the act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," and whether prosecutions have been directed or instituted against said trust or corporation for such violations, and if so, when and where they were instituted.

The substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear some explanation of this resolution.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Mr. Speaker, as the resolution is reported unanimously by the committee, I did not suppose that any debate would be desired; but, as my colleague [Mr. MCCREARY] desires an explanation, and as the original resolution was introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SCOTT], out of courtesy to him I will yield him ten minutes to explain the resolution.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, almost two years have passed since the enactment of the law referred to in the resolutions presented by me to the House and upon which the committee has just reported. This law was designed to prevent combinations of individuals and corporations to the detriment of the people. It made certain acts crimes. Section 2 of the anti-trust law makes the monopolizing or the attempt to monopolize by any person or persons of any part of the trade or commerce among the several States or foreign nations misdemeanors. It was stated that this law was to supplement the enforcement of the established rules of common and statute laws of the States in "dealing with combinations that affect injuriously the industrial liberty of the citizens of the United States."

The Federal courts were armed with power within constitutional limits to check and control the most dangerous combinations which have long threatened the estate, property, and people of the country. It does not seek to touch combinations except those that are unlawful, such as are declared by the several States to be against public policy and destructive of public interests. If their business be legitimate they can combine in any way, so that they do not combine to prevent competition. When a combination tends to advance the price to the consumer of any article necessary to the comfort and convenience of the people it is a substantial monopoly, injurious to the public, and by the rules of both common and civil law is null and void, and a just object of restraint by the courts. In most cases the individuals engaged in such monopoly should be punished as criminals.

It was clearly the intention of Congress, under the act of July 2, 1890, to enable the Federal courts to follow into the different States products transported from the State where manufactured. When any article of general commerce and necessary to the prosperity and welfare of the people, is taken from one State to another, it becomes the object of regulation by national legislation.

THE LITTLE ONES.

Since the enactment of this law, almost two years ago, little has been known of any attempt to prosecute the many gigantic trusts and combines throughout the country. A few sporadic efforts, in themselves insignificant, have appeared. These are the spool and bobbin trust, the retail coal dealers of East Tennessee, and a little medicine combine in Missouri.

Within the past few weeks something of an attempt to prosecute the whisky trust in the Federal courts of Massachusetts has been made. Beyond these information has not been had of any attempt to interfere with the illegal and unjust exactions of the many trusts that have been operated throughout the country.

THE SUGAR TRUST HAS ESCAPED.

Among the most prominent of these, Mr. Speaker, may be mentioned the American Sugar Refining Company, or the sugar trust, and the one alluded to in the resolutions now before the House. This is a gigantic corporation, embracing many millions of capital.

Mr. OATES. You refer now to the sugar trust.

Mr. SCOTT. I do. Its only purpose has been and is to destroy competition in sugar. Until within the last few months there have been a few refiners that have stood out against the trust and fought it. Prominent among these was Claus Spreckels, with refineries both in California and at Philadelphia. A few others have also stood with him in their fight against the combine.

ALL COMPETITION DESTROYED.

Since the 1st of January last the sugar trust has increased its capital $25,000,000. With this the Spreckels and all other independent, competitive refineries have been purchased or brought completely under the control of the trust. It is said that Mr. Spreckels received between three and four million dollars that his Philadelphia refinery might be taken by the trust.

It is true that there are three refineries not absolutely owned by the trust, but these act in connection and in harmony with it. One at Boston, capacity 1,000 barrels; Claus Spreckels, California, 1,600 barrels, and Havemeyer & Elder's California American Refinery, 2,000 barrels. While these are not absolutely owned by the trust, they are as completely under its control as if they were. So that to-day the entire sugar product of the United States is wholly and absolutely controlled by the trust.

Mr. OATES. Is it not a fact that this sugar trust so completely controls the market that it is the purchaser of all the raw sugar in the United States?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes. Every pound of raw sugar bought, whether produced here or abroad, is bought by the trust and all the refined sugar sold passes through their hands and pays tribute to this conscienceless corporation. In increasing its capital it also provided for $10,000,000 of 6 per cent bonds with which to operate the business and to silence the competition of any refinery which might hereafter make it interesting. Not only has the sugar trust succeeded in destroying all competition, but it has, at the same time, prepared the means for perpetually preventing competition.

The result of this has been to depress the price of all raw sugar and to largely increase the price of refined. Prior to this absorption of refineries and destruction of competition it was not believed by anyone at all well informed that the sugar trust or those engaged in refining sugar were not making large profits. On the contrary there was every evidence that sugar-refining was a most lucrative business. The present prices of raw sugar, 96¢ centrifugal, and refined, granulated, have been so adjusted by the trust that the net profits are 1½ cents per pound. The cost of refining does not exceed at the most five-eighths of a cent, and the best equipped refineries can produce it at one-half cent. This changed condition between raw and refined, made possible by the absorption by the trust of the outside refineries, has given them enormously increased profits.

ENORMOUS PROFITS.

There is a net increased profit of five-eighths cent per pound, or $2.03 per barrel. On a minimum yearly production of 12,600,000 barrels this amounts to the enormous sum of over $25,500,000, or a little more than the amount of the increased capital of the trust, employed to destroy competition.

Experts place the actual value of sugar-trust properties at $35,000,000, so that the rate of profit on actual valuation is a little over 73 per cent. After paying 7 per cent on $37,500,000 of preferred stock and 6 per cent interest on the $10,000,000 of bonds, the above rate of profit would yield almost 60 per cent on the common stock.

Such enormous profits are only possible by giving exclusive and sole control of the market for this commodity, which is a necessity in every household in the land. At the time of the formation of the trust in 1887 the actual value of the establishments taken in was estimated to be about $15,000,000. Additions since and changes made in the plans, in the opinion of experts, make the property of the trust worth about $35,000,000. The remainder of the $50,000,000 capital, prior to the recent increase, represents undistributed earnings, good will, and plenty of water.

To illustrate the wonderful profit that is made by these refineries, mention may be made of the largest, that of Havemeyer & Elder's Sugar Refining Company, Brooklyn. It is estimated by good authority that the properties and equipments cost not to exceed $4,000,000. Its capacity is 8,000 barrels per day, giving in one year of 300 days a production of 2,400,000 barrels, or 780,000,000 pounds. Even allowing a net profit of one-half cent per pound, the exact amount of tariff on refined sugar, it will be seen that the annual profit is the enormous sum of $3,900,000, being almost, if not quite, 100 per cent on the cost of the works.

SUGAR SHOULD BE MADE FREE.

While it is well for the Department of Justice to prosecute this giant corporation for clear violations of the law, it is yet well to go a step further. This trust is perhaps easier to reach, evidence more accessible, and its operations more open than almost any other of the great competition-destroying combinations of the country. For this reason it has seemed singular that the Attorney-General has been content to proceed against the insignificant combines which I have named. He has appeared to regard it more criminal to corner whiskey and make it high than it is to increase largely the price of sugar to every family in the land. Much has been heard during the last year about free sugar under the McKinley law. It requires but a very casual examination to see that this is a mistake.

Sugar is a very highly protected article, as is easily shown by a slight inspection. The tariff on refined sugar, over No. 16 Dutch standard, is one-half cent per pound. No. 16 and under is free of duty and constitutes the raw materials for the trust. The natural protection, owing to transportation, insurance, and other charges to foreign sugar, amounts to about one-quarter of a cent, giving with the one-half cent duty almost total exclusion of foreign refined sugar.

The most effective way, and the one most desired by the people of the country to destroy the power of the trust, is to put sugar on the free list.

REFINING PROFITABLE WITHOUT PROTECTION.

It is very evident that sugar can be refined at a profit sufficient to meet all requirements of capital without any duty whatever. This has been admitted by Mr. Theodore A. Havemeyer, who was president of the original trust, and for many years has been the foremost refiner in the country. Before a committee of Congress he testified, and here is what he said:

Mr. TUCKER (speaking of the competition between the refining interests in this country and the English refining interests). Would you be able to compete in the business market if there was perfect free trade in sugar?

Mr. HAVEMEYER. We would beat them. We can refine sugar cheaper here than they can in England.

It is evident that sugar refining would be profitable without the tariff. Under the old law, allowing a drawback of 90 per cent of duty paid on any raw sugar refined and exported, large quantities were exported and sold in competition with the bountied sugar of Germany. It is also true that considerable quantities of refined sugar are being exported now in competition with sugar produced in England and Germany.

PRESENT TAX IS PROHIBITORY.

The present duty is almost prohibitory, as is shown by a statement from the Bureau of Statistics, which is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STATISTICS,
Washington, D. C., April 30, 1892.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiry of the 23d instant, I have the honor to inform you that the imports of sugar into the United States during the year ending March 31, last, were as follows:

	Quantity.	Value.
	Pounds.	Dollars.
Free of duty:
Beet	614,775,181	16,914,647
Cane	3,235,080,334	98,875,782
Total free of duty	3,849,855,515	115,790,429
Dutiable	16,094,195	608,009

The number of pounds of dutiable sugar imported and entered for consumption during the year ending March 31, 1892, was 19,722,708, on which the duty collected amounted to $105,520.

Very respectfully,

J. N. WHITNEY,
Acting Chief of Bureau,

HON. OWEN SCOTT, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

By this it will be seen that only a trifle over 16,000,000 pounds of dutiable sugar was imported during the year ending March 31 last, while the raw materials imported by the sugar refiners free of duty was almost 4,000,000,000 pounds. The reason given for retaining the present duty on sugar was to enable Mr.

Spreckels and other independent refiners to fight the trust. They urged that if they were to fight the trust and at the same time meet the competition of foreign refiners without any duties whatever they would be ruined. In justice to them the present tariff on sugar was retained that they might have some chance to maintain themselves against the then already powerful sugar trust.

It is doubtful whether anyone would have been willing to retain the present tariff on sugar if it had been believed that these independent refiners were only playing a deep game that they might make an enormous profit by selling out to the trust. It has been clearly shown that sugar can be refined free of duty profitably and that the present tariff is simply the means by which the trust is enabled to live and continue its oppressions. It is high time that this giant monopoly should be broken. Sugar should be put absolutely on the free list. Let the trust be compelled to compete with foreign sugar that many millions of dollars annually may be saved to the people of the country.

Mr. SIMPSON. Are the trust refineries not dividing their profits with American laborers?

Mr. SCOTT. They are not.

LABOR DOES NOT SHARE PROFITS.

It can not be claimed that the tariff on sugar or the trust is for the benefit of labor. The complete control of all the refineries by the trust has enabled them to limit production by closing down these great industries. The Spreckels Philadelphia Refinery has lately been closed and 650 men thrown out of employment. This was done to limit production in order that prices might be held up. It is very evident that the plan is to shut down other refineries and send other laborers on the streets to beg or to seek other employment. A great refinery in the city of St. Louis has been standing idle for years because it has been owned by the trust.

These things are true, not that there is any want of demand for sugar, but solely because to keep prices up production must be kept down. The refineries pay very low wages. The largest trust refinery pays 15 and 15½ cents per hour. The work is done by Hungarians and Poles, even Italians preferring as a matter of profit to peddle fruit on the streets.

The New York Press, one of the most ardent protection papers in the country, in speaking of the shutting down of the Spreckels Philadelphia refinery, said lately:

The suspension is not due to overproduction, for the market is active. It is caused solely by the determination of the trust to keep up prices. It is intimated that other refineries may soon close. Performances of this sort are likely to hasten the hour when the popular demand for more efficient public control of great monopolies will be irresistible.

PRESENT DUTY MORE THAN LABOR COST.

The tariff of one-half cent per pound is vastly more than the entire labor cost of producing refined sugar. The tribute paid to the trust in the present tariff has reduced rather than raised the wages of these workmen, since they must apply to but a single employer in the whole country. Whatever may be said regarding the tariff and labor in other directions, no one can for a moment pretend that this large duty, which enables the sugar trust to levy tribute upon the people of the United States, is in the interest of labor. On the other hand, it is directly antagonistic to it. It is not surprising, then, that there should be throughout the country this great demand for absolutely free sugar.

SHOULD ENFORCE THE LAW.

It certainly should be the policy of the Administration which claims credit for the enactment of the anti-trust law to give it a fair test. It owes it to the people of the country to protect them from the exactions of such great monopolies as the sugar trust. It surpasses comprehension that with all the evidence that is easily accessible, not only to the Government but to individuals, this prodigious extortioner should have been permitted for all this time to levy its tribute upon the people. It is said, with what truth I do not know, that within two days the Attorney-General has instructed the district attorney at Philadelphia to begin a civil proceeding, a suit in equity, attacking the validity of the contracts lately made by the trust in acquiring all competitive refineries. It will be seen that this came more than two weeks after the resolutions reported from the Judiciary Committee were introduced by me in this House and referred.

This disposition to bring to justice this violator of law came after it was generally known that the committee had agreed to report the resolution and that the same would be adopted by the House and presented to the Attorney-General. A criminal suit, as contemplated by the Sherman law, would have been far more effective than the present civil suit. It is not quite understood why the whisky and other trusts should be brought into court by indictment and the sugar trust should be given the slow-going route of a proceeding in equity. While this civil suit is dragging its weary length along through the many years it will take to reach a hearing the trust will be amassing its millions out of the exactions it levies upon the people.

It is hoped, Mr. Speaker, that something may come from this which will bring relief; but the impatience of the country, of all parties, because of the disposition not to prosecute, has become so great that there can not be further concealment and suppression along these lines.

Mr. McCREARY. The gentleman's explanation ought to be satisfactory.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SCOTT] allow me a question? Is this the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. SCOTT. I think it is.

Mr. BURROWS. There is no division?

Mr. SCOTT. No division.

Mr. BURROWS. Are you conscious of any opposition to the resolution?

Mr. SCOTT. Does the gentleman rise to object?

Mr. BURROWS. I do not.

Mr. SCOTT. I thought he did. Objections usually come from that side when trusts are attacked.

Mr. BURROWS. Are you conscious of any opposition to the resolution? If not, what is this speech for? [Laughter.]

Mr. SCOTT. This speech is in response to a request from the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] that an explanation be made. It is also fair to presume that the other side under the lead of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] is ever ready to excuse and apologize for trusts and are opposed to any matter that attacks these legitimate results of the protective system. [Applause.]

Mr. BURROWS. Oh, no; the Republican party passed the law to suppress trusts.

Mr. SCOTT. Then we want to know why your party does not enforce this law. I have made my statement so that the gentleman from Michigan and others may understand why the Department of Justice should be called upon to state whether or not action has been taken against this trust. If during the last two years nothing has been done he should report that information to the House, so that the people may know how the matter stands.

Mr. BURROWS. The gentleman will allow me to say—

Mr. SCOTT. I decline to yield. My time is almost out.

This giant octopus, reaching out into every nook and corner of the land, drawing from the earnings of every laboring man, every one employed in any activity of life, should meet with swift and condign punishment. The very foundation upon which it stands should be withdrawn. Sugar should be made free of all duty, and those who have violated the law should be prosecuted until trusts will become universally unpopular as well as unprofitable. The people demand relief from these great aggregations of capital and greed. No better place to begin can be found than against this corporation. [Applause.]

Mr. GOODNIGHT. I now move the previous question.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Will my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GOODNIGHT], yield to me?

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR]?

Mr. GOODNIGHT. How long?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Five minutes.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. I yield to the gentleman for five minutes.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, there was no opposition in the committee to this resolution, as I am informed, and there is none in the House. I wish to say, however, that the sugar trust, as was stated by the gentleman who has just taken his seat, was perfected within a month; and before this resolution was drawn—before, so far as I know, it was thought of—proceedings had been commenced by the Attorney-General for the purpose of dissolving that trust, commenced as soon as the evidence touching the contracts was known or could be ascertained. That is the fact, and that is the fact that gentlemen will ascertain when the answer comes to their resolution.

Now, there is nobody on this side of the House that I know of who is in favor of trusts, and I am satisfied that any statement to the contrary is made simply and solely for the purpose of creating political capital, a purpose that overrides in this House, as I understand it, every other consideration—merely political capital.

Mr. BYNUM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Scarcely, in five minutes. Take your own time.

Mr. BYNUM. I simply wanted to correct that statement as to trusts.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. There is only one way under the theory of the gentlemen on the other side that these trusts can be affected, and it is in their hands. If the Republican party has gone a great way in making sugar free, let the other side take the last half step and make it entirely free. If they are in earnest about this matter, let them do that, and they will receive help on this side of the House.

But I am standing here for a moment in addition to say that no man in this House or elsewhere can truthfully assert that any tariff, even an ordinary tariff, ever has any tendency to create trusts. The statement is made over and over again that the great trusts of this country are not protected; the whisky trust and the oil trust are not protected trusts; and the very home of trusts, where they exist in every agricultural community, is the free-trade country of England; and yet that fact is known to every man in this House, and statements will be made over and over again that I say are made for political capital and political objects solely. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GOODNIGHT. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL].

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment the only way to reach the sugar trust effectively is for the Democratic Committee on Ways and Means of this House to report a bill putting refined sugar on the free list. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is the common-sense way of reaching the subject. These investigations accomplish but little. The trusts are always willing to aid your desire for investigation, as they only result in procrastination and delay. In my district there stands one of the grandest refineries in the whole country idle for the past ten years and untenanted, while the owners are receiving an immense interest on the investment from the sugar barons. Let your Committee on Ways and Means report here a bill putting sugar on the free list. It is not a party question, for you will find that honest men of both parties will stand by such a bill in both Houses and it will become a law. [Applause.]

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio states that the sugar trust has only been consummated in the last few months. I think in that he is mistaken. My understanding is that this sugar trust has existed for several years, at least five; but it has been more perfectly consummated in the last few months, since Claus Spreckels and other of the sugar refiners have gone into the combine. They have been able to furnish a capital of $35,000,000, and last year upon that capital earned over $25,000,000, or a profit of 73 per cent per annum.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Did not the gentleman give the sugar trust a little too long a life when he said four or five years?

Mr. GOODNIGHT. I think not.

Mr. BOUTELLE. You must have done so, for that would indicate it existed under Cleveland's Administration, and that you know of course would have been impossible. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Well, I have no doubt that there were many bad things that existed under Cleveland's Administration. As great a reformer as was Mr. Cleveland, he could not in so short a time correct all the wrongs brought about by your unequal laws. But we hope to remedy all that in time.

I now demand the previous question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Will my colleague, before he demands the previous question, allow me to make an inquiry whether it would be now in order to move as an amendment, in the nature of a substitute for both resolutions, the following?

Resolved, That on and after June 30, 1892, all sugars imported into the United States shall be admitted free of duty.

If in order, it seems to me that if the gentleman is willing to accept that it will go to the bottom of the whole inquiry.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. I have no objection to the gentleman having it read for information, that it may go into the RECORD, but it is not germane and not in order. I should support such a measure properly reported, but think it can not come up in this way.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Let it be offered and voted on.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Is it in order to offer it as an amendment in the nature of a proviso?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky withdraw the demand for the previous question?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will do so.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. I can not withdraw the demand.

Mr. REED. Regular order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I desire to give notice if the previous question is not sustained I shall move the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOCKERY. In the event that the demand for the previous question is not sustained will the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky be in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it would.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Then I will withdraw the suggestion.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the report was adopted.

On motion of Mr. GOODNIGHT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WARWICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 3022) authorizing the Leavenworth and Platte County Bridge Company to sell, transfer, and assign to the Leavenworth Terminal Railway and Bridge Company the rights and franchises as granted by acts of Congress approved February 25 and March 2, 1889, and by act of Congress approved July 25, 1890.

A bill (S. 2305) to provide for the permanent preservation and custody of the records of the volunteer armies, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of a number of pension bills that came over from the last Friday night session.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask unanimous consent that those bills be passed over.

Mr. MARTIN. Giving notice that on to-morrow, at the expiration of the morning hour, I will ask for the consideration of these bills, I will not press them now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] asks unanimous consent that these pension bills be passed over. Is there objection?

Mr. PICKLER. I object.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have reached an understanding with the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions with reference to these bills, and he agreed that they should go over until to-morrow. I hope that my friend from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] will agree to the understanding reached with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. PICKLER. I insist upon my objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill.

Mr. CARUTH. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. CARUTH. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CARUTH. There were a number of these cases in the same condition on the Calendar, that have been there quite a while, and the action of the committee on last Friday evening put a number of other bills in the same condition. My inquiry is whether the first bill on the Calendar is not first in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair directed the Clerk, in preparing the Calendar of these bills, to put them on in accordance with the time at which the previous question was ordered on their final passage. The operation of that was to put the bills that were reported last Friday evening ahead of the others, as the previous question was ordered on their final passage first.

Mr. CARUTH. Then the effect of that is that "the last shall be first."

The SPEAKER. That seems to be the effect of it. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1338) granting a pension to Jennie B. Morris.

The amendments of the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The previous question was ordered, and no debate is in order.

Mr. KILGORE. My understanding is that the previous question was ordered, with the understanding that debate should be allowed if anybody wanted to make a speech.

The SPEAKER. If there was no debate before the previous question was ordered, then debate would be in order.

Mr. KILGORE. I want to make this inquiry: I understand that we have now before the House a bill upon which the Committee of the Whole has previously passed, and upon which the previous question has been ordered to its passage. Now, I do not care anything about debating this bill. I only want to know the status of these bills before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not hear the gentleman.

Mr. KILGORE. What I want to know is, if these are not a batch of bills which have been previously reported upon by the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. They are.

Mr. KILGORE. And upon which the previous question has been ordered?

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. KILGORE. Not only to their engrossment and third reading, but to their final passage?

The SPEAKER. That is correct, and by virtue of that order they come before the House.

Mr. KILGORE. And any member would have a right to make a speech upon any one of those bills under the rule.

The SPEAKER. That depends upon whether there has been any debate previously. The rule provides that where there has been no debate before the previous question is ordered, debate shall be in order; but where there has been debate the previous question cuts off all further debate.

Mr. HEARD. I think there was an agreement that there should be fifteen minutes' debate upon each bill.

Mr. KILGORE. The RECORD, I think, will show that the previous question was agreed to with the understanding that there should be debate.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman turn to that. The Chair is not so informed.

Mr. KILGORE. It is in the RECORD. I do not want to debate the bill, but I want any member of the House, who may desire to do so, to have the right.

Mr. DOCKERY. I think I can set the gentleman from Texas right as to the situation. As I remember, there was no debate asked or allowed upon the bills upon which the previous question was ordered a week ago last Friday night, but on last Friday evening, when the request was made for unanimous consent for the previous question to operate upon the passage of the bills, the gentleman from Texas did suggest that we ought to reserve the right of debate.

Mr. KILGORE. I think that appears in the RECORD.

Mr. DOCKERY. But the proposition was not formally submitted to the House.

Mr. KILGORE. That is in the RECORD. The RECORD will show what occurred.

Mr. BUSHNELL. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUSHNELL. My inquiry is whether the fact that there was some debate in Committee of the Whole will preclude debate upon that bill when it comes before the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that has always been the practice.

Mr. BUSHNELL. Well.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the final passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

HARMON H. McELVEY.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5342) granting a pension to Harmon H. McElvey.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BAILEY. Do I understand the Chair to rule that there can be no debate on these bills?

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that it depended upon whether there had been any debate in Committee of the Whole. If the point is made, the Chair will have the RECORD examined to see whether there was any debate in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to state that the previous question was ordered by unanimous consent, with the distinct understanding that debate would be permitted on them.

Mr. PICKLER. I think the gentleman from Texas is right.

The SPEAKER. No gentleman has expressed any desire to debate.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not want to debate the bill.

The SPEAKER. When any gentleman desires to speak the Chair will have the RECORD examined to see whether there has been any debate in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BAILEY. I simply wanted to know whether it was competent to order the previous question with the privilege of debate. Do I understand the Chair to hold that debate is not in order on this bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. Am I recognized?

The SPEAKER. If no one objects the Chair does not.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no desire to discuss the bill, but I insist upon a ruling of the Chair, because it would determine my action hereafter in granting unanimous consent to order the previous question.

Mr. PICKLER. Then we do not want a decision.

Mr. BAILEY. I serve notice that hereafter I will object to it.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ELIZA M. BOATRIGHT.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5734) granting a pension to Eliza M. Boatright, the surviving widow of Alexander M. Boatright, who was a soldier in the Black Hawk war, with an amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. OATES. I would like to hear the report read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the report will be read.

A MEMBER. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Chair will look to the RECORD to see whether there has been any debate on this bill. The Chair knows nothing of any agreement as to debate on these bills. The RECORD discloses no agreement, and the Journal discloses none.

Mr. BYNUM. These bills come from the Committee of the Whole. The rules, as I understand, do not apply to bills considered in Committee of the Whole, because there is—

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not hear the gentleman from Indiana, there is so much confusion.

Mr. BYNUM. All these bills were considered in Committee of the Whole, and of course there was debate there, if any debate was desired, and I do not understand the rule applies to bills considered in Committee of the Whole when they are reported to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know whether there was any debate without looking into the RECORD to see whether there was debate or not.

Mr. BAILEY. The RECORD does show that there was an agreement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman says that the RECORD shows that there was an agreement made. Nothing was agreed to as to debate.

Mr. BAILEY. As a matter of fact they did agree to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman says that the RECORD shows an agreement; will the gentleman read it?

Mr. BAILEY. The RECORD shows that Mr. KILGORE suggested "with the right of discussion."

The SPEAKER. Then what did the Chair suggest?

Mr. BAILEY. That it would be proper to have some understanding as to what time was to be allowed.

The SPEAKER. And none was had. The Clerk will read what took place, according to the RECORD.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I take it for granted that the rule only applies to debate in the House and not in the Committee of the Whole. If there be debate in the House before the previous question is ordered, that would cut off debate after, because—

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman furnish some authority for that proposition. The Chair is advised and believes, without having specially looked it up, that the rule has been that if debate has been had in Committee of the Whole there could not be any after the previous question was ordered.

Mr. OATES. There can be no previous question in Committee of the Whole; and therefore I do not think that point would lie in this case. It depends upon whether debate was had in the House before the previous question was ordered.

Mr. REED. The decisions have been uniform the other way.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, how could debate be had in the House upon a measure upon which the previous question had been ordered?

Mr. BAILEY. By unanimous consent.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It strikes me that the usage has been uniform, where a measure has been discussed in the Committee of the Whole and the previous question has been ordered and the measure has been reported to the House with the previous question pending, that debate has been held not to be in order.

Mr. BUSHNELL. The Committee of the Whole is not the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not looked into the matter, but is advised and believes that when there has been debate in the Committee of the Whole no further debate is in order in the House after the previous question has been ordered. The rule provides that where there has been no previous debate, when the previous question is ordered there shall be thirty minutes' debate; but debate in Committee of the Whole has been held to be previous debate.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think the Speaker is clearly right, and, according to my recollection, the only cases in which subsequent debate has been allowed in the House have been cases where there was an agreement for debate outside of the rules.

Mr. BUSHNELL. But how can it be said that the Committee of the Whole is the House?

The SPEAKER. The rule does not specify previous debate in the House; it says where there has been "no previous debate."

Mr. BUSHNELL. Then, if there has been debate in the committee room, why would not that be "previous debate" under the rule, and cut off debate in the House?

Mr. BAILEY. This order was not made in Committee of the Whole; it was made in the House. I made the point that it was not in order for the House to order the previous question upon the passage of a bill at the same time it ordered it upon the engrossment and third reading, but the Chair held that it was competent for the House to do anything by unanimous consent. Then I suggested that I would make no objection provided there should be an opportunity for discussion, or rather the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] made that suggestion, and that was agreed to. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] said that the House was discussing an important appropriation bill, and that it would not be proper to lay that aside for these private bills.

I then suggested that the chairman of the committee [Mr. MARTIN] could have these bills laid aside so as not to conflict with the appropriation bill, and remarked that he would undoubtedly consent to do that, and he did consent. Then the Chair asked whether there was objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana. The gentleman [Mr. MARTIN] agreed to the suggestion embraced in the colloquy of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN], and myself, and by unanimous consent it was agreed that the previous question should be ordered on engrossment, third reading, and final passage of these bills, with the right to debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must, of course, be bound by the RECORD. The Chair desires to dispose of this question and he must be bound by the RECORD unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. BAILEY. Then the Chair decides that there can be no debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have the proceedings read so that the House can see just what took place according to the RECORD.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, does it make any difference how the previous question has been reached so long as it has been reached?

The SPEAKER. Not at all. The Clerk will read what took place:

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that on all bills that have been reported from the Committee of the Whole on Friday night sessions of the House the previous question be considered as ordered to the engrossment, third reading, and final passage of the bills.

Mr. KILGORE. With the right of discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman better have some understanding as to what time is to be allowed.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no objection, but I wish to state that this all means time being taken up in the House. We have some appropriation bills pending that we think it very important the House should dispose of, and I am opposed to putting all this Friday night business ahead of the day business in the House to-morrow.

Mr. BAILEY. As I understand, if the request should be granted to-night, the House to-morrow, by unanimous consent, could lay these bills aside. I suppose the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions would be perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. MARTIN. I would be willing to let them be laid aside by unanimous consent.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I will ask the chairman of the committee to consent to that.

Mr. MARTIN. I will do it very cheerfully.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none: and the order will be entered in the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The House will see that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] did make the suggestion that debate should be permitted upon these bills. It might have been the purpose of the House to agree to that suggestion, as some gentlemen who were present say it was, but the RECORD fails to disclose that agreement. The Chair suggested that there had better be some agreement about the time, and that seems to have been the last that was said upon that point. Now, of course, the Chair desires to carry out the wishes of the House as expressed at that time. This, however, seems to be a question that is arising only theoretically, because the Chair has not heard anybody express a desire to debate.

Mr. HEARD. I desire to say that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN], the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, has carried out his agreement. He was willing that these bills be laid aside by unanimous consent; but the gentleman from South Dakota has objected. As nobody, however, wants to debate the question, why not go on now and dispose of these bills?

Mr. PICKLER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I objected only to the proposition of the gentleman from Louisiana for unanimous consent to put this order further aside.

Mr. HEARD. That is exactly what the agreement was. In Committee of the Whole the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] suggested that, in view of the pendency of the appropriation bills, these bills should be laid aside, so as not to interrupt the consideration of the appropriation bills. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN] assented to that being done by unanimous consent; unanimous consent was asked, and the gentleman from South Dakota objected, as I understand.

Mr. PICKLER. There was no appropriation bill mentioned at all. No one raised any question in regard to the appropriation bills. The river and harbor bill was not thought of at that time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state what seems to be an equitable and just disposition of this matter. From the statements of the gentleman from Texas, the gentleman from New York, and other gentlemen, this order was evidently made with the condition, as they understood, that there should be debate. If, therefore, any gentleman wishes to debate any bill submitted, the Chair will ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to do so, believing this to have been really the intention of the parties who made this agreement.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is right.

Mr. OATES. I do not care to have any debate; but I asked awhile ago that the report in this case be read, and objection was made.

The SPEAKER. The reading of the report is in the nature of debate.

Mr. OATES. I know it is, but I would like to have the report read in order that we may know what we are voting upon.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. OATES. No time, except such as the reading of the report may occupy.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report will be read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. My only objection to the reading of the report is that I do not wish to have it inserted again in the RECORD. It was printed in last Friday night's proceedings.

Mr. OATES. Does my friend from Tennessee read all that is in the RECORD?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I was present and heard this report read. What I object to is having the report published twice in the RECORD. I have no objection otherwise.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The report, as already published, was read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to discuss this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas will proceed.

Mr. MARTIN. I raise the point of order that under the rule or order the gentleman has no right to debate the bill; and I wish to be permitted to say—

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there was an understanding—at least a private understanding according to the statement of the gentleman, and the Chair himself was present—

Mr. MARTIN. Let me say further that I make this objection not because I desire to cut off debate, but simply that there may be a ruling so that we may hereafter know just what understanding to make. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] has stated his recollection, which is exactly in accordance with my own, as to what occurred on last Friday night.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state—

Mr. BUSHNELL. On the point of order I wish to say—

Mr. BAILEY. I have the floor—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BUSHNELL].

Mr. BUSHNELL. I raise the point of order, if it can be done pending the point already raised—

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain a second point of order while one is already pending.

Mr. BUSHNELL. I wish to say in that my judgment the understanding arrived at in the Committee of the Whole last Friday night, that there should be no debate on these bills, or that the previous question should be ordered, does not go to the extent of precluding the House from the opportunity of finding out what these several bills are that we are now to vote upon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken in his premises. This was done in the House, and not in Committee of the Whole. These bills were reported to the House from the Committee of the Whole and the agreement was made in the House.

As to the question of discussion, the Chair not only has his own recollection, but is supported by the statement of other gentlemen, that the gentleman from Texas did make a suggestion in reference to debate upon each of these bills, and the Chair called attention to the fact that there should be some agreement as to time, but none was made. The Chair thinks, therefore, that the unanimous consent which was given for ordering the previous question on the final passage of these bills, which could not have been otherwise ordered, carried with it also an implied understanding that there should be debate if desired.

Mr. BUSHNELL. I shall insist then, Mr. Speaker, that in the calling up of these bills any member shall be entitled to have the report read if he desires.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly. That is in the nature of debate.

Mr. BUSHNELL. To that extent I understand we have the right to debate.

The SPEAKER. Why, the Chair has just ruled that the right to debate exists if insisted upon.

Mr. BUSHNELL. I understand the Chair to hold that that is by unanimous consent. But if the Chair rules that debate is admissible under the agreement heretofore made, I am satisfied.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has made the ruling as distinctly as he could, but of course can not be responsible for the gentleman's failure to understand it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, while the point of order which was made was purely theoretical, yet it is of practical value, because it was made for the purpose of enabling us to understand how to act with reference to these matters hereafter. It has frequently happened that there are many bills reported from the Committee of the Whole on which we are perfectly willing that the previous question shall be ordered if the ordering of the previous question can carry it with an agreement that there may be debate, so that in the event that a further investigation of them shall show them without merit we shall have opportunity of discussing and opposing them. If, however, this agreement for the previous question can not carry the right of discussion, I for one will refuse hereafter to agree to unanimous consent that the previous question should be ordered even to the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. KILGORE. There is an amendment reported to this bill by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The amendment has already been agreed to by the House, as the Chair is informed, which was to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twelve."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARY GATLIN.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 5364) granting a pension to Mary Gatlin.

Mr. BUSHNELL. I ask for the reading of the bill and also the report.

The bill and report were read at length.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a single word, not perhaps exactly applicable to this bill, but in this line. Every one of these reports and bills has been printed in the RECORD, and if there is any member present who wants to see them, or to read them, he can find them by searching the RECORD back to the last Friday night session. I want to suggest further that if members who are calling for the reading of the bills and reports had been here at the Friday night sessions they would have heard them read and heard the discussion upon them. We can save time by having our RECORD open and looking a little back at the last night session as these bills are reached. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

BILLS PASSED.

Bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole, were severally considered, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed, namely:

The bill (H. R. 5363) granting a pension to David C. Barrow;

The bill (H. R. 5383) to increase the pension of Aaron V. Hamilton, late member of Fremont's battalion, Mexican war; and,

The bill (H. R. 5330) for the relief of Frederick Meredith, late soldier in the Indian war of 1832.

JAMES H. THOMPSON.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1777) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of James M. Thompson, with an amendment.

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ABRAM GROAT.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 2430) for the relief of Abram Groat, with an amendment.

The bill was considered.

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ANNA MORGAN BURNS.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 7146) to pension Anna Morgan Burns, with an amendment.

Mr. BUSHNELL. I ask for the reading of the report in that case.

The report was read at length.

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

DAVID REED.

The next business reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 7123) granting an increase of pension to David Reed, with an amendment.

Mr. BUSHNELL. Let the report be read.

The report was read.

The amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was adopted, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JAMES McCAMMON.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 4302) granting a pension to James McCammon.

The SPEAKER. This bill has already been ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

ROBERT CASEY.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1292) for the relief of Robert Casey.

The amendments were agreed to.

JEROME H. BIDDLE.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 3310) for the relief of Jerome H. Biddle.

The amendments were agreed to.

JAMES E. GRAY.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1727) to remove charge of desertion against James E. Gray.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CHESTER F. GROUT.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1336) granting an honorable discharge to Chester F. Grout.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOAN VAN FOSSEN.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 1662) removing the charge of desertion against Joan Van Fossen.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM A. BIRCH.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 4043) granting an increase of pension to William A. Birch.

The amendment was agreed to.

JANE A. WARD.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 712) granting a pension to Jane A. Ward, widow of D. A. Ward.

Mr. BUSHNELL. I call for the reading of the report on that bill.

The Clerk began the reading of the report.

During the reading

Mr. BUSHNELL said: Mr. Speaker, having heard so much of the report, I will withdraw the demand for the further reading. The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

AARON J. OLIVER.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 2049) for the relief of Aaron J. Oliver.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET CHRISTIEN.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 4886) to pension Margaret, mother of Leon Christien.

The amendments were agreed to.

NOAH STALEY.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 2496) granting a pension to Noah Staley.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH R. CRAWFORD.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 3838) to pension Elizabeth R. Crawford, widow of C. A. Crawford, soldier in Creek war of 1836.

The amendments were agreed to.

ANDREW J. JONES.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 3123) to pension Andrew J. Jones for services in the Indian wars.

The amendment was agreed to.

DAVID L. TRUOX.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 2902) for the relief of David L. Truox.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

LUCY HASKELL.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 5602) granting a pension to Lucy Haskell, mother by adoption of John Haskell.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BUSHNELL. I call for the reading of the report on that bill.

The report was read.

Mr. BUSHNELL. I desire to say that in my judgment that bill ought not to pass. It does not appear from the report of the committee what the ability of this woman's husband now is, and it does not appear but that he is amply able to support her. The committee do not seem to have made any inquiry about that at all. I remember that when that bill was up before the committee the question was asked as to that, and it was not answered; and it does further appear in my judgment that under existing laws, if that adopted child were put in precisely the place of the woman's own child, this pension could not be granted. It does not appear that she was dependent upon him for support, maintenance, or assistance.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. The bill was passed.

MARY JEWETT TELFORD.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 5021) granting a pension to Mary Jewett Telford, an army nurse, with an amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MARY ISABELLA HUTCHISON.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 5377) granting a pension to Mary Isabella Hutchison, with an amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MISS ADA BOODGER, OF LOCKPORT, N. Y.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 5766) granting a pension to Miss Ada Boodger, of Lockport, N. Y., with amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

WILLIAM S. WOODWARD.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 2,98) granting a pension to William S. Woodward, with an amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

GEORGE W. WHITE.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 3767) granting an increase of pension to George W. White, with an amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

OBE SUTHERLAND.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (S. 1379) to provide for a pension for Obe Sutherland, late a teamster in the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army, with an amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the several motions to reconsider will be entered, and a motion to lay on the table the motions to reconsider on each of these bills will be agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, in several instances the reports in these cases have been read to-day. These same reports were read when the bills were considered, and were printed in the RECORD. I want to ask that these reports be not again inserted to-day, as there is no use of reprinting them and reinserting them in the RECORD after having been once published.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? The Chair hears none.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the bill (H. R. 6923) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and for other purposes, Mr. OUTHWAITE, Mr. MITCHELL, and Mr. BELKNAP.

REPRINT OF A REPORT.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds requests leave to have printed 2,000 copies of Report No. 1078, as to the erection of public buildings. It seems to be only two or three pages. If there be no objection that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LINEAL PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to ask nonconcurrence in the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 328) to establish lineal promotion throughout the several lines of artillery, cavalry, and infantry, and ask for a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman, but the Clerk will first report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 328) establishing lineal promotion throughout the several lines of artillery, cavalry, and infantry of the Army.

The SPEAKER. This is a House bill with Senate amendments, and the gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. Is there objection?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. If objection be made, what will be the course of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The bill would have to take its place on the Calendar.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Would it go back to the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. This is the unanimous report of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. It is reported from that committee, and it would go upon the Calendar.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Then anyone who wants to defeat the bill would only have to object so as to get it on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. That looks like a reasonable proposition. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair will appoint as conferees the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE], the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER], and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I believe it is in order to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of appropriation and revenue bills.

The SPEAKER. The first thing in order would be to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that that be done.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports may file them with the Clerk. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I beg the gentleman from Indiana to yield to me for just two minutes to offer a resolution. It will not take a minute.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well.

READING RAILROAD COMPANY AND LEHIGH VALLEY RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I offer for consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for present consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas by the law of the United States, approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," it is provided that every person who shall monopolize or attempt to monopolize, or combine, or conspire with any other person or persons to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof be subject to fine and imprisonment; and

Whereas it is alleged that the Reading Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, has combined with the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of said State, with the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New Jersey, and with certain other corporations engaged in the production of anthracite coal, for the purpose of monopolizing the anthracite coal trade: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the House whether any information has been furnished the Department of Justice on this subject of such a character as will authorize him to institute proceedings under the law referred to against the persons who, it is alleged, have combined in violation of said law, and if such information has been received at the Department of Justice to communicate the same to the House, if not incompatible with the public interest in respect thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. REED. I do not see why these things should not take the regular course.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills. The Clerk will report the first bill upon the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7530) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses for the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I move, under clause 4 of Rule XXIII, that that bill be laid aside; my reason being that I propose to move to take up the river and harbor bill instead of the sundry civil bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not open to debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the gentleman from Louisiana has indulged in some debate.

Mr. REED. Regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I have the same length of time that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] has had without objection.

Mr. REED. Regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed as much time as the gentleman from Louisiana has occupied.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is not in order. Debate is not in order, and as soon as the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] began to make a statement the Chair called him to order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not until he had made his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that there is any motion to be put. The gentleman from Louisiana asks that the bill the title of which has been read by the Clerk be passed over, and I have not heard any objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] objected.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should think I did object. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will rise and the Chair will report to the House under the rule.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH, from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration the first general appropriation bill upon the Calendar, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] had moved that the bill be laid aside, to which objection had been made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reports that the committee, on the call of the Calendar, having reached the sundry civil appropriation bill, objection was made to its present consideration, whereupon the committee rose and directed its Chairman to report that fact to the House; and the question now is, Shall that bill be laid aside?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that three minutes be allowed for a statement of the reasons why the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana should not prevail.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. HOLMAN. Who objected? No gentleman rose to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] objected. The question is, Shall this bill be laid aside for the present?

The question was taken; and the Speaker declared the ayes, seemed to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 122, noes 48.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not call for the yeas and nays, because I do not wish to consume the time.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and the House instructs the committee to lay aside the sundry civil appropriation bill. The committee will resume its session.

The Committee of the Whole accordingly resumed its session, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next general appropriation bill upon the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7820) making appropriation for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLANCHARD rose.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I believe the river and harbor bill is not one of the general appropriation bills within the meaning of the rule. It has always been held that it was not.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] makes that point, the quickest way to get over the difficulty will be for the Clerk to go on down the Calendar until he reaches what are general appropriation bills, and I will ask the committee to lay them all aside, and after that is done the river and harbor bill can come up under the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has instructed the Clerk to read the title of the next general appropriation bill on the Calendar. If there are no other general appropriation bills on the Calendar—

Mr. HOLMAN. There are two regular appropriation bills on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have the bills reported by their titles under the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3609) making appropriation and provision for the construction of a United States revenue cutter for service in the harbor of San Francisco, State of California.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is not a general appropriation bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask unanimous consent that that bill be laid aside—

Mr. PICKLER. I object.

Mr. BURROWS. That is not a general appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is right. This is not a general appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The next general appropriation bill is the post-office bill. [A pause.]

Mr. WILSON of Washington. What is the business before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the House has resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—

Mr. WILSON of Washington. For the consideration of what?

The CHAIRMAN. General appropriation bills, and as soon as the first bill can be found it will be read by its title. [A pause.]

Mr. BLANCHARD. It seems that the Clerk can not find any appropriation bill upon the Calendar, and I submit that the next business in order after general appropriation bills is other appropriation bills—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that there is simply an oversight in not having the bills here. A messenger has been sent to the Clerk's office for them.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will furnish the Clerk with the title of the next bill. It is on page 9 of the Calendar—a bill making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the title of the next general appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask that that bill be laid aside.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks that this bill be laid aside.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe under the rule when there is objection to the consideration of a bill the committee rises and the question is submitted to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause the rule to be read.

The Clerk read clause 4 of Rule XXIII, as follows:

In Committees of the Whole House, business on their Calendars shall be taken up in regular order, except bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which shall have precedence, and when objection is made to passing over any bill or proposition, the committee shall thereupon rise and report such objection to the House, which shall decide, without debate, whether such bill or proposition shall be considered or laid aside for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana that this bill be laid aside?

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit to the Chair that under the rule the gentleman simply objects to the consideration of this appropriation bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, I object to the bill being laid aside. The House ought certainly to act upon these appropriation bills.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the committee will rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH reported that the House being in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of general appropriation bills, the committee had reached upon the Calendar the post-office appropriation bill; that Mr. BLANCHARD had asked that the bill be laid aside, whereupon objection was made; and the matter was now reported to the House for its action.

The SPEAKER. The question under the rule is, Shall this bill be laid aside in Committee of the Whole for the present? [A pause.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. BUTLER. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 122, noes 27.

Mr. BUTLER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. BLANCHARD and Mr. BUTLER.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 152, noes 24.

So the Committee of the Whole was directed to pass over the bill.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next general appropriation bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8533) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask unanimous consent that that bill be passed over for the present.

Mr. BUTLER. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the Committee of the Whole will rise and report the objection to the House.

The Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having reached in the consideration of general appropriation bills the fortifications bill, objection was made to passing it over, whereupon the committee rose and he reported the same to the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House direct the Committee of the Whole to pass over the fortifications bill?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, is there not some way that we can get at this thing in bulk, and save this seesawing back and forth from the House to the committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know of any.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then we have to go back into the House again each time we reach one of these bills and seesaw backwards and forwards?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would not call it seesawing. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, would it not be in order to make some omnibus motion to cover all of these cases?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. REED. The system does not permit it.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House direct the committee to lay aside the fortifications bill?

The question was taken; and on a division, demanded by Mr. BUTLER, there were—ayes 156, noes 21.

So the committee was directed to lay aside the bill.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its sitting.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that there is no other general appropriation bill on the Calendar, and the Clerk will report the river and harbor bill, which, under the rule, is next in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there anything in the rule that gives that bill priority over current measures on the Calendar?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Why, certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the question of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask if the rule gives that particular measure priority over other bills on the Calendar?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why, we went into Committee of the Whole to consider general appropriation bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read clause 4 of Rule XXIII. The Chair thinks that there can be no question about the matter.

The Clerk read as follows:

4. In Committees of the Whole House, business on their Calendars shall be taken up in regular order, except bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which shall have precedence, etc.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is very clear that general appropriation bills are first in order, and after they have been considered or laid aside the river and harbor bill is next in order under this rule, the House having resolved to lay aside all these other bills. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7830) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first formal reading of this bill be dispensed with. It will have to be read in detail for amendments later on, under the five-minute rule, and nothing can be gained by reading it now in full.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, this would seem to be a good moment to determine upon the amount of general debate. There is one portion of this bill I think that will give rise to some discussion. How much time does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will state in reply to the gentleman that it has not been my purpose, in opening the general discussion, to ask the House just at present to place any limit upon it. After awhile, when the general debate shall have run on for a time, and we can ascertain what the temper of the House is in respect to it, I then propose to ascertain how much time the House desires to give to the general discussion of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that as far as the request of the gentleman from Louisiana is concerned it will not affect the order of general debate. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. PICKLER. I object. I think that during the reading of this bill I may be able to ascertain why 1,700 miles of the Missouri River get no appropriation.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

During the reading

The CHAIRMAN said: The Chair requests the attention of gentlemen. The Sergeant-at-Arms will please request gentlemen who are standing in the aisles to be seated. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] has demanded the reading of the bill, and evidently wants to hear it, and the Chair will see that he has an opportunity to hear it.

Mr. RAY. Let him take a copy and read it himself.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Having proceeded for some time

Mr. WILSON of Washington said: Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. That has been asked, and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] objected. Unless the gentleman from South Dakota will withdraw his objection—

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I understood that I could ask unanimous consent after some little time had elapsed, and that if he did not renew his objection we could dispense with the further reading of the bill. I understood that to be a parliamentary proceeding. If the Chair overrules me—

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the gentleman from South Dakota withdraws his objection the bill will have to be read.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Do I understand the Chair to rule that unanimous consent can not be asked at any time during the reading of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not so hold, and the Chair would stop the reading of the bill at any time if the gentleman would state that the gentleman from South Dakota withdraws his objection.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Then I have to state that, in asking unanimous consent, do I? It is a queer parliamentary situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Subsequently,

Mr. PICKLER said: Mr. Chairman, at the urgent solicitation of a great many gentlemen, I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] withdraws his objection to the request that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there further objection? There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that we may now have some understanding as to general debate.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I understand the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] desires that the remainder of this afternoon be devoted to general debate. I hope there will be no objection to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is possible that gentlemen may not wish to occupy that time. I hope we may have an understanding limiting the general debate so that it may close to-day.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then I ask that general debate end with the session of this day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] asks unanimous consent that all general debate upon this bill end with the session of to-day. Is there objection?

Mr. PICKLER and Mr. SEERLEY objected.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made by the gentleman from South Dakota and the gentleman from Iowa. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, under the general heads of agriculture, mining, manufacturing, and transportation is included the far greater part of the aggregate wealth of our country and, indeed, of all countries. The first three give birth in practical form to those commodities, the exchange of which constitutes commerce; and the last is the instrumentality or means through which this exchange is effected.

The three great questions affecting the industrial world, more perhaps to-day than ever before in the history of the world, questions which lie at the very foundations of the industrial fabric itself, which are closely interwoven in that complex organization called government, and on which depends the wellbeing of society itself, are finance, production, and transportation, and according as these questions are more or less wisely handled and solved, is a people's advancement in progress and prosperity.

The bill under consideration deals directly with one of these questions and indirectly affects them all. The popular demand for cheap transportation for the products of our farms and mines and manufactories is the foundation upon which the bill rests, is that which called it into being, and is alike its excuse and justification.

The development of our water ways, Mr. Chairman, should be made, not only because the water way furnishes the cheapest possible form of transportation, but also because it is the greatest possible regulator of railway rates. If the bill under consideration tends to cheapen transportation in any degree adequate to the amount of money it carries, then it would seem to be the part of wisdom on the part of Congress to enact the measure into law.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, carries an aggregate amount of $21,290,975, and is based upon estimates submitted by the War Department aggregating, for old or unfinished projects and projects that are new, in the sense that never before have they been appropriated for, about $70,000,000. In addition, there were a number of new projects, some seventy odd in number, that were not considered by the committee at all, though reported favorably by the War Department, upon surveys ordered in the last river and harbor act.

The last river and harbor act, Mr. Chairman, contained orders for surveys in number about two hundred and twenty-five. Of that number the War Department reported as worthy of improvement, ninety. Of this ninety, within the limits of a $21,000,000 bill, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors found it impossible to provide for more than some twenty or twenty-five. So that if we take the new projects reported favorably, but which we found ourselves unable to consider, and add the estimates for them to the estimates for the old projects and for the new ones which we did consider, there were before the committee estimates aggregating at least $85,000,000; and the problem presented to the committee was to make twenty-one million go into eighty-five million with the quotient of general satisfaction—a problem which I think you will agree with me was a somewhat difficult one to solve.

The last river and harbor act, approved September 19, 1890, carried $24,981,295, or $3,690,320 more than the present bill carries. In the bill we are now considering the sum of $14,365,979 has been recommended for the improvement of rivers and other water-way channels, and $6,799,996 for the improvement of harbors and for breakwaters, etc.

It would not be amiss, Mr. Chairman, at this time to give to the House a statement of what this Government has done in all the past in the way of river and harbor appropriations. The total amount of appropriations for rivers and harbors has been, all told, $204,137,649.

These appropriations began in Jefferson's Administration, in 1800, with $25,000 appropriated for the improvement of a stream in my own State of Louisiana. The sum of $14,699,745 was expended for river and harbor improvements prior to 1860. Between 1860 and 1870 the amount expended was $12,789,182; between 1870 and 1880, $68,035,656; between 1880 and 1890, inclusive, $108,613,066, or only $204,000,000 in less than a century.

France, with but little more than one-half of our population and one-seventeenth of our territorial area, has, since 1814, appropriated for the construction of her canals and for the improvement of her rivers and harbors, $650,000,000; and, in addition to that, she has expended upon railways the enormous sum of $700,000,000.

And yet, Mr. Chairman, borrowing the illustration of Mr. S. A. Thompson, of Duluth, who appeared before the River and Harbor Committee, if our State of Texas could be made into a circular sea and France made into a circular island and placed in the center of this sea there would be a strip of ocean 100 miles wide all around France. And yet that little country has expended $1,350,000,000 on her canals and railways and rivers and harbors, while we have been expending $214,000,000 upon our rivers and harbors. France paid Germany one billion and sixty millions in gold as a war indemnity, yet in a few years the French people were more prosperous than those of Germany. Their incomparable system of transportation facilities by wagon, rail, and water had much to do with it.

The Dominion of Canada, in proportion to her population and resources, has expended enormously more than the United States in developing both rail and water ways. With less than one-twelfth of our population, she has expended on the lakes and the St. Lawrence River $54,596,180, and, besides this, she has built and equipped 1,217 miles of railway at a cost of $54,557,579. In England $60,000,000 are now being expended to connect the city of Manchester with the sea at Liverpool.

With these examples of river and harbor appropriations by other countries—and they might be multiplied in number—I propose now to call attention to some figures and observations upon the question of transportation by water which I gather from the census of 1890. The Census Bulletin No. 179, dated the 26th of April of this year—and gentlemen will see by the date that the bulletin is only a few days old—contains statistics of transportation by water in the United States, and shows the extent of the transportation fleet of this country at the close of the year 1889. This transportation fleet, and the vast interests it represents, are directly benefited by the appropriations which this bill carries.

Now, this transportation fleet, as shown by the census report, numbered at the close of 1889 25,540 steamers, sailing vessels, and unrigged craft, whose gross tonnage was 7,633,676 tons, and whose estimated commercial value was $215,069,296.

This statement, it is important to observe, excludes the many thousands of vessels operating on our canals. It also excludes the vessels engaged in the fishing industry, of which there is a fleet numbering nearly 7,000, as shown by the report of the Commissioner of Navigation.

It also excludes the thousands of vessels coming under the head of pleasure craft. It includes only such vessels engaged in industry of transportation as are of American ownership, and (with the exception of some of the unrigged) only such as are registered in the ports of the United States. It excludes hundreds and perhaps thousands of vessels (mainly unrigged), which, though not registered, are nevertheless engaged in the transportation business.

Since 1881 the registration of barges and such other craft as have no motive power of their own has not been insisted on, except in the infrequent cases of those engaged in the carriage of bonded goods.

The statement from the census report also excludes the many vessels not of American ownership which navigate our waters, carrying passengers and freight.

Now it will be seen that, excluding all our fishing vessels, which number 7,000, excluding all the vessels coming under the head of pleasure craft, excluding all vessels not owned by Americans, excluding also all vessels that are not registered in some one of our ports, and taking only those vessels engaged in the transportation industry of the country which are of American ownership and are registered in American ports, they aggregate in value $215,000,000.

Table No. 2 of this census report presents some large figures, showing that during the year ended December 31, 1889, the freight movement by the whole of the operating American mercantile fleet amounted to no less than 172,110,423 tons of all commodities. Table 3 shows that the number of persons of all classes employed to make up the ordinary crews of all operating vessels of the United States, exclusive of pleasure craft on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, during 1889, number 106,436, and that the total amount paid in wages was no less than $36,867,305. There are eleven tables accompanying the report, but I will only print with my remarks the first three, as follows.

* Exclusive of pleasure craft on the Atlantic coast and Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps the most important feature of this bill is the extent to which it goes in authorizing continuing work upon the larger of our river and harbor projects of improvement. The bill puts under what is called "the contract system" ten of the largest projects of river and harbor improvement now in progress in the United States. These projects are the following: Point Judith harbor of refuge, on the New England coast; Charleston Harbor, S. C.; Savannah, Ga.; Mobile, Ala.; Humboldt, Cal.; Hudson River, New York; Columbia River, Oregon; what is called the 20 and 21-foot channel through the shallows of the connecting waters of the Great Lakes, and the Mississippi River. The appropriations which the bill itself carries for these ten projects of river and harbor improvements, which are put under the contract system, aggregate $6,560,000.

Now we authorize the Secretary of War, in the case of each of these ten projects, to make a contract for the completion of the work. The aggregate amount of which the bill authorizes the expenditure, outside of what the bill itself carries, is $26,702,321.

Mr. Chairman, this contract system is somewhat of a new departure in river and harbor improvement. This, it is true, is not the first time that the system has been entered upon. The river and harbor act which became a law in 1890 contained an authorization to the Secretary of War to put under the contract system, looking to their completion, the great works going on in the harbors of Baltimore, Galveston, and Philadelphia, and that at the Sault St. Marie, and at Hav Lake Channel.

That was the first time this system was embarked upon, and so satisfactory has it been found in its operation that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, in framing this appropriation bill, concluded to extend the system, believing that it is the true solution of river and harbor improvement. It does away with the old dribble system of appropriation, which was wasteful in the extreme. This contract system, it is believed, attains the desired end in the shortest time and at the minimum of expense. Attention is invited to the following letter and statement furnished me by the Chief of Engineers, showing the saving to the Government by the application of this system to the five projects authorized in the last bill:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., March 30, 1892.

SIR: In compliance with your oral request I inclose a statement of the percentages of saving at the various river and harbor works upon which continuing contracts have been authorized by Congress, as compared with the annual contract system of preceding years or with the original estimates.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
THOS. LINCOLN CASEY,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

HON. NEWTON C. BLANCHARD,
Chairman of Committee on Rivers and Harbors,
House of Representatives.

St. Marys Lock and Canal.—Only the contracts for the excavation of the lock and contracts for the masonry of the lock have been made, but in these contracts alone there has been a saving of some 15 per cent of the estimated cost. Amount of saving, $768,000.

At the Hay Lake Channel the work, estimated to cost $2,659,115, will be completed upon the execution of the existing contracts, and fully $900,000 within the estimate, a saving of one-third, or 33 per cent.

At Galveston it is believed the continuous contract for the construction of the jetties has resulted in the saving of some 10 per cent of the original estimates, saving by this method $700,000.

Baltimore Harbor.—The price in the continuing contract is 15 per cent less than the average prices paid in the past ten years under the system of annual contracts, saving by this method $94,500.

Philadelphia Harbor.—The price under the continuing contract is only 33 per cent of the average price which during the past ten years has been paid on the Delaware for similar dredging under annual contracts.

Mr. Chairman, it was this exhibition of economical results which induced the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to extend this system of continuing work. Let me illustrate the great benefits to be derived by the system. Here, for instance, is a project of improvement, like the proposed waterway channel on the Great Lakes, to get 20 and 21 feet of water from the cities of Duluth and Chicago to Buffalo, the work being estimated to cost $3,500,000.

We appropriate in this bill $500,000 for this project. But we go further and authorize the Secretary of War to make a contract for the completion of the work—one single contract. Heretofore, under the old dribble system of appropriations for rivers and harbors, coming once every two years, the Secretary of War was limited in making contracts to the amount of money appropriated in the bill for the particular project of improvement.

But now, still taking this project on the Great Lakes by way of an illustration, he may make a contract not only for the $500,000 which this bill carries for that work, but he is also authorized by the terms of the bill to enter into a contract for the completion of the whole project; and we expect that under this authorization it will cost less to complete the work than it was originally estimated for by the engineer in charge.

I believe from the investigation I have been able to make that if this contract system, commenced in the last river and harbor bill and continued in this one, had been adopted by this Government some ten or twelve years ago there would have been a saving in the amount of money expended for river and harbor improvements from 1880 down to the present time of at least $20,000,000. I repeat, if we had as far back as 1880 authorized contracts to be made for the larger projects of river and harbor improvement, as we do now, that the aggregate of the amounts appropriated for river and harbor improvements from that time to this would have exhibited a saving of not less than $20,000,000.

I have dwelt upon this feature of the bill at considerable length, because I have understood that it is this provision which is likely to be most vigorously opposed on this floor. We have selected only the larger of the river and harbor projects of improvements to put under the contract system. I would like to have gone farther and put all of the more important projects of improvement under this system. But we did not dare to go that far as yet. We had only commenced on this system in the last river and harbor act, and it had not yet developed enough to justify going that far.

Mr. SAYERS. Will it interrupt the gentleman to ask him a question just here?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Not at all.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman from Louisiana be kind enough to state whether the contracts which are authorized by this bill are limited as to the maximum amount to be applied to each improvement?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am glad my friend from Texas asks that question. Every one of these ten projects, which are placed under the contract system by this bill, is limited in the amount that can be expended for its completion. For instance, the River and Harbor Committee had before it information to show just exactly how much it would require to complete the works at Mobile, at Charleston, and elsewhere, and we appropriated for each of the contract places a given sum of money, and then authorized the contract to be made for the completion of the entire work not to exceed in the aggregate the amount which the engineers reported to us would be required to complete the same.

Mr. SAYERS. Then another question, if the gentleman will allow me. Do these provisions also put any restrictions upon the amount of expenditure for each year?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will answer the gentleman—

Mr. SAYERS. The question I mean to ask is this: Is the chief of engineers to be allowed to make a contract for the expenditure of any amount of money that he may consider necessary to complete the work during any particular year?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will state to the gentleman from Texas that there is no limit placed upon nine of these contracts as to the amount that may be expended in any one particular year. We authorize the Secretary of War to make the contracts. Take the harbor of refuge on the New England coast, for instance, the Point Judith Harbor. It will require, according to the estimate of the engineers, $1,175,000 to complete that work. Now, we appropriate in this bill $100,000 for continuing the work, and we authorize the Secretary of War to make additional contracts to complete it. The amount necessary to complete it, over and above what the bill carries for the work, is $1,075,000, but we do not place a limit as to how much of that can be expended in any one year.

We authorize the Secretary of War to make a contract for its completion. We expect this to take from three to four years, and the Secretary of War is expected to report to the next session of Congress how much money he will require for that project to meet the payments under the contract for the fiscal year succeeding the one for which appropriations are made in the present bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Do I understand him to say that of the entire authorization, amounting in this bill to some twenty-seven millions of dollars, contracts might be made under which the entire sum could be expended during the coming fiscal year?

Mr. BLANCHARD. No, sir, I do not intend the gentleman to understand me in that way. I said all of these but one. Now, take the Mississippi River. That is the one I have reference to. From St. Paul to the mouth of the river, more than twenty-two hundred miles, no one can tell how much it is going to cost to improve such a river. Therefore, when we come to authorize continuing work upon the Mississippi River, we limit it to sixteen millions in all, of which this bill carries four millions, the other twelve millions to be expended in annual installments of four millions each for three years, this bill carrying four millions for the coming fiscal year. The last Congress appropriated for the Mississippi River more than $5,000,000.

This bill carries only $4,000,000, and limits the amount to be expended to the same amount annually for three years additionally. But not so with the contracts authorized for the harbors and for the Hudson and Columbia Rivers and the Great Lakes. While no limit as to annual expenditure is placed here the committee was satisfied the work at each would run through at least three years, perhaps four. Such is the case as to the projects put under the contract system in the last river and harbor act.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman please state to the committee how much will be left of the entire amount to be contracted for after deducting the Mississippi contract, which, I believe, he has stated amounts to $16,000,000? I simply ask for information.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] will allow me, I stated that this bill carries for these projects that are placed under the contract system $6,560,000, and we authorize an additional expenditure of $26,702,321 more, making in all $33,262,321 which the bill carries and authorizes. Now, if you take out the amount for the Mississippi River it is $17,262,321.

Mr. SAYERS. Seventeen millions applied to the other works? Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes, including what this bill itself appropriates.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to some matters showing the beneficial results which flow from the improvement of our rivers and harbors. I propose to do it by taking the average freight rate for 1890 upon the railway system of the United States, and then the average freight rate for 1890 for the commerce carried upon the Great Lakes. The average rate of charges for freight received by all the railways in the United States for the year 1890 was 9.22 mills per ton per mile, and at that rate the transportation by rail of the lake cargoes would have cost $169,647,132.

Now, the average rate on all freights carried upon the Great Lakes in 1890 was about 1.2 mills per ton per mile against the railway rate of 9.22 mills per ton per mile, making the total cost of water transportation on the Great Lakes $22,619,000, equal to an economy over the cost of transporting the same freight by rail of $147,027,514. In other words, if the cargoes transported on the Great Lakes in 1890 had been compelled to be carried by the railway system of the United States it would have cost $147,000,000 more to carry it by the railway system than it costs to carry it by water. It has been demonstrated that $1 can be made to do on the Great Lakes what it would cost $26 to do on the best railway in the United States. The best steamships on our Great Lakes maintain a faster average rate of speed per hour than is maintained by any railroad on freight trains.

Mr. HERBERT. Is that the average rate of freight vessels or of all vessels?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I mean the average rate on the best steamships plying on the lakes.

Now, take the water way known as the Sault St. Marie and Hay Lake Channel, connecting Lake Superior with Lake Huron. The Government of the United States has been for many years and is now engaged in making large expenditures there in order to afford better facilities for passing the falls of the St. Marys River than we have heretofore had. The Government has there now, and has operated for years, one of the largest locks for the passage of boats up and down that there is in the world.

Note the increase of commerce passing through that single canal and lock, as shown by the following table, since 1885:

Valuation for—		Valuation based on estimates of 1885.
1885	$53,413,472.13
1886	69,080,071.95
1887	79,031,737.78
1888	82,156,019.97
1889	83,732,527.15
1890	102,214,948.70
1891	128,178,208.51
Canal was open to navigation during season of 1890, 228 days; 1891, 225 days.

Mr. Chairman, that refers only to the commerce on Lake Suterior; and yet it is much larger in volume than the international commerce that goes through the Suez Canal. Take another part of these Great Lakes. Take the Detroit River, where the Government has been expending and is now expending large sums of money. The statement is even more remarkable. The tonnage passing through Detroit River in the two hundred and thirty-four days of navigation in 1889 amounted to 36,203,606 tons, 10,000,000 tons more than the entries and clearances of all the seaports of the United States put together and 3,000,000 tons more than the combined foreign and coastwise shipping of the great commercial ports of Liverpool and London.

The freight tonnage in and out of New York Harbor in 1889 was 11,051,236 tons, and the freight and tonnage in and out of all the seaports of the United States in that year was 26,983,315 tons. At Liverpool in 1890 there entered and cleared freight tonnage aggregating 14,175,200 tons, and at London 19,245,417 tons. We thus get an idea of the vast commerce floating on this great inland water way, known as the Great Lakes, justifying fully the past and proposed expenditures of the Government for their improvement. It is a showing of commerce, I submit, Mr. Chairman, that justifies not only the amount which this bill carries for every project upon the Great Lakes, but it would justify ten times the amount.

Take the Mississippi River and its tributaries, constituting the next greatest inland system of water way on earth, a system aggregating more than 16,000 miles of navigable water way. On the Mississippi River and its navigable tributaries in the year 1890 there were 7,455 craft of all kinds, with a tonnage of 3,393,379. These vessels had an aggregate value of $15,335,000. Now, this fleet, operating upon the Mississippi River and its tributaries, carried in 1890 31,050,058 tons of freight of all kinds, of a valuation of $93,174,150, or a total valuation of cargoes and vessels amounting to $107,509,150.

In the same year there were transported upon the Mississippi River and its tributaries 10,858,894 passengers, of whom, and from all causes, only 195 were lost.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to another of our great water ways, and of the freight and passenger traffic accommodated upon it—the Hudson River. I have spoken of the Great Lakes and the Mississippi River system of water ways. Now, take the Hudson River—one of the projects placed under the contract system in this bill. The total tonnage of all kinds on the Hudson River during 1890, exclusive of the tonnage which came into the Hudson River from the canals which connect with the lakes, was 15,033,309 tons. I have not the figures showing the tonnage which came into it from the lakes, but it is very large. The Hudson River was a highway for freight during the year of 1890, aggregating twenty odd million tons; and there was carried upon the river in the same year 5,000,000 passengers.

In 1890 the freight rate on a bushel of corn between Chicago and Buffalo was 1.9 cents per bushel; in 1871, nineteen years before that, it was $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents a bushel; in 1859 it was 15 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents a bushel. So that by the improvement of this great water way, freights have decreased from 15 $\frac{1}{2}$ cents a bushel for the transportation of corn between Chicago and Buffalo in 1859 to $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents a bushel in 1871, and to 1.9 cents a bushel in 1890. The average season rate on coal from Buffalo to Duluth and Superior in 1890 was 39.4 cents per ton. In 1891, a year later, it was 31.8 cents per ton. From November 10, 1891, to the close of the navigation on the lakes, coal was carried from Buffalo to Duluth, 1,000 miles, for 10 cents a ton. In 1891 the rate on coal by lake from Buffalo to Chicago during almost the entire season was from 40 to 60 cents per ton, and the freight season rate was 56 cents per ton.

In 1887 the average rate was $1.05 per ton. In 1867 it cost $4.25 per ton on an average to carry iron ore from Escanaba to Lake Erie; in 1870 the same service cost $2.50; in 1889 the rate was $1.13, and in 1891 it was 82 cents. These figures are furnished me by Mr. C. H. Keep, of Buffalo, the secretary of the Lake Carrier's Association.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] be permitted to continue his remarks without limit.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I will not take up much more of the time of the committee with this statistical information. I have a large amount of it here which I ask leave to incorporate in my speech as it will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMPSON. If the gentleman will permit me, I wish to call his attention to the fact that the water competition has brought down the railroad rates for freight, and in that way has saved the people many million dollars besides what he has stated.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I was coming to that. The saving of which I have spoken is the difference between the cost of transportation by water and what would have been the cost of transportation by land. That is, if the Great Lakes had not been there and this enormous traffic had had to be carried by rail, it would have cost, at the present average rate of railway freight transportation, $140,000,000 more than it actually cost to carry it by water.

But my friend from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] is entirely correct when he says that these figures do not represent the total saving to the American people resulting from the existence of this water way. They represent only a tithe of the saving, because this water way known as the Great Lakes, penetrating from tide water at the mouth of the St. Lawrence, or from tide water at the mouth of the Hudson and through the Hudson and the canals—penetrating from tide water more than 1,400 miles into the interior of the country, comes into competition for the carriage of this immense volume of freight with the railroads that penetrate that country, and this competition by water regulates the cost of transportation by railroad. And, by reason of that competition, there is a much greater saving than the actual difference between the cost of transportation by water and the cost of transportation by rail.

Mr. PICKLER. Does not the same rule apply to the great rivers?

Mr. BLANCHARD. The same rule exactly. I have shown that there were carried upon the Mississippi River and its tributaries in 1890 more than $31,000,000 worth of freight of an aggregate value of more than $90,000,000, and the same saving results in the transportation of freight upon our rivers in proportion as upon the Great Lakes. I believe, however, that we have not yet reached upon any of our great rivers as low a rate of transportation as the rate upon the Great Lakes. We find that the deeper we get the channels in our water ways the cheaper is the transportation of freight.

Mr. CATCHINGS. If the gentleman will permit me I will state that the difference is only five-tenths of a mill per ton per mile between the rate of transportation on the lakes and the rate on the Mississippi River.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I was not aware the difference was so small. The fact that we have been enabled to bring down freight rates upon the Great Lakes to as low as 1.2 mills per ton per mile is an argument justifying the appropriation in the bill for the deep-water channel of 20 and 21 feet from Chicago and Duluth to Buffalo, and the figures cited by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] in regard to transportation rates upon the Mississippi River system of water ways are an argument justifying the wisdom of the committee in placing in this bill the provision for the continuing work upon the Mississippi River under the contract system.

Mr. WHITING. The gentleman has stated that last year the freight rate on iron ore from Escanaba to Lake Erie ports was 82 cents per ton.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITING. I see that this year charters are made and ore is being carried at 55 cents per ton, and yet there has not been any deepening of the channels between the lakes in the mean time. Therefore I draw the conclusion that it is not entirely by deepening of the channels that the freight rates are lowered.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, through the shallows in the connecting water ways of the lakes the Government of the United States has been engaged every year for years in deepening the channels. Last year and the year before that work was going on, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WHITING] is mistaken when he says that a deepening of those channels has not taken place between 1890 and the present time.

Mr. WHITING. Ah, I did not state that at all. I simply stated that the 82-cent rate of last year had been followed by the 55-cent rate of this year, without any change being made in the channels in the mean time.

Mr. BLANCHARD. But the gentleman must recollect that the river and harbor bill which passed in September, 1890, carried appropriations for deepening those channels. For instance, the Grosse Point channel, the St. Clair Flats canals, the Detroit River channel, and work at those points has been going on in the working season since then.

Mr. WHITING. Exactly; and the water is shallower to-day than it has been since 1886.

Mr. HOUK of Ohio. That only shows the necessity for further appropriations.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have no knowledge, Mr. Chairman, that there is any shoaling of the water in any of those channels at the present time beyond what existed last year and the year before. On the contrary, Gen. Poe, the engineer officer in charge of that portion of the work, reports satisfactory results in all the operations that he has been engaged in, and those have been operations looking to securing additional depths in the channels.

Mr. SIMPSON. And I would call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the great difficulty heretofore has been not so much in the channels as in the depth of water in the different harbors. The deepening of the water in the harbors has justified the building of a larger class of vessels, and that has had a tendency to lower freight rates.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The remarkable lowering in freight rates from the figures which prevailed in past years upon the lakes and upon the Mississippi River results from the fact, as shown by gentlemen who appeared before the River and Harbor Committee, and who have made this subject a study, and as is shown also by the engineers' reports—this remarkable saving, I say, results more largely from the fact that vessels of greater draft and larger carrying capacity can pass through the channels.

Mr. SIMPSON. I would also call attention to another fact which will throw some light upon this question. I understand that this year navigation has opened earlier than usual, and every man who has any knowledge of the lakes understands that a long season always brings down freights, while a short season raises them.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take up any more of the time of the committee in this general discussion, and unless some gentleman wishes to ask me further questions upon this subject I will yield the floor and give way to some gentleman who may desire to address the committee on the river and harbor bill.

Mr. REILLY. I only want to ask the gentleman a question. I suppose nobody would question the wisdom and propriety of making these appropriations for the improvement of our great water ways, but I wish to ask the gentleman whether he desires the House to understand that all this reduction in freight rates is to be attributed exclusively to the work of improvement that has been carried on at Government expense?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania understood me to even intimate any such thing as that he greatly misunderstood me.

Mr. REILLY. You gave the figures, and I did not know but what you wished to leave the House under that impression.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Not at all. Everybody knows that there are other considerations entering into this question of cheapening transportation. What I am contending for is that the improvement of our water ways is one of the chief factors in the problem of securing cheaper transportation.

Mr. REILLY. I agree to that.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And I think that no one can gainsay that the greater the improvement in our rivers and harbors in the sense of making them afford better facilities for free access to them, and from them, and over them, and through them, for vessels engaged in the transportation business, the greater will be the reduction in the cost of freight transportation.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Somewhat in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. REILLY], I will ask the chairman whether it is not a fact that the existing system of grain transportation on the Mississippi River is largely traceable to the improvement of that river in its channels and at its mouth by the General Government? Prior to the opening of the mouth of the Mississippi by the Eads jetties and the improvement of the channel of the river at Lake Providence and at Plum Point was there any such thing known as the transportation of grain on any considerable scale on the Mississippi River?

Mr. BLANCHARD. There was not. The great work at the mouth of the Mississippi done by Capt. Eads, under a contract given him by Congress, resulted in deepening the South Pass of that river from 8 feet to a depth of 30 feet, and in opening the Mississippi River as a great highway of commerce for the transportation of grain to the sea and to foreign countries.

There is now a very considerable percentage of grain raised in the West going down the Mississippi River and finding its way to the ocean through that great highway of commerce.

When the Mississippi River Commission undertook its work in 1881 there were forty bars from Cairo to the mouth of the river to be removed; and a bar on the Mississippi River, Mr. Chairman, I would have the committee understand, is not a mile or so of shoal water, but it means 20 to 40 miles of shoal water. The Mississippi River Commission has deepened eight of these bars, so that where there were 5 or 5½ feet formerly at low water on the bars they have now 8 feet upon them, admitting barges—because this transportation of grain on the Mississippi River is in fleets of barges conducted by a single tug—admitting barges of large draft to pass where, before the improvement inaugurated by the Mississippi River Commission began, these barges of considerable draft could not be used because of shoal water. And so it is that the chief factor in this question of cheapening transportation is the improvement of our rivers and harbors.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield now for a question? Mr. BLANCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to get the gentleman's attention to one feature in connection with this matter, which is troubling me a little, and I think in the general debate it ought to be touched upon, though perhaps it would more properly come in under the five-minutes' debate. There may be no particular question in regard to the great water ways of the country, but I would like some gentleman familiar with the subject to give us some information in reference to the improvements of rivers and creeks which are scattered throughout this bill, but which I have been unable to find on the map in my possession. I want to know what they have to do, if anything, with the great water ways of the country?

Mr. BROWN. And the cheapening of transportation.

Mr. BUTLER. And the cheapening of transportation. The map I have may not be a good one; and I should be glad to have some light on the subject.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Very likely your map was defective.

Mr. BUTLER. It is the best map I can find.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Or perhaps the gentleman himself did not conduct his investigation far enough.

Mr. BUTLER. Well, I did the best I could with the material at hand.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman was seeking information touching these streams, and had come into the committee room, we could have furnished him with maps showing the position of every one of the streams named in this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not doubt it.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Now, from my own experience, which has been somewhat lengthy in this House, in dealing with river and harbor appropriations, I am led to believe that if you consider the aggregate of good accomplished in the way of cheapening transportation by improving the smaller rivers and streams of the country, concerning which the gentleman from Iowa finds fault, it would amount perhaps to more in the aggregate than the saving by any one of the larger systems of transportation by water, like the Great Lakes, for instance.

Mr. BUTLER. That is the very point I would like to hear the gentleman upon, and that was the purpose of my question.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Will the gentleman from Louisiana permit me a suggestion? There was a statement by the Chief of Engineers, Gen. Casey, before the River and Harbor Committee two years ago upon this very point. He was questioned by the committee as to the results to be obtained by the improvement of these smaller streams. He stated that at the request of President Cleveland he had made a careful examination of the river and harbor bill—I do not recollect what year.

Mr. BLANCHARD. He referred to the bill of the Fiftieth Congress.

Mr. CLARKE of Alabama. Well that he examined the river and harbor bill of the Fiftieth Congress in that connection, and was thoroughly satisfied that there was a larger proportion of benefit resulting to the people from the improvement of the smaller streams, in the aggregate, than from the larger. He said that they were generally for the benefit of a people, a community, or a section of the country that had no other mode of transporting their products, and the articles they consumed, and that the percentage in his judgment was larger than that arising from the more important streams.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I wish to say further to the gentleman from Iowa that these smaller streams, all of which flow into some larger stream, and constitute with the larger stream a system of water transportation, that where we appropriated $5,000 or $10,000 or $15,000 or $20,000, or perhaps less than $5,000, to remove obstructions or otherwise improve, there has been a showing made in the engineer's report touching the commerce to be benefited by such expenditure justifying the appropriation. In many instances the smaller streams—some of them are called creeks that may be navigable for 50, 60, or 100 miles, some are called bayous, like in my own State, navigable 250 miles—that carry millions of dollars of commerce annually, and perhaps get an appropriation in every river and harbor bill amounting to from five to ten thousand dollars to remove snags or other obstructions from the channel.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to state to the gentleman from Louisiana that my question was asked in perfect good faith and not in any spirit of captiousness, but in order to direct the general discussion to these smaller streams, because I am absolutely ignorant on that point. I therefore asked the question in good faith, and for the purpose of receiving information.

Mr. HERMANN. If the gentleman will permit me, I desire to state that in almost every instance the testimony is that where an appropriation has been made and expended upon these small streams it has been followed by a reduction of freight exceeding the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, in very many cases these small streams penetrate a country that is deficient in rail transportation. A stream may run 60, 70, or 80 miles, along which there is a settlement of people engaged in farming. Perhaps there is no railroad in that country at all, and this stream is the only highway that these people have for the transportation of their products to market; or, if there be a railroad, perhaps crossing the river or paralleling it, this stream that we appropriate a few thousand dollars for to remove obstructions or to make some improvement upon it comes into direct competition with the railroad and regulates the rates of freight upon it.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I want to ask if in your long experience on this committee you have ever learned of a stream upon which there has been an appropriation expended for its improvement that the commerce has not been largely increased and improved? Is it not universally so in all cases?

Mr. BLANCHARD. That is true. Why, on the line of the statement made by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN], take the case of Bayou Bartholomew, in the district of my friend [Mr. BOATNER] here, steamboats come from St. Louis to points on that river, bringing Western produce there, and carrying down from that country thousands of bales of cotton to find a market in the city of New Orleans. There are no railroads there. This stream, and others like it, navigable for from 75 to 150 miles, are the highways upon which people living on them or near them depend to get their cotton to market and their supplies from market.

Now, when we come to consider the bill under the five-minute rule, if gentlemen think there are small streams appropriated for or small harbors appropriated for in the bill where the appropriations are not justified, let them point them out, and if we can not from the engineer's report justify the expenditure by showing a sufficient volume of commerce to be benefited by such appropriation, or other reason for the appropriation, let it be stricken out.

This tirade that is heard in the newspapers in certain sections of the country against the smaller appropriations in the bill is unjust, and it results from a want of a sufficient knowledge on the part of those who write such articles of the subject they treat of.

I thank the House for its attention.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman desires to move that the committee rise, I will yield for that purpose. It is nearly 5 o'clock.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to surrender the floor, and if any gentleman wishes to take it he can do so.

Mr. HAUGEN. I desire a little time.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I would suggest to my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. HAUGEN] that we go on with this discussion for half an hour longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, having had the honor of serving my State for five years in the capacity of railroad commissioner, my mind has naturally been led to some study and consideration of the question of transportation rates. I know something about the difficulties that beset a public official supposed to exercise some wholesome restraint upon the immense interests represented by the railways, without having been invested with the necessary authority to enforce his orders.

This is a bill designed to cheapen transportation. It is an indirect effort to cheapen rates by enlarging the channels and thus lessening the friction of freight in transit. Directly it affects water transportation only, but indirectly its influence will radiate to the whole transportation system of the country.

The people are interested in this measure in the effect it will exercise upon the price of the articles they sell and purchase.

We are all influenced mostly by our immediate surroundings. To many who do not live upon one of the water ways directly mentioned in this bill it may seem that the appropriation of $21,000,000 is a wastefulness indefensible. They do not see that it affects the cost of every article of consumption they enjoy. The railroad rate seems to them the only rate from which they suffer, and is the only tax of transportation which they ask to be relieved from.

There are numerous inconsistencies in our legislation, but I know of none more striking than the efforts made to build up a merchant marine and the appropriations made for that laudable purpose, while at the same time we are permitting railroads to cut the rates to points enjoying water communication. In the northern portion of the country this means that the railroads can fix any rate they choose during the close of navigation in winter, and thereby recoup any loss suffered by cutting rates in summer, in order to cripple and destroy their competitors in the lake or river carrying trade. Every improvement of our water ways has cheapened the cost of transportation. And the water-competition is about the only influence that has given us cheaper rates.

And there is no good reason why the railroads should be permitted to adopt ruinously low rates for the very purpose of destroying a growing commerce which we are all anxious to aid and build up.

I recall that until within a very few years past the railway rates from Chicago to interior points in Wisconsin remained exactly what they were in 1872. Whether they have been lowered within the last three or four years I do not know. But as you went further towards the north and approached a point where the competing influence of lake transportation from Chicago to Lake Superior made itself felt the rate was much lower, although the distance carried was multiplied several times.

I believe it would be well to give to the shipowner that traffic which naturally belongs to him, and that there should be no exception to or suspension permitted of the long and short haul clause of the interstate-commerce law. Let us encourage that system of transportation that is open to all competitors, and to which we owe every lowering of rates.

Mr. Chairman, I look upon the bill now before us as one of the most important measures that will be considered by this Congress. It carries with it more reduction of taxation than the most enthusiastic tariff reformer ever saw in his brightest visions.

I desire, sir, to substitute the word "transportation" for "tariff," and then I am ready to adopt the current phrase that "transportation is a tax." Not only is transportation a tax, but it is the heaviest tax imposed upon the American people, and it is a tax which is left almost entirely untouched by Congress or by the States, so far as regulation is concerned. It goes on increasing from year to year, the iron web of the transportation companies weaving itself about the enterprise, the skill, and the genius of our people. Industry, frugality, and business acumen go down before favoritism and discrimination extended or withheld by the railway companies.

That this power of unequal taxation should so long have been left untouched and unembarrassed to the sweet will of private enterprise is astounding. But the magnitude of the question seems to have appalled both political parties.

During the last year reported in Poor's Manual the taxes paid by the people of the United States to railroad companies amounted to $1,086,040,207, while for the last fiscal year the "tariff taxes," which have caused our friends on the other side so much sleepless anxiety, amounted to only $219,522,205.

The latter was for the support of government, collected by it. The former was collected without supervision or control on the part of any governmental agency, and went into the pockets of private persons or corporations, and was too frequently levied without regard to equality.

It is only necessary to refer to the charges that railway men constantly prefer against each other to prove that discrimination in rates and violations of the law are so frequent as to be the rule rather than the exception. They come together and solemnly agree upon a schedule of rates which is to be open and inviolate, and they do not cross the threshold of the council-room before they are planning to avoid it. There is no such absolute want of good faith in any business in the country as is found among the railway men of to-day. Why this is so is certainly beyond comprehension, unless it be that the system under which they are working has in it some defect demoralizing to its agents. I think we may look for that cause in the secret-rate system which has prevailed. Under it has grown up a system of deception and fraud, practiced by the rival roads, not only upon each other, but upon the shipper as well. Each shipper has been assured that he is the special favorite, and an expert in thus misleading those with whom he deals has stood the best chances of promotion.

No one denies the necessity of railroads or the service they render in promoting a higher civilization. They enter the desert and penetrate the forest in advance of settlement and make both inhabitable. But, having done this, they go still further. They pry into the affairs of every community and of every individual enterprise, and nothing can succeed unless the railway company or its officers are taken into the deal. That is practically what the secret rate amounts to. It is based not upon the value of the service performed, but upon what the shipper can afford to pay.

Whoever is so unfortunate as not to have the favored rate may as well close his doors, if his business is such as to make it dependent upon railway transportation. Many a man possessed of capital, skill, energy, and honest ambition has had the deadly sword of discrimination inserted under his fifth rib, the courteous railroad official meanwhile asking him: "Art thou in health, my brother?"

I do not claim, Mr. Chairman, that railway men are any worse than other men. Nor are they any better. Their faults and shortcomings are due to the vicious system under which they work. And that system has grown and expanded to such an extent that, without aid from legislation, they are, even if ever so well disposed, absolutely helpless. Considering themselves specialists, they naturally resent what they consider outside interference with a business which they, frequently honestly, believe themselves alone competent to manage, while their every attempt to control it only adds evidence of their impotency.

They point to past legislation as proof of their assertion that the legislative power can not successfully grapple with the railway question. If legislation has had some degree of success in controlling and equalizing rates, as I believe it has, no thanks are due the railroads, for they have at all times interposed every obstacle for the purpose of making such legislation odious.

But it is not individual discrimination alone of which complaint can justly be made. The most far-reaching evil is unquestionably that discrimination which affects communities—cities and villages. If any danger to our institutions lurks anywhere it is in our large centers of population, the breeding place of crime, discontent, and anarchy. And still the direct result of past railway methods has been to drive population (by driving all manufacturing enterprise) away from local points into a few large centers. The rate has been such that it has been impossible to conduct any manufacturing outside of the charmed circles laid down by the omnipotent maker of rate schedules.

Cities have been built up, not upon natural advantages of location, but solely and alone upon railroad favoritism. Other localities more favorably situated as to natural advantages and resources, failing to secure the advantage of discrimination in rates, remain obscure villages.

To place such enormous powers, for good or for evil, in any agency not responsible to the people seems an anomaly in our development. The results have been what might be naturally expected, high development in a few favored spots at the expense of the remainder of the country.

But we are told that competition will regulate all this and result finally in just and equitable rates. Competition is absolutely impossible in railway management. The railway is a public highway, but, unlike other highways, it is controlled by one individual, or what is the same thing, by one corporation.

The fact that two railways serve the same community does not change this. Where competition is limited to so few competing forces, as the railway service necessarily must be outside of a few large centers, combination, or an understanding as to rates, will take the place of competition. As has been truly said: Where combination is possible, competition is impossible.

But the very character of these great agencies is such that they should not be asked to compete.

It would be just as sensible to impose upon the community the unnecessary tax of maintaining two highways side by side as to impose upon it the injustice of maintaining two railroads where one is amply sufficient to meet the public requirements. They are too expensive luxuries to maintain in idleness. By giving to one traffic which does not exceed its capacity the Government might well prescribe rates, and protecting its legitimate traffic, that rate could be materially reduced.

It would be just as sensible for a farmer to keep two spans of horses to cultivate a farm requiring only one to do the work well, on the idea that competition between the two teams would cheapen the service, as it is to think that by encumbering a community with unnecessary railroads the cost of transportation will be cheapened.

Control of construction and of rates would be a benefit not only to the community, but to railway investors.

The effect of transportation rates is so far-reaching, it enters so largely into every comfort and necessity of our existence, that it ought to be the first thought of Government to so regulate it as to secure the most healthful and equal development.

A prominent railroad man has recently discussed this question of secret rates and discriminations so ably and impartially and with such a fund of information in his possession that I desire to read a couple of paragraphs from his pen. I read from the thirty-first page of a book written by the late president of the Chicago, St. Paul and Kansas City Railroad Company, Mr. A. B. Stickney, of St. Paul, Minn. He says, speaking of the assumed power of railroads:

This power, like a government, has authority to make tariffs and enforce their collection. It claims a right which no civilized government claims, and no sovereign has dared to exercise for centuries, of rebating a portion of its tariff, and thus discriminating between its subjects in the collection of its revenues. It is safe to say that if the Congress of the United States should enact a law which established on any commodity one impost duty for the city of New York and a different duty for other cities, or one duty for one firm and another duty for another firm, no matter how slight the difference, the people would resort to arms, if need be, rather than submit.

Railway transportation, under present conditions, is to the industrial world what the atmosphere is to the physical world, it pervades and is essential to all industries. As in the physical world no man or beast, no plant or shrub, can refuse to breathe the air without death ensuing, so in the industrial world no industry and no human being can refuse railway transportation except under similar penalties. It pervades every article of commerce. When one buys food, clothing, or fuel, he buys railway transportation. When he builds houses, or stores, or manufacturing establishments, churches, or schoolhouses, he buys railway transportation. When he buys horses and carriages, jewels or statuary, paintings or books, theater tickets or lecture tickets, or indulges in the luxury of doctors or lawyers, he pays for railway transportation.

Who would consent that a few men should have the power to dictate upon what terms the air should be breathed? It is idle to talk about railway transportation being a mere article of commerce, owned by the company, "who, as such owner, may sell it or not, as it may see fit, or, if it elects to sell, may demand such price as it chooses or can obtain." It is nonsense to call that merchandise which no one can refuse to purchase.

And Mr. Stickney argues that legislative control of ratemaking is absolutely essential, not only for the good of the community, but for the protection of those who invest in railroad property. And why not? We place banks under public inspection for the protection of depositors and stockholders. Why should not this immense interest, representing investments amounting to $11,000,000,000, be subject to some supervision?

Mr. Stickney, from whose book I have quoted, argues that no adequate relief or control can emanate from State legislation; that the entire railway system of the country is so interwoven that the Federal Government is the only power that can consistently and effectively legislate on the subject. He has collected numerous decisions of courts to sustain his position that the Federal Government has the authority, under the Constitution, to enact such legislation. Upon that subject I will not enter during the short time allotted to me, but refer gentlemen to the excellent work from which I have quoted.

I am, Mr. Chairman, a firm believer in the interstate-commerce law. I think it a step, although but a short one, in the right direction. It has frequently been violated, and seems to need many and radical amendments. But I believe as firmly as I believe anything that the time is not far distant when the people will demand legislation that will take hold of these vast powers with a firmer grip and stamp out the dishonesty which has grown up under a system where the success of private enterprise has been made to depend entirely or largely upon getting on the friendly side of some railroad official.

The rate should be fixed, and once fixed should remain stable for, say, six months or a year, so that a merchant in Wisconsin laying in his stock of goods in Chicago will be able to know that his neighbor will not secure a secret lower rate on his later purchases, and that the open rate shall not be changed except at stated well-known periods.

Transportation enters too largely into the cost of articles of consumption to permit it to become the shuttlecock of the mere whim of any man or set of men: men perhaps interested more in ruining a rival than in serving the community, or even the investors whose confidence they enjoy.

The possibility of a secret rate is demoralizing alike to the railway official and to the shipper. Intrigue becomes more essential to success than business sagacity and foresight. It is an interference with the natural law of competition which railroad men so freely invoke when it is proposed to curtail their assumed powers.

But what is the remedy for this evil?

Railway men are jealous of their supposed or assumed prerogatives. They never yield their usurped powers without a struggle. Commissioners of an advisory character merely do not reach the root of the evil.

Do away with the idea that transportation is an article of commerce which the owner can sell or dispose of at pleasure. How can that be merchandise which, like the air we breathe, is indispensable? Are the American people unable to solve this difficulty? To admit that is to admit that self-government is a failure. The solution may not be without difficulties, but the very seriousness of the situation ought to make us meet the question with firmness; not in a vindictive spirit towards railroads, but in an honest endeavor to wrest from them the governmental powers they hold by usurpation, and to restore them to the people from whom alone they flow.

The United States alone of the leading nations of the world has stood by listlessly indifferent while this concentration of wealth and power and political influence has taken possession of the business development of the country. Is this the only country which lacks the inherent strength necessary to secure equality between its citizens?

Mr. Stickney proposes, and I adopt his plan as that of an export and as the most feasible and effective that has come to my notice, to create a governmental department with a secretary at its head, and to invest it with sufficient power to, temporarily at least, take possession of a road, as a receiver would under an order of the courts, where violations or disregard of the law, or of the rates prepared by it are persisted in. Rates should be fixed as to terminal charges, which would not need to vary materially in the different parts of the country. The charge for the haul to be open and definite, based upon what experience shows to be the actual cost of carrying, the charge per mile to decrease with the increase of distance. To determine the distance of shipment he would apply a rule to an accurate chart, basing the charge upon the air-line distance. He would make the system as simple and the method to arrive at results as direct as possible.

The effort being to make discrimination impossible, the rates must be open, equal to all, and permanent.

The Senate committee, treating of this subject some years ago, said:

Competition has been looked upon as a safeguard against extortion, but experience has shown that it is no safeguard against discrimination. It can not accomplish both purposes, but, on the contrary, where it prevents extortion it produces discrimination.

Competition does not prevent discrimination, for the evil is most conspicuous where and when competition is most active.

Commenting on the inconsistent attitude of past efforts at legislation, Mr. Stickney says, page 141:

The admitted evils of discriminating and ever-fluctuating rates are growths which have afflicted the railway problem from its earliest years. Their roots now spread through the whole system and to pluck them out requires the courage to attack the seat of the disease and apply the specific, or the knife, as may be required. It is evident that the actual rates constitute the heart of this disease; therefore, whoever has the courage to make schedules or specific rates (not maximum or minimum rates) which are free from extortion or unjust discrimination and are just alike to the shipper and to the railway, and at the same time has and does enforce them, will completely remedy the disease. It is also evident that there is no other remedy. There can be no doubt that Congress has the power or that it can create a commission or commissions endowed with the requisite power. The interstate law recognizes the necessities of the case, but instead of making schedules, it contented itself with impotently enacting in general and somewhat ambiguous terms, that somebody else should make them, namely, the railway officials who, unfortunately, know no more about it and wholly lack the necessary power to enforce the schedules when made.

Cowardice has been the bane of this class of legislation from its inception. Legislatures have been cowardly, commissioners have been cowardly, and the companies have been cowardly.

Sir, I have a distinct recollection of the dire predictions of some leading Western railroad men as to what the effect would be of the enactment of the interstate-commerce law.

At the time of its enactment the open rate on wheat and flour from Minneapolis to Chicago was 10 cents per hundred. The "transit rate," so called, was $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents.

At the same time the same companies were charging from intermediate points on their lines in Western Wisconsin and in Minnesota to Chicago 18 cents. If any loss was suffered at the competitive point it was made up from the higher rate at local points in Western Wisconsin and in Minnesota, where there never was any competition.

When the law took effect, the Minneapolis rate to Chicago was immediately raised to 18 cents, and a general denunciation of the new act followed from the shipper, and in fact from everybody in St. Paul and Minneapolis. It looked as if the railway men had won their point, and that it would be impossible to enforce it. They had won with the beneficiaries of their former discriminations.

But the wheat and flour trade instantly almost sought new channels, and Chicago, St. Paul, and Minneapolis, and the railway companies as well, in order to keep the grain of the Northwest from seeking the nearest outlet to cheap water transportation at the west end of Lake Superior, had to modify their rates. They reduced the rate to about the old figure. They were compelled to do it or abandon the grain-carrying trade to Chicago. Had it not been for the proximity of Lake Superior, I have no doubt but the 18-cent rate would have been maintained much longer.

Now, what was the result at local points in Wisconsin and Minnesota? Why, under the clause which provides that no more shall be charged for the shorter than for the longer haul over the same line in the same direction, every local station on these through lines received the benefit of the competitive rate from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Chicago. At many places in my district it meant a saving of 5 cents or more on every bushel of wheat shipped to Chicago. You can never make those people believe that rates should not be subject to Government control. I desire to call attention to this, as it has been so frequently charged here that no one has been benefited by the enactment of that law. The law is all right if enforced. I regret that it is possible to evade it, and that the commission lacks the requisite power to enforce its orders.

There is no doubt in my mind but that the great increase in lake traffic is directly due to the interstate-commerce law. It gave effect to the natural law that transportation will, when unimpeded, seek the cheapest channel, that it will move in the direction where there is the least resistance.

From the very date almost of the passage of that law we may count the growth and development of the cities at the head of Lake Superior and the marvelous increase of commerce from those points.

Superior, now a city of 30,000 inhabitants, was then a mere village. It shipped last season from its port 19,667,487 bushels of wheat. Duluth shipped 14,993,749, and the two together beat Chicago by 3,883,176 bushels. No place in the world comes up to the head of Lake Superior in the amount of grain shipped. Superior and Duluth have taken the pennant from Chicago forever in the grain trade.

There was also shipped last year from Superior 1,600,000 barrels of flour, 4,000,000 pounds of wool, besides other merchandise, ore, lumber, etc.

The largest dry dock on the lakes has been built here to take care of the vessels engaged in this commerce.

There was launched at Superior last year nine steel vessels of the whaleback pattern, built for freighting purposes, and there are now on the stocks ten more soon to be launched. One of these I see by the papers was launched on Saturday last.

More vessels are being built in this five-year-old town each year than at any other place in the country.

In 1886, the year before the passage of the interstate-commerce law, 316 vessels of an average tonnage of 889 tons entered the harbor of Superior. In 1891 the number had increased to 1,610, and the average tonnage had increased to 1,282. There are no more enterprising cities anywhere than those cities at the head of Lake Superior. They are getting in part the large traffic which must seek its outlet by this grandest and cheapest of nature's highways, the Great Lake system. And why not give them every encouragement to reduce still further this tax of transportation to and from the wheat fields of Northern Wisconsin, Minnesota, the two Dakotas, and the corn fields of Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas, and all the country to the west of them. This same argument of cheap water transportation applies equally to the Mississippi River and other water ways of the country, differing only in degree.

The average rate per ton per mile on all railroads in the United States was during the last year reported 9.3 mills, something less than 1 cent per ton per mile.

During the last season of navigation on the lakes the average rate per ton per mile by lake was not over $1\frac{1}{4}$ mills. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] has just told us that in 1890 it was 1.3 mills. I give you the rate for 1891, showing a still lower rate. In other words, the cost of transportation by the lakes is only about one-eighth of what it is by rail. The railroads charge as much for carrying a ton 1 mile as the lake vessels charge for carrying it 8 miles.

This is what has built up the lake traffic, and this is the only security the Great West has that it will be emancipated from railway rates to the seaboard.

It has been estimated on comparisons made between lake and rail rates that Lake Superior alone saved to the people of the Northwest in 1891 over $153,000,000 in freight rates. And still the great economist of this House opposes the paltry sum of $5,000,000, which this bill carries for the entire lake system. This is truly a penny wise and pound foolish policy.

Much of the freight that now goes by lake could not be moved at all by rail. This would mean fewer comforts and a scantier supply of the necessities of life to those benefited by this cheap transportation.

The traffic of the lakes is a surprise to those not familiar with it.

Comparing it with the Suez Canal we find that in 1890 there passed through the Sault St. Marie Canal, at the outlet of Lake Superior, 10,557 vessels having a net registered tonnage of 8,454,435 tons, while the Suez Canal during the same year shows only 3,389 vessels of a net registered tonnage of 6,890,014 tons.

Nearly three times as many vessels and over 1,500,000 more tons of freight went through the Sault Canal during the seven and a half months it was open to navigation than passed through the Suez during the twelve months.

The entries and clearances in New York in 1889 represented 11,051,236 tons, and the entries and clearances in all the seaports in the United States represented 26,983,315 tons. The entries and clearances from London and Liverpool during that year were 33,430,617 tons. The entries and clearances on the Great Lakes in the same year were, according to the United States census, 27,700,000 tons; and in 1890 the total freight traffic of the Great Lakes was 33,303,324 tons, exceeding by 6,000,000 the combined entries and clearances of all the seaports of the United States, Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific, and equaling the combined entries and clearances, both coastwise and foreign, of London and Liverpool, the great commercial centers of the world.

These shipments embraced 9,000,000 tons of iron ore, 5,000,000 tons of grain and flour, 8,000,000 tons of lumber and forest products, 7,000,000 tons of coal, and 4,500,000 tons of miscellaneous freight. This was carried by a floating equipment of 2,784 vessels, having a carrying capacity of 1,254,275 tons and a commercial value of $48,809,750.

Of the total tonnage of shipping built in the United States during the year ending June 30, 1889, 5 per cent was built on the Western rivers, 8 per cent was built on the Pacific coast, 41 per cent on the Atlantic coast, and 46 per cent was built on the Great Lakes, the Great Lakes again leading all others.

A wise and fairly liberal system of improvements will still further reduce the cost of transportation on the Great Lakes.

The whaleback, cheap in construction and operation, is the great invention of the age in shipbuilding. With a much larger freight capacity it draws less water than the old style of ships.

What the West needs more than anything else is a continuous water way to the sea. Our material interests are dependent upon the early completion of the new and deeper canal at the Sault. A 21-foot canal there and a corresponding deepening of the channels between the lakes will result in an ultimate reduction of freights to possibly one-half of the present figures. And an American canal at Niagara Falls is the sine qua non to the perfection of this system of navigation.

With modern appliances no railroad can compete with this rate. The lake traffic has come to stay and it deserves all the consideration of liberal statesmanship. Reaching as this highway does into the very heart of the continent, the swarming millions of future generations will witness upon its bosom navies such as the world has never dreamed of, and its cities will rival in population, energy, and prosperity the largest cities of the world.

The forced diversion of traffic from this route has been in direct violation of every natural law. Restore it to its natural channel, remove the possibility of railroad discrimination, give every interest free scope to compete, and the largest fresh-water system on the globe will return to the American people manifold yearly all the expenses required to keep it in serviceable condition. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that general debate be considered as closed on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks that all general debate may be considered as closed. Is there objection?

Mr. BAILEY. I know it is not competent for the Committee of the Whole to grant leave to print, but if the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] will give me his assurance that he will not object to my obtaining leave to print extracts from the messages of the Democratic Presidents up to 1857 vetoing river and harbor bills, I shall make no objection.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am perfectly willing.

Mr. BURROWS. I think that better be determined in the House.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not ask that it be determined here, because I know it can not be.

Mr. DOCKERY. It can by unanimous consent.

Mr. BURROWS. Leave to print is a very important matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Louisiana that three gentlemen have notified the Chair that they desire to be recognized in opposition to the bill. The Chair does not see but one of them present. The Chair thinks it is fair that he should state this fact to the gentleman from Louisiana. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. BUTLER. In view of the fact that several gentlemen have stated that they desire to be heard on the bill, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa objects.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move that the committee do now rise. The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7820) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CHINESE EXCLUSION BILL.

Mr. WARWICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 6185) to prohibit the coming of Chinese persons into the United States; when the Speaker signed the same.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. LAYTON, until the 15th instant, on account of important business.

To Mr. COVERT, until the 10th instant, on account of important business.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to the Committee on Banking and Currency to print testimony taken before that committee in the investigation of the Keystone Spring Garden National Bank.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to joint resolution (H. Res. 118) to suspend the issue of permits to erect dwelling houses in alleys in the District of Columbia.

It also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 5354) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Osage River between the town of Warsaw and the mouth of Turkey Creek, in Benton County, Mo.; and

A bill (H. R. 6295) to punish false swearing before trial boards of the Metropolitan police force and fire department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

It also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 38) to provide for the disposition and sale of lands known as the Klamath River Indian Reservation, asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. DAVES, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas, as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning I will move to limit discussion on the river and harbor bill. I now move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. WINN, from the Committee on War Claims: A resolution referring the bill (H. R. 5367) for the relief of James C. Lipscomb to the Court of Claims. (Report No. 1268.)

By Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on War Claims: A resolution referring the bill (H. R. 2510) for the relief of Jacob J. Talbot to the Court of Claims. (Report No. 1269.)

A resolution referring the bills (H. R. 2030, 2032, 4514, and 6234) for the relief of the estates of Charles Northrop and S. H. De Bevoise, Asa B. Ayers, estates of Clairborne De Loach and August Heberlein to the Court of Claims. (Report No. 1270.)

A resolution referring the bills (H. R. 7266, 7382, 7384, 7385, 7386, 7387, 7388, 7389, 7786, 7870, 7880, 7920, 7965, 6216, and 7383) for the relief of John McMurtrey, Vincent Armistead, Francis Wilkes, Cassa Simpson, William R. Beckham; the estate of James L. Holland, deceased; John Jones; Martha J. Peeden, administratrix of Haywood Peeden; Julius B. Litten, A. O. Williamson, Matthew N. Grimmert, William Baugh, Joseph B. Johnson, John Wyttinger, and Mary N. Westmoreland to the Court of Claims. (Report No. 1271.)

A resolution referring the bills (H. R. 2951, 7246, 7548, 7735, 1997, 7864, 8025, 7604, 4514) for the relief of the estate of J. M. Campbell, Jesse L. Brandt, Louisa E. McLean, Mary Jane Hubbard; the estate of H. S. Simmons, deceased; Samuel Hayes, deceased; William A. Franklin, executor of J. B. Franklin; deceased; Holsten Female College, and R. D. Jordan, guardian of the heirs of Claiborne De Loach, deceased, to the Court of Claims. (Report No. 1272.)

By Mr. CADMUS, from the Committee on War Claims: A bill (H. R. 8134) for the relief of Charles Candy. (Report No. 1273.)

By Mr. COBB, of Missouri, from the same committee: A bill (H. R. 8086) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Archibald C. Legg, deceased, against the United States. (Report No. 1274.)

By Mr. ENLOE, from the same committee:

A bill (H. R. 4458) for the relief of Stephen McNamara. (Report No. 1275.)

A resolution referring the bill (H. R. 5198 and 2864) for the relief of the estate of A. Underwood. (Report No. 1276.)

A bill (H. R. 5468) for the relief of John M. Hamm. (Report No. 1277.)

A resolution referring the bill (H. R. 2013) for the relief of the legal representatives of Richard F. Wassen, deceased, and a joint resolution (H. Res. 111) authorizing John C. Mr. BUTLER. I present a memorial, signed by Mrs. J. B. Bonner, president, and Mrs. A. M. Lamber, vice-president, of Due West, S. C., and a number of other ladies of that place, remonstrating against the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday. The memorial is also signed by the King's Daughters of Pelzer, S. C., of which Miss Lillian Baker is president, and by the King's Daughters of Williamston, S. C., of which Miss Olive McKelvey is president. I move that the memorial be referred to the Select Committee on the Quadro-Centennial.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER presented a petition of the Presbyterian Church of Falling Waters, W. Va., praying for the closing of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the petition of the Block Brothers Tobacco Company, of Wheeling, W. Va., praying for the repeal of the "free-leaf" provision of the revenue law of 1890 relative to the sale of tobacco; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Smith, W. Va., and a petition of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Rowlesburg, W. Va., praying for the closing of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday, and that the sale of intoxicating liquors be prohibited thereat; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. DAWES presented the memorial of Charles A. Butler and other members of the Seventh-Day Adventist Church of Worcester, Mass., remonstrating against the passage of any legislation closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. CULLOM presented petitions of the Methodist Episcopal churches of Effingham, Elvaston, Pawnee, Murphysboro, Irving, Dunlap, Monmouth, Cullom and Kempton, Edwardsville, Preemption, Bureau County, Bradford, and Eureka; of the Presbyterian churches of Greenfield, Elvaston, Heisman, and Jerseyville; of the United Presbyterian churches of Smithville and Morea; of the Baptist churches of Bunker Hill and Rock Island; of the Methodist and Congregational churches of Clifton, Ashburn, and Turner; of the Methodist Church of Milton; of the Grace Lutheran Church of Springfield; of the Congregational Church of Toulon; of the Congregational Sabbath School of Plymouth; of the Presbyterian churches of Knoxville and Clarence; of the South Henderson Church of Henderson County; of the United Presbyterian Church of Olena, and of the Baptist Church of Franklin County, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the closing of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a memorial of the Seventh-Day Adventist Church of Westfield, Ill., remonstrating against the closing of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. PASCO presented a memorial of the faculty of the John B. Stetson University of De Land, Fla., remonstrating against the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of 43 citizens of Ohio, remonstrating against Congress committing the United States Government to a union of religion and the state by the passage of any legislation closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday or in any other way committing the Government to a course of religious legislation; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented petitions of three Presbyterian churches of Ohio; of nine Methodist Episcopal churches of Ohio; of five Baptist churches of Ohio; of three Reformed churches of Ohio, and a petition of the Youngstown District Epworth League, praying that the World's Columbian Exposition be closed on Sunday and that the sale of intoxicating liquors be prohibited thereat; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. SAWYER presented a memorial of 180 citizens of Stevens Point, Wis., remonstrating against the passage of any legislation closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. CAMERON presented petitions of the Evangelical Lutheran Church of Milroy, Pa.; the Reformed Church of Duncannon, Pa.; the First Baptist Church of Allentown, Pa.; the Reformed Church of Turbotville, Pa.; the Emanuel Church of Manor Dale, Pa.; Grace Church of Harmony, Pa.; St. John Church of Cessna, Pa.; the First Presbyterian Church of Mount Carmel, Pa.; the First Presbyterian of Glenfield, Pa.; the Presbyterian Church of Millinburg, Pa.; the Lutheran Church of Rebersburg, Pa.; the Simpson Methodist Episcopal Church of Erie, Pa.; the First Presbyterian Church of Corry, Pa.; the Parnassus Church of Parnassus, Pa.; the Mount Prospect Church of Hickory, Pa.; the Mount Zion Church of Shippenville, Pa.; the Presbyterian Church of Pittsfield, Pa.; the Presbyterian Church of Pigeon Creek, Pa.; the United Presbyterian Church of Espeyville, Pa.; the Presbyterian Church of Plains, Pa.; the Presbyterian Church of Pine Grove, Pa.; the St. John Church of Easton, Pa.; the Methodist Episcopal Church of Lancaster, Pa.; the Presbyterian Church of Bart, Pa.; the St. Paul Church of York, Pa.; the First Baptist Church of Canton, Pa.; the St. John Church of Lancaster, Pa.; the Zion Church of Pottstown, Pa.; the Presbyterian Church of New Park, Pa.; the Reformed Church of St. Clairsville, Pa.; the St. John Church of Williamsport, Pa.; the Reformed Church of Shamokin, Pa.; the Presbyterian Church of Lower Marsh Creek, Pa.; the Presbyterian Church of Berwyn, Pa.; the Union Presbyterian Church of West Fairfield, Pa., and the Trinity Church of Lancaster, Pa., remonstrating against the opening of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE presented the memorial of W. C. Taylor and 32 other citizens of Michigan, remonstrating against any religious legislation by Congress relative to the closing of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented memorials of the Baptist churches of Oxford, Dexter, Cedar Springs, Saline, and Quincy, Mich.; of the Methodist Episcopal churches of Harmonia, Parma, Leslie, Rockland, Vicksburg, Bancroft, and Breckenridge, Mich.; of the Congregational churches of New Baltimore, Imlay City, Bancroft, and Breckenridge, Mich.; of the Presbyterian Church of Breckenridge, Mich., and of the Norwegian Lutheran Church of Ludington, Mich., remonstrating against any appropriation for the World's Columbian Exposition by Congress unless the Exhibition be closed on Sunday, and praying that the sale of intoxicating liquors be prohibited thereat; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. WILSON presented petitions of the Edwards Congregational Church of Davenport, Iowa; of the United Presbyterian Church of De Witt, Iowa; of the Baptist Church of Toledo, Iowa; of the First Baptist Church of Vinton, Iowa; of the Baptist Church of Waverly, Iowa, and a petition of the Congregationalist Church of Mount Pleasant, Iowa, praying that the World's Columbian Exposition be closed on Sunday and that the sale of intoxicating liquors be prohibited thereat; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. MORRILL. I present a memorial of citizens of East Hardwick, Vt., remonstrating against the passage of any bill or resolution to close the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday or in any other way to commit the Government to a course of religious legislation. It is clear that this question is a mixed one. If the World's Fair should be closed on Sunday it would virtually exclude all the workmen in Chicago from any reasonable opportunity to visit it. I move that the memorial be referred to the Select Committee on the Quadro-Centennial.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK presented the petition of John Galloyle and W. R. Cook, as a committee for 175 members of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Falls City, Nebr., and a petition of 397 members of the Women's Missionary Society of the United Presbyterian Church of Omaha, Nebr., praying that the World's Columbian Exposition be closed on Sunday, that the sale of intoxicating liquors be prohibited thereat, and that the art department be managed according to the American standard of purity in art; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the memorial of I. U. Kite and 22 other citizens, of Seward, Nebr., and the memorial of John Dunbar and 80 other citizens of Dunbar, Nebr., remonstrating against Congress committing the United States Government to a union of religion and the state by the passage of any legislation closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday, or in any other way committing the Government to a course of religious legislation; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. HAWLEY presented the petition of William H. Wiley and 13 other citizens of Hartford, Conn., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting any legislation by the States respecting an establishment of religion or making an appropriation of money for any sectarian purpose; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WALTHALL presented a memorial of the Cotton Exchange of Columbus, Miss., remonstrating against the passage of the Hatch bill relative to dealings in futures; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PETTIGREW presented the memorial of S. B. Whitney and 23 other members of the Seventh-Day Adventist Church of Bridgewater, S. Mr. ALLISON presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Osceola, Iowa, and a memorial of sundry members of the Seventh-Day Adventist Church of Gilman, Iowa, remonstrating against the passage of any legislation closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented petitions of the Baptist Church of Toledo, Iowa; of the United Presbyterian Church of De Witt, Iowa; of the Edwards Congregational Church, of Davenport, Iowa; of the Baptist Church of Waverly, Iowa; of the Congregationalist Church of Mount Pleasant, Iowa, and a petition of the First Baptist Church of Vinton, Iowa, praying for the closing of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday and that the sale of intoxicating liquors be prohibited thereat; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the petition of the Addison-Tinsley Tobacco Company, the Major and Mackey Tobacco Company, of Louisiana, Mo., and the petition of William G. Hills, of St. Louis, Mo., in regard to the removal of the tax from leaf tobacco and asking legislation in the interest of the manufacturers. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Finance for consideration as an amendment to some of the tariff bills which have been referred to that committee and which it is to be hoped they will report back to the Senate at a very early day.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL presented petitions of the Akron, Martinville, and New Hampshire Presbyterian churches, of Harrison County, Mo.; of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Plattsburg, Mo.; of the Presbyterian Church of Neosho, Mo.; of the Lafayette Park Presbyterian Church, of St. Louis, Mo.; of the First Presbyterian Church of Rolla, Mo.; of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Centralia, Mo., and a petition of the Desoto Methodist Episcopal Church of Desoto, Mo., praying that the World's Columbian Exposition be closed on Sunday and the sale of intoxicating liquors be prohibited thereat; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented the memorial of William Beddoe and sundry other citizens of Rolla County, Mo., remonstrating against Congress committing the United States Government to a union of religion and the state by the passage of any legislation closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday or in any other way committing the Government to a course of religious legislation; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. GALLINGER presented the memorial of Maria S. Freeto and other citizens of Sullivan County, N. H., remonstrating against Congress committing the United States Government to a union of religion and the state by the passage of any legislation closing the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. MANDERSON presented a petition of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Carleton, Nebr., and a petition of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Falls City, Nebr., praying for the closing of the World's Columbian Exposition on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. QUAY presented petitions of the United Presbyterian Church of Greensburg, Pa.; of the faculty and students of the Western Theological Seminary of Allegheny, Pa.; of the Congregational Church of Mount Pleasant, Pa.; a petition of 17 religious congregations, representing 3,260 citizens of Pennsylvania, and the petition of Rev. M. M. Wilson, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Homestead, Pa., praying that the World's Columbian Exposition be closed on Sunday, and that the sale of intoxicating liquors be prohibited thereat; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented petitions of 27 citizens of Pittsburg, Pa.; of 23 citizens of Philadelphia, Pa.; of 22 citizens of Allegheny, Pa.; of 13 citizens of Wilkesbarre, Pa.; of 23 citizens of Emsworth, Pa.; of 9 citizens of Beaver, Pa.; of 86 citizens of Pittsburg, Pa.; of 65 citizens of Waynesburg, Pa.; of 56 citizens of Springtown, Pa., and a petition of 89 members of the Seventh-Day Adventist Church of Montrose, Pa., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting any legislation by the States respecting an establishment of religion or making an appropriation of money for any sectarian purpose; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented five petitions of Lamar Grange, No. 274, and six petitions of Dawson Grange, No. 419, Patrons of Husbandry, of Pennsylvania, praying for the free delivery of mails in rural districts; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the petition of John S. Walter, late second lieutenant Company H, Thirteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, praying for the passage of legislation for his relief; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of 79 citizens of Hickory, Pa.; the petition of H. P. Aston, representing 200 citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., and the petition of Rev. W. P. Fulton and 98 other citizens of Philadelphia, representing the Ninth Presbyterian Church, praying that an appropriation of $5,000,000 be made by Congress for the World's Columbian Exposition, provided the exhibition be closed on Sunday, and that the sale of intoxicating liquors be prohibited thereat; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of the Society of Our Young People of the United Presbyterian Church of Allegheny, Pa., praying that the World's Columbian Exposition be closed on Sunday; that the sale of intoxicating liquors be prohibited thereat, and that the art department be managed according to the American standard of purity in art; which was referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of 165 citizens of Claysville, Pa., and a petition of the Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh, Pa., praying that the World's Columbian Exposition be closed on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

He also presented a petition of 99 citizens of Osceola, Pa.; a petition of the Evangelical Lutheran Church of Mount Pleasant, Pa., indorsed by 98 members; a petition of the Reformed Church of Mount Pleasant, Pa., indorsed by 175 members, and a petition of 354 citizens of West Newton, Pa., praying that no exposition or exhibition where United States funds are expended shall be opened on Sunday; which were referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Albert Oss, late of Company B, Eleventh Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, praying to be awarded a gold medal for gallant services in the field, submitted a report thereon, and asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that leave be granted to withdraw the petition and papers from the files of the Senate; which was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 894) authorizing the Secretary of War to cause a survey to be made for a ship canal connecting the waters of Lake Erie and the Ohio River, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the Committee on the Library, reported two amendments intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SANDERS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1698) for the relief of Thomas F. Rowland, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 649) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department, to report it with an amendment and to submit a report thereon. This is what is known as the 4th of July claims bill. It is a very short one, but the Senate committee has amended it in an important respect.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1198) for the relief of James Bridger or his legal representatives, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 583) for the relief of Daniel W. Perkins, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to:

- A bill (S. 2750) for the relief of S. E. Gittings, administrator;
- A bill (S. 2668) for the relief of Thomas B. Reed;
- A bill (S. 2836) for the relief of Hannah B. Crosman, executrix;
- A bill (S. 2883) for the relief of Katharine B. Montgomery, administratrix;
- A bill (S. 2908) for the relief of Charles Candy; and
- A bill (S. 2950) for the relief of the legal representatives of Samuel Woods.

Mr. PALMER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 130) for the relief of Maj. William M. Maynadier, a paymaster in the United States Army, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1510) for the relief of Jacob Barr, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3042) to provide for leave of absence to certain members of the Grand Army of the Republic during the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic in the city of Washington, D. C., during the month of September, 1892, and for other purposes, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment; which was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2828) for the relief of L. M. Garrett, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5640) to increase the pension of Cassie A. Davis, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. QUAY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill providing for the purchase of a site for a public building in Allegheny City, Pa., reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY POST AT HELENA, MONT.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask the attention of Senators to the bill that passed the Senate to establish a new military post at Helena, Mont. The other House sent here a bill precisely like the one the Senate passed with the sole exception that it reduced the appropriation from $300,000 to $100,000. I report back from the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (H. R. 5108) to establish a military post at or near the city of Helena, in Lewis and Clarke County, in the State of Montana, and I ask the Senate now to permit the consideration of this House bill. The Committee on Military Affairs has instructed me to ask its passage notwithstanding the reduction.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. SANDERS. I move to amend the bill by striking out "$100,000" and inserting "$200,000."

Mr. HAWLEY. I respect the Senator's desire to get the larger sum, but the Committee on Military Affairs is unanimous in thinking that we had better accept the reduction made by the other House, because next winter will be coming very soon, and next December, if an additional appropriation is needed, even before the expiration of the next fiscal year, it can be made. This sum of $100,000 is quite sufficient to begin with. I will make another suggestion, that if we make an alteration in the bill now nobody knows when we can get the bill through.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment moved by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 7 of section 2, before the word "hundred," strike out the word "one" and insert the word "two;" so as to read: "the sum of $200,000."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President, I wish to say a single word in reference to this amendment. The Committee on Military Affairs, I am advised, are unanimous that for the sake of obtaining this legislation it is wise to accept this reduction. As I am not so particularly concerned about the legislation as I am about acquiring the benefits to be derived from the legislation, it occurs to me that such legislation had better be passed as will insure the establishment of a military post at that place.

It is provided in the bill that the citizens of Montana in that vicinity shall themselves make a contribution to the United States varying in amounts. I presume I might say, from $50 to $100,000, a free gift to the United States, and in consideration of that gift it is proposed to establish there an essential and necessary military post, there not being any partnership in the ownership of it between the people who make the contribution of the land and the Government that makes the contribution of the improvements, the Government taking them all. It occurs to me that that kind of a trade, while entirely creditable to the gentlemen of the Military Committee if they can succeed in making it, does not promise absolute success. It does not seem to me to be fair. Nobody pretends that a military post of any value, such as is needed by the Army, such as is required for its necessities, can be established for the sum of money which is proposed in the House bill.

For my part, I do not think that the Committee on Military Affairs ought to have contented themselves with the proposition that the United States should appropriate $100,000 and the citizens $100,000, and that the Government should take the entire property, that too being a matter of public utility and not of any considerable local consequence. Four or five military posts in that vicinity have been abolished. It is proposed to abolish one other, so that this is simply a change of military posts. It is also proposed, I believe, to reduce the size of one, it having been found utterly unfitted to accommodate so large a body of troops as it originally did accommodate, by reason of the drying up of streams that originally supplied it with water.

I regret very much that the Committee on Military Affairs are of the opinion that $100,000 is at all adequate for this post, and I hope $200,000 is the minimum that will be appropriated.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, there is nothing coercive about this legislation upon the citizens of Helena, Mont. If they do not choose to make this donation of land, that is the end of the matter. It was a proposition made by them, and one about which I know they are very solicitous. It is no secret, open or otherwise, that the location of a post in a Western town or city is of the very greatest advantage to the community. It is not proper or necessary to go into details to show how it is.

The Senator from Montana must be aware of the fact (and if he is not I think I can state to him with absolute certainty) that the bill must pass in this shape to become a law, and if it is not passed in this shape it will not become a law. This $100,000 is the very limit to which the House of Representatives will go; and there are exigencies in the public expenditure at this time which will result in the absolute defeat of the measure if it does not go through the Senate now without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. If this bill is to lead to any protracted discussion I must object to its further consideration and let it be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the Senator will withhold objection for a moment. I do not think it will be discussed any longer.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the discussion can be ended without further debate I shall not object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. SANDERS].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORTS OF SUPERIOR AND ASHLAND, WIS.

Mr. SAWYER. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6788) to establish supports of entry and delivery at Superior, Wis., and at Ashland, Wis., in the Superior collection district of Michigan and Wisconsin, to report it without amendment. I ask immediate action upon the bill. It is a very short bill, and it is recommended by the Treasury Department and reported favorably by the committee.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS.

Mr. QUAY, from the Committee on the Library, presented the annual report of the Librarian of Congress for the calendar year 1891, and submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the annual report of the Librarian of Congress, for the calendar year 1891, be printed, and that 500 extra copies, with covers, be printed for distribution by the Librarian.

LIST OF MERCHANT VESSELS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 75) authorizing the printing of 2,000 copies of the Twenty-third Annual List of Merchant Vessels of the United States, for the year ending June 30, 1891, to report it back adversely, and I move its indefinite postponement.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the same committee to report a concurrent resolution, it being the same subject-matter with the joint resolution just disposed of, and I ask for its present consideration.

The concurrent resolution was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That there be printed for distribution by the Bureau of Navigation of the Treasury Department 2,000 copies of the Twenty-third Annual List of Merchant Vessels of the United States, for the year ending June 30, 1891, as prepared by the Commissioner of Navigation.

CATTLE AND DAIRY FARMING.

Mr. MANDERSON. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably, with amendments, a concurrent resolution for reprinting House Executive Document No. 51, and I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. As proposed to be amended, the concurrent resolution reads:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be reprinted 5,000 copies of House Executive Document No. 51, of the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, on cattle and dairy farming, of which number 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 3,000 copies for the use of the House.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the Committee on Printing.

The amendments were agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

EXPENSES UNDER TREATIES WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. ALLISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8503) making appropriations for expenses that may be incurred under the treaties between the United States and Great Britain, concluded at Washington, February 29 and April 18, 1892, to report it without amendment favorably, and as it is a matter of pressing importance, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be now considered.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish to ask if it will take much time?

Mr. ALLISON. It will take about a minute and a half, I will say to the Senator from Arkansas.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $150,000 to enable the President to fulfill the stipulations contained in the treaties between the United States and Great Britain signed on the 29th day of February and the 18th day of April, 1892, in relation to the tribunal of arbitration at Paris.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 3067) granting the right of way to the Kentucky and Indiana Bridge Company on and across the grounds of the Louisville and Portland Canal, the property of the Government of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. STOCKBRIDGE introduced a bill (S. 3068) to increase the appropriation for the public building at Lansing, Mich.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. PEPPER introduced a bill (S. 3069) granting a pension of $72 a month to Isaiah Queman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 3070) fixing the time and providing for holding general elections in the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. SANDERS introduced a bill (S. 3071) reserving easements for common highways in the arid States and Territories; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 3072) granting a pension to Maria Barton; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3073) for the relief of John S. Walter; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 3074) to donate to the town of Tampa, in Florida, the Fort Brooke military reservation, for the benefit of free schools, and other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 3075) for the relief of Maj. Gen. George S. Greene; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

POWDER BOATS IN NEW YORK HARBOR.

Mr. MCPHERSON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to remove at once all powder boats used for the storage of powder now lying in the harbor of New York; and that hereafter no boats of this description shall be allowed in said harbor, except boats in transitu or those engaged in transferring army and navy supplies of powder.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the resolution may go over until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution will go over.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives nonconcurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6923) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

On motion of Mr. STEWART, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked for by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice-President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. STEWART, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BLACKBURN.

OBE SUTHERLAND.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1379) to provide for a pension for Obe Sutherland, late a teamster in the Quartermaster's Department of the United States volunteer army, which was in the last line of the bill to strike out "$50" and insert "$20."

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate refuse to concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. VEST, and Mr. SHOUP were appointed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no further morning business that order is closed.

Mr. PLATT. There was an agreement for the order of business this morning after the routine business.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania rise to morning business?

Mr. QUAY. No, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. By unanimous consent, at the conclusion of the morning business, the resolution submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] was to be taken up.

Mr. QUAY. I ask the Senator from Arkansas to yield the floor to me for the purpose of having a public-building bill passed.

Mr. PLATT. Let the pending resolution be laid before the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes, let the regular order be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A resolution, by Mr. JONES of Arkansas, relative to the President's message of February 18, 1892, upon the appropriation of March 3, 1891, for payment to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations for their interests in the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Reservations.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to be heard on this resolution, but I have no objection to yielding temporarily for the passage of the bill indicated by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish to say that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] tells me there is a bridge bill that is pressing in its nature, and he has asked me to yield to him also. I will yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania and to the Senator from Missouri, but I hope Senators will not insist upon taking up further time.

ARMY PROMOTIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 328) to establish lineal promotion throughout the several lines of artillery, cavalry, and infantry, and asking for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. COCKRELL, and Mr. MANDERSON were appointed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WASHINGTON, PA.

Mr. QUAY. With the consent of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], I now ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1916.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1916) to provide for the erection of a public building at Washington, Pa.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT DE WITT, MO.

Mr. VEST. With the consent of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 533, House bill 250, for the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River. The parties are waiting for the passage of the bill and want to commence work.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 250) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at De Witt, Carroll County, Mo., and to establish it as a post-road.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 4, line 10, after the word "telegraph," to insert "and telephone;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That any bridge constructed under this act shall be a lawful structure and shall be known as a post-road, and the same is hereby declared to be a post-road, over which no higher charge shall be made for the transmission of mails, troops, and munitions of war of the Government of the United States or for passenger or freight passing over the same than the rate per mile charged for their transportation over the railroad or public highways leading to the said bridge, and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies. The United States shall have also the right of way over said bridge for postal-telegraph purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 17, after the word "adopted," to insert "and paid for;" in the same line, after the word "company," to insert "or its successors and assigns;" and in line 22, before the word "made," to strike out "authorized or;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That the said railway company, before entering upon the construction of said bridge, shall submit to the Secretary of War plans and drawings of said structure, together with a map of the location thereof for 1 mile above and 1 mile below said location, giving the topography of the banks of the river, the shore lines at high and low water, the direction and strength of the current of said river at all stages of the water, showing also the bed of the river and the channel with such other and further information as the Secretary of War may require, which said drawings and other information aforesaid shall be examined by him, and if he shall approve the same he shall so notify the said railway company of such approval, and thereupon said company may proceed to the erection of said bridge. The Secretary of War may make such alterations in such plans as he may deem necessary to the better protection of navigation, and such alterations shall be adopted and paid for by the said railway company or its successors and assigns. The said railway company may at any time make any alterations deemed advisable to be made in said bridge, but must first submit such proposed alterations to the Secretary of War, and his approval shall be first had before they shall be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 9, after the word "said," to strike out "railway" and insert "company or its successors and assigns;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That the said bridge herein authorized to be constructed shall be so kept and managed at all times as to afford proper means and ways for the passage of vessels, barges, or rafts under it both by day and night. There shall be displayed on said bridge from sunset to sunrise such lights and signals as may be directed by the Light-House Board, and such changes may be made from time to time in the structure of said bridge as the Secretary of War may direct, at the expense of said company or its successors and assigns, in order the more effectually to preserve the free navigation of said river, or the said structure shall be altogether removed, if in the judgment of the Secretary of War the public good may require such removal, and without expense or charge to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, line 3, after the word "within" where it first occurs, to strike out "one year" and insert "two years;" in the same line, after the word "within" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "three" and insert "four;" and in line 4, after the word "date," to strike out "thereof" and insert "of the approval of this act;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within four years from the date of the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CHEYENNE AND ARAPAHOE RESERVATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business which was assigned for this hour, being the resolution submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] relative to President's message upon the appropriation of March 3, 1891, for payment to the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations for their interests in the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Reservation.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I regret very much that I am compelled to differ with the majority of the Committee on Indian Affairs in relation to the resolution which has been reported from that committee, advising the Senate that there is no occasion to interfere with the execution of the law appropriating nearly $3,000,000 for the payment of a claim of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians. I believe it is the first time that I have disagreed with that committee during my somewhat extended service upon it, but as my views are very clear and the conclusion which I have reached by a somewhat careful examination of the facts seems to me to be sound, I think that I need not apologize to the Senate if I take a little time to explain the reasons of my disagreement.

As the construction of the act making the appropriation may be important, I ask that the Secretary read that portion of section 15 of the Indian appropriation act of 1891 which relates to this matter.

The Secretary read as follows:

And the sum of $2,901,450 be, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians for all the right, title, interest, and claim which said nations of Indians may have in and to certain lands now occupied by the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians under executive order: said lands lying south of the Canadian River, and now occupied by the said Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians, said lands have been ceded in trust by article 3 of the treaty between the United States and said Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians, which was concluded April 23, 1866, and proclaimed on the 10th day of August of the same year, and whereof there remains, after deducting allotments as provided by said agreement, a residue ascertained by survey to contain 2,393,160 acres; three-fourths of this appropriation to be paid to such person or persons as are or shall be duly authorized by the laws of said Choctaw Nation to receive the same, at such time and in such sums as directed and required by the legislative authority of said Choctaw Nation, and one-fourth of this appropriation to be paid to such person or persons as are or shall be duly authorized by the laws of said Chickasaw Nation to receive the same, at such times and in such sums as directed and required by the legislative authority of said Chickasaw Nation; this appropriation to be immediately available and to become operative upon the execution by the duly appointed delegates of said respective nations specially authorized thereto by law of releases and conveyances to the United States of all the right, title, interest, and claim of said respective nations of Indians in and to said land (not including Griener County, which is now in dispute) in manner and form satisfactory to the President of the United States; and said releases and conveyances, when fully executed and delivered, shall operate to extinguish all claim of every kind and character of said Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians in and to the tract of country to which said releases and conveyances shall apply.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, it seems a misfortune that a question of this sort should ever come before the Senate of the United States. Its place is in the courts, and the place where it should be finally determined is the Supreme Court of the United States. The argument which is made either in favor of or against the allowance of such a claim as this, is an argument which must deal with treaties and titles, and the construction of treaties with reference to titles; and to argue such a question to an inattentive Senate seems almost a travesty.

Before proceeding with the argument I desire to call attention to the lands which are said by the appropriation act to have been "ceded in trust" to the United States. By the treaty of 1830, made between the United States and the Choctaw Indians—the Chickasaws then having no rights whatever in this property—all the lands between what is now the western boundary of the State of Arkansas, lying between the Canadian River and the Red River, and extending as far west as the one hundredth meridian, were ceded to the Choctaw Nation.

As I said, the Chickasaws then were not a part of the Choctaw Nation and had nothing in common with them. By the treaty of 1837 the Chickasaws acquired certain rights with the Choctaws, a right in all their lands. At that time a district was established by the treaty called the Chickasaw district, which took the western portion of these lands which had been ceded to the Choctaws in 1830, extending from a line about midway between the ninety-sixth and ninety-seventh meridians of longitude west to the one hundredth meridian.

In 1855 a treaty was made between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, by which the Chickasaw district, which had been established, extending from a line between the ninety-sixth and ninety-seventh meridians to the one hundredth meridian, was reduced and the western limit of the Chickasaw district was then fixed at the meridian of 98°, and all the lands between the ninety-eighth and one hundredth meridians were leased to the United States for a certain specified purpose, which was to settle Indians upon them.

Things went on in that way until 1866, after the rebellion, when another treaty was made between the Choctaws and Chickasaws on the one hand and the United States on the other, by which the leased lands, as they were called, lying between the ninety-eighth and the one hundredth meridian, were ceded to the United States; that is, the remaining title of the Choctaws and Chickasaws in those lands was ceded to the United States. After that the United States located certain Indians upon these lands.

In 1867, by a treaty, the Kiowas, Comanches, and Apaches were limited to the southern portion of the leased lands. By Executive order in 1869, the Cheyennes and Arapahoes were located north of the Kiowas, Comanches, and Apaches, occupying all the lands north of the Kiowa Reservation and south of the Canadian River between the ninety-eighth and the one hundredth meridians.

Afterwards, in 1872, the Wichitas, by an unratified agreement, were placed on a portion of the land to which the Cheyennes and Arapahoes had been assigned by Executive order. The Cheyennes and Arapahoes were negotiated with last year to relinquish the lands upon which they had been placed by Executive order, and the agreement with them was ratified in the same Indian appropriation bill which contains this appropriation for the Choctaws and Chickasaws. With the understanding that that would be ratified, the Chickasaws and Choctaws came forward and claimed to be paid for these lands which had thus been occupied by the Cheyennes and Arapahoes, and the appropriation proposed to pay them at $1.25 an acre, practically, for all these lands.

Now, Mr. President, let us inquire how this matter comes up before the present session of Congress, the appropriation having been made at the last session. It comes by a message of the President of the United States, who informs Congress that the appropriation having been made and conferring upon him a discretion to approve the releases and conveyances which were required of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, he found, when he came to examine the matter, certain things which he thought the attention of Congress ought to be directed to, and he calls attention to those matters which go directly, first, to the question of whether any appropriation should have been made, and, second, to the question whether this appropriation which was made was a proper appropriation, whether it was of the proper amount, if anything was to be paid to these Indians, and the report of the Indian Committee puts the present Senate in the position, if it adopts it, of saying that the original appropriation was right and proper and just. It is a reaffirmance of the original appropriation and of the grounds upon which it was claimed; and as from the time this matter was first proposed to Congress I have been of the opinion that the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians had no claim either in law or strict equity for any payment whatever, I can not agree to the resolution reported by the committee nor the reasons of the report sustaining that resolution.

When the President came to consider this question upon the report of the Secretary of the Interior, the first thing that he found was that a law had been passed by the Choctaw council contracting out three-fourths of the amount which might be recovered by the Choctaws to certain delegates to be appointed under the law to present the matter to Congress.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. One-fourth.

Mr. PLATT. One-fourth. Did I say three-fourths?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator said "three-fourths."

Mr. PLATT. Then it was a slip of the tongue. I meant one-fourth—and that the amount which was to go to these three delegates was something over $500,000.

Mr. McPHERSON. As compensation?

Mr. PLATT. As compensation. The Choctaw council had passed a law directing one-quarter of the recovery to be paid to these delegates for presenting the matter to Congress, and the appropriation act itself is so drawn that those delegates can collect it if they have the authority of the Choctaw Nation, for the amount is to be paid "at such times and in such sums as directed and required by the legislative authority of the Choctaw Nation."

In passing I may say that the council passed a law authorizing these delegates to draw one-fourth of the amount from the Treasury.

The President found also by an affidavit—and I trust I shall not be criticised by the Senator who makes this report for calling it an affidavit, although the President is somewhat criticised in the report for speaking of it as an affidavit—a statement, at least, of one of the delegates who was appointed to present this matter to Congress, Mr. Robert J. Ward, that he secured the confirmation of himself and other delegates by giving the notes of the delegation to senators enough in the Choctaw council to secure their confirmation, the notes amounting in all to about $82,500, I believe. That matter was laid before the President, the affidavit or statement being dated as early as April 4, 1891.

The President then discovered that the Choctaw Nation had undertaken to divide this amount of three-fourths that was coming to them simply among the full-bloods of the nation, excluding from any participation in it anybody who was less than full blood. His attention was also called to the fact that the freedmen, who had been domiciled among them, and who have all the rights of Choctaw citizens, were, by this act of distribution excluded from any participation in the distribution. If I can find it here, I should like to read it.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator please tell the Senate what he means by the term "freedmen," as applied to these Indian tribes?

Mr. PLATT. The Choctaws had had slaves, and in 1866 slavery was abolished. By the treaty of 1866, which I shall come to after awhile, and as a result of that treaty, the freedmen were received into their nation and they were given lands and made citizens. I suppose slavery may have been abolished by the emancipation, but the Choctaw treaty contained an article to the effect that slavery among them was forever abolished—the freedmen were those who had been slaves to the Choctaws.

I have the affidavit which Mr. Ward made in relation to the method of his appointment. It is signed on the 7th day of January, 1892, his original statement having been signed and acknowledged before the Indian agent in April, immediately after the passage of this act; but it seems that somebody else besides the committee had probably criticised him because he did not swear to it; and so he makes this affidavit:

I, R. J. Ward, having been duly sworn, on my oath depose and say: In 1889 I was nominated by the principal chief as a delegate to secure the values of the leased district. I was very ambitious to be on this delegation, and George Thibault, United States citizen, of Paris, Tex., worked a scheme up on me by which he got certain senators to refuse to confirm me unless I would secure a subcontract for them. I knew I could not do this, and I met the devil with fire and agreed to their blackmailing terms by giving them promises to pay, and signed the names of the delegation without the knowledge or consent of H. C. Harris or J. S. Standley, and they have never confirmed such promises as far as I know, and I have never talked to them about it for obvious reasons. I went to the chief, W. N. Jones, in 1890, when this matter was up, and told him the plain truth. A mean trick was worked up on me, and my ambition yielded to the temptation to defeat them by this trick in return. The Choctaw general council in contracting with the delegation of 1889 the percentage fixed were not influenced in any way except by the consideration of the probable difficulties alone. The promises I made were in reference to my confirmation alone. Standley and Harris are entirely innocent of any knowledge or connection with this matter. I told various people what the facts were, and, among others, Mr. Leo E. Bennett, United States Indian agent. I think he wrote down what I said to him, and I signed it.

R. J. WARD.

This day personally appeared before me Robert J. Ward, to me well known, who having been duly sworn to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, declared the above statement to be the truth and signed the same in my presence.

Given under my hand this 7th day of January, 1892.

I. C. PARKER,

United States District Judge.

I hereby certify that the within is a true and literal copy of the original. In witness whereof I hereunto attach my name and seal.

[SEAL.]

ROBERT L. OWEN,

United States Commissioner.

The President having ascertained these facts, that a quarter of the Choctaw recovery was to go to men of this character, at least one of them—I say nothing as to the other delegates—and one of them admitting that he secured his confirmation in this manner, that an act having been passed excluding all but full-bloods and excluding the negro freedmen who had become citizens from participation in this money, took occasion to examine the grounds on which this appropriation was made, and some sharp criticism, as it seems to me, has been made of the President for doing so.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the Senator will permit me, I hardly think he means to be understood as saying that this act excluded all Indians except full-bloods. It said "Indians by blood," as I remember it.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know that I can turn now to the document which refers to that.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is immaterial. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. PLATT. That is immaterial, as the Senator says; but it certainly does exclude the freedmen, who have been adopted by the Choctaw Nation under the circumstances which I have referred to from any participation in this recovery.

The President, therefore, having these facts before him in reference to the way in which the appropriation was obtained or sought to be obtained, and in reference to the way in which a distribution was to be made, as I remarked, examined the ground upon which the appropriation was made, examined the claims of the Indians, and came to the conclusion that they had no claim, or, if they had a claim, that it had been largely swelled above what justice or equity would fix as its amount. Thereupon he thought it was his duty to call the attention of Congress to it, in which I agree with the President, and I do not think that any criticism upon him for having declined to approve any releases or conveyances submitted to him—and I do not know that any have been finally submitted to him—leaves him open to any criticism whatever. Indeed, I think it was the plain duty of the President if he found that there was anything suggesting fraud in the prosecution of this claim before Congress, suggesting the payment of a large portion of it as an unconscionable fee to attorneys, anything erroneous in the descriptions, or anything inequitable in the claim, to call the attention of Congress to it. It is also the duty of Congress to heed his message when he calls the attention of Congress to it.

If the President under those circumstances, believing, on an examination, that the claim was inequitable or unfounded or too much in amount, or that there was any suggestion of fraud in its prosecution, had failed to call the attention of Congress to it, I apprehend that he would have been open to criticism. There is nothing in this appropriation which compels the President to accept any releases or conveyances, and, as he says in his message, the whole subject was open to him. He says:

But as a duty was devolved upon me by the section quoted, viz. the acceptance and approval of the conveyances provided for, I have felt bound to look into the whole matter, and in view of the facts which I shall presently mention, to postpone any executive action until these facts could be submitted to Congress.

I was glad to hear the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] say that in his judgment the President had done precisely what the President should have done under those circumstances.

In examining this case, the attention of the President of the United States was attracted to the averment in this appropriation act to this effect:

Said lands have been ceded in trust by article 3 of the treaty between the United States and said Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians, which was concluded April 28, 1866, and proclaimed on the 10th day of August of the same year.

That is the basis on which this claim rests.

The President of the United States came to the conclusion, as advised by the Secretary of the Interior also, that these lands were not ceded in trust by the treaty of 1866, but that the conveyance and cession of that treaty was absolute, imposing no trust upon the United States. In other words, the whole ground of the claim is cut out, unless it can be maintained that the United States in 1866 took only a trust estate in those lands. If not, these Indians have no claim against the United States either in law or in strict equity. If, by the treaty of 1866, the Indians ceded to the United States all the interest which they had in those lands and the United States took an absolute title in them, then there is no reason why they should be paid either much or little for the lands.

Therefore, I propose to examine the question upon which the appropriation was founded: and that is, whether by the treaty of 1866 a trust estate only in these lands was conveyed to the United States. To do this it will be necessary to go back to former treaties. I do not propose at present, however, to go back to the treaty of 1830—I shall have something to say about the earlier treaty before I conclude—because the treaty of 1830 established the limits of the Choctaw territory, because all treaties prior to 1830 were by the treaty of 1830 declared to be null and void, and the treaty of 1830 to be the only treaty existing between the Choctaw Nation and the United States; because in the very title of the treaty it was proclaimed to be "a treaty of friendship, of cession, and of limits." That treaty fixed the western boundary of the Choctaw territory and possessions at the one hundredth meridian. So I say that the treaty of 1830 was a full, final settlement of any claim which the Indians might have had to any territory west of the meridian of longitude 100°. The circumstances under which that treaty was negotiated show that it must have been so.

The question of whether the Cherokee Nation or the Choctaw Nation had any rights as against the State governments within the States where their territory lay east of the Mississippi River was then under consideration by the Supreme Court of the United States. It arose in this way: A white man named Worcester, a citizen of Vermont, went into Georgia and into the limits of the Cherokee lands in Georgia. Georgia had passed a law that no man should reside within those limits except by permission of the State of Georgia, claiming that the Cherokee Indians had no right there independent of the State of Georgia. Worcester had been arrested; he had been convicted under the law of Georgia; he had been sentenced to four years' imprisonment. He brought his case to the Supreme Court of the United States, and it was pending there at the time the treaty of 1830 with the Choctaws and Chickasaws was considered. It was believed that this State had the right to impose conditions upon the Indians, and the State of Mississippi had taken the same ground which the State of Georgia had, and the President of the United States had told the Choctaws and Chickasaws that he could not protect them in the State of Mississippi as against that State and the authorities of that State, and that, if they stayed in the State of Mississippi they must submit to become citizens of that State; that if they wanted to preserve their rights as an independent nation they must move westward into a Territory where the power of the United States was supreme and where it did not conflict with the power of a State. So whatever claim there may have been that there was any right of the Choctaws to any land west of the one hundredth meridian was given up by this treaty of 1830.

The Choctaws got more from that treaty than they gave, if they gave up any claim. They got for the first time in the history of the United States a guaranty by the Government of the United States of their independence, of their autonomy, of their right of self-government in this same treaty.

It is interesting to note some of the statements which were made to the Choctaws by the Secretary of War, Mr. Eaton, and by Andrew Jackson, then President of the United States, as to the circumstances under which they were called upon to make this treaty; and I quote from a document which accompanies this treaty of 1830 a portion of the talk to the Cherokees by the Secretary of War. He says:

The experience of the past has abundantly shown that you can not reside peaceably where you are. The laws of Mississippi, subjecting you to a different government than you have been accustomed to, and which will restrict you to the usages and customs and rule to which your white brothers conform, are already extended over you. This your Great Father can not prevent, and repeatedly he has told you so. Are you prepared to submit to this state of things, and to become citizens, for such must be the case? If you are so prepared then it is unnecessary to say more or to speak to you further on the subject. These matters have been discussed already long enough, and it is high time there should be an end to the argument and a decision had, whether you will remain where you are, surrounded by the whites and made subject to their laws, or peaceably remove to the West, there to live on your own soil, under your own ancient usages and customs, and free from those interruptions which now on every side beset you. One or the other you must resolve upon. Further delay is not only unnecessary, but it is attended with hazard to your best interest.

I quote also from the talk of the commissioners to negotiate this treaty, called the treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek, to the Choctaw chiefs, a single sentence with reference to a question which I shall discuss later, and that is, whether the payment which was made in 1855 of $800,000 had any reference to any land west of the one hundredth meridian. This is what the commissioners say:

Brothers, in 1830, by a treaty made with you at Doaks Stand by your present Great Father, an extensive and fine country was given to you for the use of your people. It was a gift to you; for the country you ceded to the United States was fully paid for.

So that whatever may have been intended as to boundaries and limits in 1820, the land ceded to them by that treaty was a gift by the United States to the Indians, and nothing that they have ever paid for, and they were distinctly told at the time of making the treaty of 1820 that that was the case.

In 1830, then, the treaty made the limit of their boundary on the west the one hundredth meridian. This treaty of 1830 made the boundary the source of the Canadian River if in the limits of the United States, or those limits if the source of the river was not in the United States, and the limit of the United States was in fact the one hundredth meridian.

I repeat that all other treaties were declared by article first to be null and void. I read it:

And that this may be considered the treaty existing between the parties, all other treaties heretofore existing and inconsistent with the provisions of this are hereby declared null and void.

I read article 2:

The United States, under a grant specially to be made by the President of the United States, shall cause to be conveyed to the Choctaw Nation a tract of country west of the Mississippi River, in fee-simple to them and their descendants—

I call attention to this language:

to insure to them while they shall exist as a nation and live on it—

"While they shall exist as a nation and live on it," and no longer—beginning near Fort Smith, where the Arkansas boundary crosses the Arkansas River, running thence to the source of the Canadian fork, if in the limits of the United States, or to those limits; thence due south to Red River, and down Red River to the west boundary of the Territory of Arkansas; thence north along that line to the beginning. The boundary of the same to be agreeable to the treaty, made and concluded at Washington City in the year 1825.

That refers to the eastern boundary between Arkansas and this Territory.

The grant to be executed as soon as the present treaty shall be ratified.

How can it be claimed that after the establishment of the boundaries of their tract by this treaty there was left in the Choctaws any interest in lands west of the one hundredth meridian or any right to reimbursement for any land west of the one hundredth meridian is beyond my comprehension to understand. Nothing but the urgent necessities to find some basis on which to base a $10,000,000 claim against the Government of the United States can explain it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Is it not distinctly recited as one of the considerations in the treaty?

Mr. PLATT. What?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The payment of $800,000 for the land.

Mr. PLATT. I have not come to that treaty yet. I will show, when I come to that treaty, that the $800,000 had nothing whatever to do with the relinquishment of the lands west of the one hundredth meridian, and I will show it, I think, so clearly that even the Senator from Arkansas will see that I am right.

I am speaking now of the fact that wherever the western boundary of this Choctaw country may have been by the treaty of 1820 it was with the full understanding of the Indians and for a consideration, which was a guaranty to them of an independent government by the United States, which it was supposed they could not maintain in Mississippi; settled for all time that the western boundary of their country should be the limit of the United States, and that limit was the meridian of 100°. They took a deed making their western boundary the limit of the United States. I have a copy of that deed here. It is dated 1842. So that as late as 1842 John Tyler, President, and Daniel Webster, Secretary of State, in carrying out the provisions of this treaty of 1830, when it was stated that the grant was to be executed as soon as the present treaty was ratified—but it seems to have been delayed for twelve years—they took a deed, and by that deed they must be held again to have acceded to the proposition that their western boundary was the one hundredth meridian. The description here I read. It refers to the treaty and says what the treaty provided. This is the patent:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 28, 1892.

I, Thomas H. Carter, Commissioner of the General Land Office, do hereby certify that the annexed copy of a patent, dated March 23, 1892, in favor of the Choctaw Nation, is a true and literal exemplification from the records of this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and caused the seal of this office to be affixed, at the city of Washington, on the day and year above written.

[SEAL.]

THOMAS H. CARTER,
Commissioner of General Land Office.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Whereas, by the second article of the treaty begun and held at Dancing Rabbit Creek, on the 15th day of September, in the year of our Lord 1830 (as ratified by the Senate of the United States, on the 24th February, 1831), by the commissioners on the part of the United States, and the mingoes, chiefs, captains, and warriors of the Choctaw Nation, on the part of said nation, it is provided that "the United States, under a grant specially to be made by the President of the United States, shall cause to be conveyed to the Choctaw Nation a tract of country west of the Mississippi River, in fee simple, to them and their descendants, to inure to them while they shall exist as a nation and live on it: Beginning near Fort Smith where the Arkansas boundary crosses the Arkansas River, running thence to the source of the Canadian fork, if in the limits of the United States, or to those limits; thence due south to Red River, and down Red River to the west boundary of the Territory of Arkansas; thence north along that line to the beginning. The boundary of the same to be agreeable to the treaty made and concluded at Washington City in the year 1825."

Now know ye, that the United States of America, in consideration of the premises, and in execution of the agreement and stipulations in the aforesaid treaty, have given and granted, and by these presents do give and grant unto the said Choctaw Nation the aforesaid "tract of country west of the Mississippi," to have and to hold the same with all the rights, privileges, immunities, and appurtenances of whatsoever nature thereunto belonging, as intended "to be conveyed" by the aforesaid article, "in fee simple, to them and their descendants, to inure to them, while they shall exist as a nation and live on it," liable to no transfer or alienation, except to the United States or with their consent.

In testimony whereof I, John Tyler, President of the United States of America, have caused these letters to be made patent, and the seal of the General Land Office to be hereunto affixed.

Given under my hand at the city of Washington, the 23d day of March, in the year of Lord 1842, and of the Independence of the United States the sixty-sixth.

[L. S.]

Twelve years after that treaty they accepted this deed, which, in conformance with the treaty, fixed their western boundary at the one hundredth meridian as the limits of the United States.

Things remained in that way until 1855, except that in the mean time the Chickasaws obtained a right in the Choctaw lands. In the consideration of whether this appropriation is just and legal or equitable or not, it must be borne in mind that in 1830 the Chickasaws had no rights whatever, that all negotiations prior to 1837 were made with the Choctaws alone, and that no treaty was made between the United States and the consolidated Choctaws and Chickasaws until 1855.

In 1837, by a treaty which was proclaimed March 24, 1837, between the Choctaws and Chickasaws and assented to by the United States—

It is agreed by the Choctaws that the Chickasaws shall have the privilege of forming a district within the limits of their country, to be held on the same terms that the Choctaws now hold it, except the right of disposing of it (which is held in common with the Choctaws and Chickasaws), to be called the Chickasaw district of the Choctaw Nation, to have an equal representation in their general council, and to be placed on an equal footing in every other respect with any of the other districts of said nation, except a voice in the management of the consideration which is given for these rights and privileges, and the Chickasaw people to be entitled to all the rights and privileges of Choctaws with the exception of participating in the Choctaw annuities, and the consideration to be paid for these rights and privileges, and to be subject to the same laws to which the Choctaws are.

I shall recur to this again, because the language utterly forbids the proposition made by the majority of the committee that the Chickasaws, by this treaty, obtained an interest in this shadowy claim for reimbursement, which is set up for the relinquishment of lands west of the one hundredth meridian by the Choctaws. The language of this shows that the Chickasaws, as a nation, were obtaining an interest in lands only, and the Chickasaw people were obtaining the right to all the privileges and immunities of the Choctaw people. There is not a word in it showing that they supposed that they purchased or obtained any right in the claims which the Choctaw government might have against the United States.

I say in 1837 the Chickasaws became associated with the Choctaws. Nothing more was done in the way of treaties until 1855. Then a new district for the Chickasaws was created, as I showed when I commenced my remarks. The lands lying between the one hundredth meridian on the west and the ninety-eighth meridian on the east were leased to the United States, and the Chickasaws were remitted to a district lying east of the ninety-eighth meridian.

Now, it is said, in order to create a supposed equity in behalf of this claim, that the Government never paid anything for the lands in question. It is necessary to maintain that in order to carry out the idea of a trust estate in the United States. It is necessary to maintain that in order to found any basis whatever upon which this claim can be sustained. So it is attempted to show that the Government never paid anything for these lands.

Now, let us refer to the treaty of 1855 between the United States and the Choctaws and Chickasaws. It is to be found in United States Statutes at Large, the eleventh volume, page 611.

Article 1 reaffirms and reasserts the boundaries of this country as established and defined by the treaty of 1830, except that it refers to the one hundredth meridian, instead of a line drawn due south from the source of the Canadian River, if within the limits of the United States, or the limits of the United States if the source of the river should not be within those limits. I will read that:

Article 1. The following shall constitute and remain the boundaries of the Choctaw and Chickasaw country, viz:

They do not differ from the boundaries in the treaty of 1830—

Beginning at a point on the Arkansas River 100 paces east of old Fort Smith, where the western boundary line of the State of Arkansas crosses the said river, and running thence due south to Red River; thence up Red River to the point where the meridian of 100° west longitude crosses the same; thence north along said meridian to the main Canadian River; thence down said river to its junction with the Arkansas; thence down said river to the place of beginning.

Article 2 provides a new district for the Chickasaws, and provides that the remainder of the country that is east of the Chickasaw district shall constitute the Choctaw district. It again reaffirms the right of self-government in the Choctaws and Chickasaws so far as compatible with the Constitution of the United States—this is article 7—but it confines their jurisdiction to the Chickasaw and Choctaw "districts," removing the districts of the Chickasaws from what are called the "leased lands," to wit, the district west of meridian 98°, and promises to remove all intruders from the Choctaw and Chickasaw "districts," not from the leased lands west of 98°. Then, by article 9, there was this cession to the United States, a relinquishment by the Choctaws, a lease by the Choctaws and Chickasaws. I will read article 9:

The Choctaw Indians do hereby absolutely and forever quitclaim and relinquish to the United States all their right, title, and interest in and to any and all lands west of the one hundredth degree of west longitude, and the Choctaws and Chickasaws do hereby lease to the United States all that portion of their common territory west of the ninety-eighth degree of west longitude, for the permanent settlement of the Wichita and such other tribes or bands of Indians as the Government may desire to locate therein; excluding, however, all the Indians of New Mexico, and also those whose usual ranges at present are north of the Arkansas River, and whose permanent locations are north of the Canadian River, but including those bands whose permanent ranges are south of the Canadian, or between it and the Arkansas, which Indians shall be subject to the exclusive control of the United States, under such rules and regulations not inconsistent with the rights and interests of the Choctaws and Chickasaws as may, from time to time, be prescribed by the President for their government: Provided, however, The territory so leased shall remain open to settlement by Choctaws and Chickasaws as heretofore.

Why was that last clause inserted? Because by the treaty of 1830 they would otherwise have parted absolutely with their lands when they made this lease. By that treaty the lands ceded inured to them only so long as they should live upon the land. They held title to their land under the treaty of 1830 only so long as they should live upon it. When they should voluntarily abandon living upon it the title was to cease, to revert to the United States, and they would no longer have any interest whatever in it. So that clause was put there manifestly for the purpose of retaining the interest in the land which existed after the lease had been made, for the lease was no less than a full and absolute cession of the title of the land. It was perpetual, however. Never in history thereafter could they occupy it if the Government chose to use it for the purpose mentioned in the lease; and if Senators say that it was intended that the Government should use perpetually this Indian Territory for the occupation of the Indians, then they must admit that the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians in 1855 supposed that they perpetually gave up any use or occupation of their lands. The consideration paid by the Government was $800,000, which appears in the next article of the treaty, article 10:

In consideration of the foregoing relinquishment and lease, and as soon as practicable after the ratification of this convention, the United States will pay to the Choctaws the sum of $600,000 and to the Chickasaws the sum of $200,000, in such manner as their general councils shall respectively direct.

It becomes necessary, in order to found this claim upon any basis whatever, for those representing the claim to argue that that $800,000 was not paid as the consideration for this lease. How do they attempt to make that out? It seems to have been overlooked that the Choctaws and Chickasaws together owned these lands so leased—the lands between the ninety-eighth and one hundredth meridians—that it had been theretofore determined, that although the treaty said nothing as to the proportion in which they held the lands as between themselves, they held them, the Choctaws three-fourths and the Chickasaws one-fourth; and the Government, in stipulating to pay this $800,000, divided it according to the proportion in which the Indians held these lands, stipulating to pay $600,000, three-quarters of it, to the Choctaws and $200,000, one-quarter of it, to the Chickasaws. If any evidence were needed beyond the fact that here were 7,713,000 acres of land leased to the Government perpetually, if any other evidence were needed that the consideration which the Government paid was for the lease, the fact that the payment was divided according to the proportion in which these different tribes of Indians owned the lands would be conclusive. It is a matter not alluded to in the report of the committee. It may well be left out from the report of the committee; for the argument which is drawn from the fact that this $800,000 was divided by the Government between the Choctaws and Chickasaws in proportion to their ownership in the leased lands is unanswerable.

I may as well, perhaps, at this point of my argument as at any other, advert to the claim which is made and the grounds upon which the claim is made, that none of this $800,000 was applied to payments for the lease of these lands. As I said, that claim seems to me preposterous, that these Indians, without a consideration moving to them, without a dollar being paid to them, without anything else in the treaty to act or to be regarded as a consideration, should have leased 7,713,000 acres of land to the Government for all time, for nothing—for that is the position which those who favor this claim must maintain, or the claim falls.

But it is said—I am not going back over all this matter of 1820, for it was too thoroughly explained by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to need repetition—it is said that by the treaty of 1820, which, when the treaty of 1830 was negotiated, the Indians were told gave them lands without consideration, the western boundary of the tract was fixed as far west as the source of the Red River. In the treaty of 1820 the western boundary is spoken of as a line drawn south from the source of the Canadian to the Red River, but such a line will not touch the Red River, will not come within 100 miles of it. In the then imperfectly understood geographical condition of the country it was supposed that the source of the Red River was further west than the source of the Canadian River. It turns out now, with fuller geographical knowledge, that the source of the Canadian River is not only west of the present limits of the State of Texas, but is half way across New Mexico. Neither the Government nor the Indians at that time understood where the source of the Canadian River was.

I do not believe, after a careful examination, that there was any intention on the part of the Government by the treaty of 1820 to convey to the Indians any land west of the one hundredth meridian. Why do I say this? Because the treaty of 1830 was adopted by both parties as the western limit of the land which the Government did convey to the Indians; because from 1820 to 1855 there never was a claim made by the Choctaw Indians that they were entitled to reimbursement for lands west of the one hundredth meridian. I think I may state that with emphasis. If for twenty-five years after the treaty of 1830, until the treaty of 1855, there had ever been a claim made by the Choctaw Nation that they were entitled to any lands west of the one hundredth meridian, or that lands had been ceded to them by the United States west of the one hundredth meridian and taken away from them and given to Spain, it would have been brought forward in this case.

The attorneys in this case have ransacked treaties, ransacked history, and ransacked maps; they have found everything bearing upon the case and not bearing upon the case, and yet no man has discovered that in all these twenty-five years the Choctaw Nation ever made a claim for lands west of the one hundredth meridian, or for reimbursement for lands west of the one hundredth meridian. But this report, in order to maintain the claim that this $800,000 was not paid as a consideration for the lease of these lands, sets up the theory that, although the Choctaws in 1830, it being their own matter and the Chickasaws having nothing to do with it, assented to the one hundredth meridian as the western boundary of their territory, yet they still had a right to reimbursement, and that when the Chickasaws came in by agreement with them by the treaty of 1837, they came in also and participated in their right of reimbursement.

As I said before, when I read the treaty of 1837—and I am not going to read it again—the language of that treaty precludes the idea that they had obtained any right in any claim for reimbursement, and the history of Congress and the Journals of Congress and the record of Congressional proceedings show that from 1837 up to 1855 the Choctaws were making all sorts of claims against the United States, presenting memorial after memorial and collecting claims out of the United States for various matters, and the Chickasaws did not participate in them, showing conclusively that they never obtained and never claimed to have obtained any right to participate in any claim which the Choctaws might have against the United States.

However that may be, the Choctaws never made a claim for any reimbursement. Now, they say that because this clause appears in article 9 of the treaty of 1855—

The Choctaw Indians do hereby absolutely and forever quitclaim and relinquish to the United States all their right, title, and interest in and to any and all lands west of the one hundredth degree of west longitude.

Therefore it is to be assumed that this whole $800,000 was paid for that relinquishment. Where were the Chickasaws, and for what were they paid the sum of $200,000? I have shown that they obtained no interest in that claim, if there was one. I have shown that the claim was never made from 1830 to 1855 by the Choctaws, and they were not modest about making claims against the Government during that time either, or collecting them. I have shown that the Chickasaws joined with the Choctaws in a lease of 7,713,000 acres of land, which they say is worth ten million dollars, and I do not know but they say, it was then, parting with it for all time if the Government used it for the purposes specified in the lease, and yet the claim is made that the whole $800,000 was really paid to the Choctaws alone for the relinquishment of some right to reimbursement, because in 1820 there was some lands with an uncertain western boundary given to the Choctaws by the United States, which perhaps lay west of the one hundredth meridian.

Remember that by the treaty of 1837 the Chickasaws acquired a one-fourth right to all the lands of the Choctaws, so that if the Choctaws really had any interest in lands west of 100°, the Chickasaws should have joined in the relinquishment. Mr. President, the supporters of a claim against the United States are driven to hard straits when it is attempted to rest it upon an argument of this kind.

So, by the treaty of 1855, the Indians parted with a portion of the Chickasaw "district," parted with the right of exercising the power of government over the portion of territory between the ninety-eighth and one hundredth meridians, reserved the right of the Choctaws and Chickasaws to settle upon it only in order that their title need not by the terms of said lease absolutely end, because they held it only as long as they continued to live upon it.

In 1866 another treaty was made with them, and it becomes necessary not only to deny that the $300,000, which I have been speaking of, was paid in 1855 for the lease, but also to deny that the sum of $300,000, which was the consideration expressed in the treaty of 1866, was paid for the further cession of all the remaining interest of the Indians in this land.

However, I wish to state generally before I consider the language of that treaty, that, in my judgment, no construction of the treaty can be had which does not point conclusively to the fact that the Indians at that time understood, and that the Government understood that the Indians were thereby parting with all the title to this property which remained in them after the perpetual lease executed in 1855. This is denied in the report, and it is largely upon this treaty of 1866 that the claim is made, which must be maintained, or the reason for this appropriation falls to the ground, that the United States never acquired a complete title to the lands between 98° and 100°, but that the same were only "ceded in trust."

It is admitted in the report, it is admitted in every document which has ever emanated from the Interior Department that the language of the treaty of 1866 conveys an absolute estate to the United States in these lands. It is sought to get away from the force of the absolute cession, so far as language is concerned, by saying there were three other treaties negotiated at the same time, in which the cessions were for the purpose of enabling the Government to settle friendly Indians upon lands to which those treaties related. To meet this contention it is necessary, perhaps, to refer to those treaties. I wish, first, however, to read the language of the treaty of 1866. Mind, this was after the rebellion. Anyone who looks at the proceedings of the treaty council will see that during the twelve days that that council was in session nothing was talked about except the treaty of allegiance to the Government. The terms of the treaty were not discussed in council, except so far as related to the treaty of allegiance and loyalty, and a treaty was first drawn up with these tribes, which was called the treaty of allegiance, and was signed there, but the treaties which related to their lands were signed subsequently.

Article 3 of the treaty of 1866 between the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians and the United States, to be found in volume 14 of the Statutes at Large, page 769, says—remember that the lands to which this alludes had been leased in 1855 perpetually:

The Choctaws and Chickasaws, in consideration of the sum of $300,000, hereby cede to the United States the territory west of the 98° west longitude, known as the leased district.

How do you get away from that language? "The Choctaws and Chickasaws, in consideration of the sum of $300,000, hereby cede to the United States the territory west of the ninety-eighth degree of west longitude." It is a perversion both of language and of fact to say that the $300,000 was not paid for obtaining the remaining title of the Indians in these lands. How is it attempted to break the force of it? Why, as I said before, there were three other treaties negotiated at the same time, they were negotiated by the same commissioners, and they were negotiated upon the same propositions, submitted to the different tribes of Indians, and, being so negotiated, it is claimed that it follows, as a matter of course, that the United States obtained by the cession in each treaty the same sort of estate.

Mr. President, if it were true that the Cherokees, the Seminoles, and the Creeks, and the Choctaws and the Chickasaws, all held their lands, which were the subject of those treaties, by the same title and the United States had no different title, had no title in any of them, then there would be some force in the argument, but, in order to maintain that argument, it must be shown that the existing circumstances were the same with reference to all these tribes.

What was the condition? The Cherokees claimed title to the Outlet, which on the map lies just south of the State of Kansas. The Cherokees, in their treaty of 1866, made no cession to the Government of the Outlet lands. They made a cession of land, a narrow strip in the State of Kansas, which had been part of the Outlet, but which by mistake, had been included in the boundaries of the State of Kansas, and they made a cession of 800,000 acres of neutral lands, as they were called in the State of Kansas; but they made no cession whatever of their Outlet lands to the Government. The Cherokee Indians made an agreement with the Government that it might settle friendly Indians upon the lands west of the ninety-sixth meridian upon consideration that they should be paid for the lands on which such Indians settled. The Government got no title, did not get a trust title even from the Cherokees. That treaty made the Government the agent of the Cherokee Nation to sell its lands in the Outlet to friendly Indians; that is all.

Now, the argument that is made in support of the idea that all these treaties must have conveyed the same title goes to the effect of saying that nothing was conveyed by the other treaties or by the Choctaw and Chickasaw treaty because nothing was conveyed to the Government by the Cherokee treaty as to the Outlet. I repeat that the agreement in that treaty simply made the Government the agent of the Cherokees to sell their lands west of the ninety-sixth meridian to certain Indians, and to fix the price itself, or by appraisement, which should be paid to the Cherokees by such friendly Indians. There was no cession in the Cherokee treaty.

Then there were treaties between the Creeks and the Seminolles with the United States. The Creeks had a strip of land which they held by patent, lying, I believe, next south of the Cinnarun River and between that and the North Fork of the Canadian River. Either that was their domain or it was the domain of the Seminoles—I may get them mixed—which had been conveyed to them by patent, which they had never parted with, on which the Government had not the right to locate an Indian prior to the treaty of 1866. The Creeks made a treaty in which it was stated specifically that the object of the treaty, the purpose of it was to convey to the United States the right to locate friendly Indians upon the Creek lands, and also freedmen, because that is important in another view of this case. I turn to the Creek treaty for the purpose of quoting the language showing what sort of an estate was there conveyed. In the preamble of that treaty of 1866 it is recited:

Whereas in view of said liabilities the United States require of the Creeks a portion of their land whereon to settle other Indians.

That is recited in the preamble. There is no such recital in the preamble of the treaty with the Choctaws and Chickasaws. Article 3 of the Creek treaty says:

In compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon the Creeks hereby cede and convey to the United States, to be sold to and used as homes for such other civilized Indians as the United States may choose to settle thereon, the west half of their entire domain.

Plainly by the language a trust estate only, to sell to other Indians and to settle freedmen upon. Nobody doubts that. It is in the bond. No other construction can be placed upon it.

Now, let us go to the Seminole treaty. The Seminoles had land lying between the North Fork of the Canadian River and the main Canadian River. They held it, I think, by a patented title; at any rate their title was unquestioned. What does the preamble of the Seminole treaty say:

Whereas the United States in view of said treaty of the Seminole Nation with the enemies of the Government of the United States, and the consequent liability of said Seminole Nation, and in view of its urgent necessities for more lands in the Indian Territory, requires a cession by said Seminole Nation of part of its present reservation, and is willing to pay therefor a reasonable price, while at the same time providing new and adequate lands for them:

Now, therefore, etc.—

Article 3 reads:

In compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon, the Seminoles cede and convey to the United States their entire domain, being the tract of land ceded to the Seminole Indians by the Creek Nation under the provisions of article first, treaty of the United States with the Creeks and Seminoles, made and concluded at Washington, D. C., August 7, 1856.

So these three treaties, other than the Choctaw and Chickasaw treaty, the one with the Cherokees in which there was no cession, but in which there is an agreement which made the United States the agent of the Cherokee Indians to sell the lands to other Indians, the treaty with the Creeks, which, on the face of it expressed the estate which was conveyed, that is, an estate for the purpose of settling other Indians and freedmen upon it, the treaty with the Seminoles, where the same language was used and the cession was stated to be in compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians, differ entirely in language and intent from the treaty made with the Choctaws and Chickasaws. The United States had no interest whatever in the lands either of the Cherokees, the Creeks, or the Seminoles. These tribes held them in fee simple; they had never leased them; they had never given the United States any right in or over them, and the only right that the United States obtained by the treaties was to put other Indians and freedmen on the lands described in them.

Now, turn once more to the language of the treaty of 1866 with the Choctaws and Chickasaws. Not a word is said about the desire of the United States to put other Indians on these lands or to put different Indians on these lands: it is not mentioned in the treaty.

ART. 3. The Choctaws and Chickasaws, in consideration of the sum of $300,000, hereby cede to the United States the territory west of 98° west longitude, known as the leased district.

I want some one to explain that language to me. If it was intended that only the same title should be conveyed to the Government by each of these four treaties, I want some one to tell me why the words which showed that as to the other three treaties the Government was only taking a trust estate and obtaining the right to settle friendly Indians upon the lands, were not only carefully excluded from this treaty with the Choctaws and Chickasaws, but it was expressly stated therein that the cession was for the sum of $300,000 to be paid. It can not be explained upon any other theory than that the Government understood and the Indians understood that they were parting with their last vestige of title in these leased lands, that they were surrendering the right to live upon them, and that, even without a cession, their title to these lands would expire when they surrendered the right to live upon them.

I may as well notice right here as anywhere else another ingenious claim of the committee to try to avoid the force of this second payment for these lands, for if the Government paid $1,000,000 for these 7,713,000 acres of leased lands, it paid what was then understood to be full value. I want to dwell on that, because there has been an endeavor to convey the idea that the Government was getting these lands without paying for them. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], in discussing another bill here yesterday, told us that Government lands in Alabama had been offered for sale at public auction at the maximum price of a dollar and a quarter an acre, and then, under the graduated act, at 50 cents an acre, and 25 cents an acre, and 12½ cents an acre. I am glad to be reminded that there was a law of the United States in existence at the time these treaties were made by which the public lands of the United States within the limit of settlement within agricultural districts were sold at public auction at the minimum price of 12½ cents an acre.

Why, Mr. President, there was not a railroad, I venture to say, within at least 500 miles of these lands when these treaties were made, and if the $500,000 and the $300,000 were paid for them, it amounts to more than 12½ cents an acre. I think to about 14 cents an acre for these lands.

In 1863 I went to Omaha. Omaha was 300 miles west of the terminus of a railroad then. I remember that some gentleman drove me out a few miles west of the city of Omaha into that magnificent prairie country and showed me a tract of several thousand acres of land which he said had been bought at public sale by a United States Senator—I think it was Senator Yulee, but I am not quite sure about that—at 15 cents an acre. Yet they tell us that the Government must pay these Indians something more, because 14 cents an acre back in 1855 and 1866, when in the early period there certainly was not a railroad within 500 miles of these lands, was an insufficient price.

I do not wonder that they see the necessity of trying to show that this $800,000 was paid for something else besides the lease of these lands and the $300,000 for something else beside the final cession of the remaining interest in them. What is the argument to show that the $300,000 was not paid for that? There was, it is true, a mixed consideration for the $300,000; it was that, in addition to the cession, the Indians agreed that they would receive some Kansas Indians into their lands east of the ninety-sixth and ninety-eighth meridian. I am uncertain which, and can not now find the article in the treaty. It is immaterial whether it was 96° or 98°. They agreed to receive certain Kansas Indians in their home country, and article 46 of this treaty, which does not seem to have been discovered by the committee when it made its report, stating that this $300,000 was not for the benefit of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, but was for the benefit of the freedmen, says:

Of the moneys stipulated to be paid to the Choctaws and Chickasaws under this treaty for the cession of the leased district, and the admission of the Kansas Indians among them, the sum of $150,000 shall be advanced and paid to the Choctaws, and $50,000 to the Chickasaws.

Will the Senator who made this report tell me, after the reading of this, that the $300,000 was not paid for the cession of these lands in 1866, but that it was a sum which was set apart for the benefit of the freedmen, when the treaty itself says it was for the cession of the land and the admission of the Kansas Indians among them, that is, in their home country?

Mr. CHANDLER. Is that the treaty of 1866?

Mr. PLATT. That is the treaty of 1866, which conveyed the final title which the Indians had to these premises and which is alluded to in the appropriation act, which appropriation act asserts that the lands were only "ceded in trust." As I said in the first instance, that must be maintained or this appropriation falls.

Now, I want to allude for a moment to this claim that the $300,000 was for the benefit of the freedmen and not paid, as the treaty says it was, for the cession and for the agreement of the Indians to receive Kansas Indians into their home country. They never did, by the way, receive the Kansas Indians into their home country; other arrangements were made, and they never became incorporated with the Choctaws or Chickasaws.

In order that the Choctaws and Chickasaws might perform their duty and do the right thing, the just thing, the honorable thing, the fair thing by their slaves who were acknowledged by this treaty to have been liberated, the $200,000 was to be withheld for two years, remaining at interest however for them during that time at 5 per cent. It was withheld as a guaranty that they should do their duty by the freedmen.

Mr. MORGAN. What was that duty?

Mr. PLATT. To receive them into their own country as citizens and to give them all the privileges of citizens, and 40 acres of land.

Mr. MORGAN. To receive them as Indians when they were not.

Mr. PLATT. It was to give them the right of citizenship among the Indians. Of course they could not receive them as Indians when they were not.

Mr. MORGAN. If I understand it it was an effort to dragoon those Indians to receive those negroes into their families and homes on terms of equality with them in blood.

Mr. PLATT. They did do it.

Mr. ALLISON. It expressly excluded the idea of the negroes having any interest in the lands.

Mr. PLATT. Except the 40 acres.

Mr. ALLISON. But I mean any common property.

Mr. PLATT. The argument has been made here (and I may not pursue this thing consecutively) that the Government obtained in 1866 a right to locate these freedmen upon these leased lands. Of course, if the Government got the title to the lands they had such right, but there was no such thing stated in the treaty or in the cession. There was no obligation upon the Government, if they removed these freedmen from the Choctaw and Chickasaw country, to locate them upon these lands. There was no assent given by the Indians that they should be located on these lands.

If the Government were forced by the neglect of the Choctaws and Chickasaws to do the right thing by these freedmen, if they were forced to remove them, the language of the treaty carefully excludes the idea that they must remove them to this leased land. It expressly gives to the Government the right to remove them where they please and in the manner they please.

The third article, relating to what the Choctaws and Chickasaws were to do in order to obtain the $300,000, is as follows:

The Choctaws and Chickasaws, in consideration of the sum of $300,000, hereby cede to the United States the territory west of the ninety-eighth degree west longitude, known as the leased district, provided that the said sum shall be invested and held by the United States, at an interest not less than 5 per cent, in trust for the said nations, until the Legislatures of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations respectively shall have made such laws, rules, and regulations as may be necessary to give all persons of African descent, resident in the said nations at the date of the treaty of Fort Smith, and their descendants, heretofore held in slavery among said nations, all the rights, privileges, and immunities, including the right of suffrage, of citizens of said nations, except in annuities, moneys, and public domain claimed by, or belonging to, said nations, respectively; and also to give to such persons who were resident as aforesaid and their descendants 40 acres each of the land of said nations on the same terms as the Choctaws and Chickasaws, to be selected on the survey of said land after the Choctaws and Chickasaws and Kansas Indians have made their selections as herein provided; and immediately on the enactment of such laws, rules, and regulations the said sum of $300,000 shall be paid to the said Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in the proportion of three-fourths to the former and one-fourth to the latter, less such sum, at the rate of $100 per capita, as shall be sufficient to pay such persons of African descent before referred to as within ninety days after the passage of such laws, rules, and regulations shall elect to remove and actually do remove from the said nations respectively. And should the said laws, rules, and regulations not be made by the Legislatures of the said nations respectively, within two years from the ratification of this treaty, then the said sum of $300,000 shall cease to be held in trust for the said Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and be held for the use and benefit of such of said persons of African descent as the United States shall remove from the said Territory in such manner as the United States shall deem proper; the United States agreeing, within ninety days from the expiration of the said two years, to remove from said nations all such persons of African descent as may be willing to remove; those remaining or returning after having been removed from said nations to have no benefit of said sum of $300,000, or any part thereof, but shall be upon the same footing as other citizens of the United States in the said nations.

It will be noticed that this article provides that if they should not receive the freedmen as citizens, if they should not give them the 40 acres of land within two years, then the $300,000 should "be held for the use and benefit of such of said persons of African descent as the United States shall remove from the said Territory in such manner as the United States shall deem proper; the United States agreeing, within ninety days from the expiration of the said two years, to remove from said nations all such persons of African descent as may be willing to remove."

There is no stipulation whatever that the Government should place them on the leased lands. On the contrary, when you consider the fact that they obtained from the Creeks and the Seminoles the right to locate freedmen upon the lands which they obtained from them it shows that the intention of the Government, and it is well known that the intention of the Government was, if they had to remove them at all, to remove them up to the Oklahoma country and not to these leased lands. Yet in order to make out the claim that here was a trust estate only ceded the committee think it is necessary to maintain that the Government acquired by that cession of 1866 only the right to put the freedmen on these lands if they had to remove them from the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations and to put some tribes of Indians on the lands other than those which it had been stipulated in 1855 might be located thereon.

Mr. President, I remember in riding through a rural town in my State coming across a little building where the village mechanic lived, and where he did everything that a New England village mechanic does—all sorts of mechanical work. The building had a very peculiar sign that I have never forgotten and which comes to my mind now as I see the ingenuity with which it is sought to torture and twist the facts in this case in order to maintain this appropriation. That sign up over the door on that little shop was this: "All sorts of Twisting and Turning done here." I undertake to say that no man cognizant of the facts can take the report of the committee and read it without being conscious that facts are being distorted and twisted for the purpose of maintaining this claim. This $300,000 was paid, I believe, exclusively for the lease. I do not believe at the time when there was a nominal quitclaim and relinquishment by the Choctaws of land west of the one hundredth meridian that it was esteemed by them or the Government to have any value. It had never been alluded to for twenty-five years, and when this $300,000 was paid it was paid for the final conveyance; and it is a desperate case which brings anyone to the necessity of saying that payments made in the ordinary way in consideration of a lease and in consideration of a cession, after all had nothing to do with either.

Great stress has been laid upon one or two other points. It is said, and I have alluded to that argument, that because all these treaties were negotiated at the same time it must follow that they all conveyed the same kind of estate. I have shown that was impossible. That argument fails. But it is said by the committee that these treaties were negotiated upon the basis of certain propositions that were made by the treaty commissioners to the Indians. Let me see if I can find in the report the exact claim.

The report quotes from a letter from the Indian Office in 1890, signed by the Assistant Commissioner, which I shall refer to hereafter, the propositions on which these treaties were negotiated. It does not quote them accurately, which, however, would not be important except in view of the construction which it is attempted to give to one of the propositions. The committee are not to blame for it, because the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who was one of the treaty commissioners, in his annual report stated it, not quoting it exactly. They quote:

Mr. DAWES. On what page of the report?

Mr. PLATT. In the report, on page 12, the committee quote three of the propositions:

Fifth. A part of the Indian country to be set apart to be purchased for the use of such Indians from Kansas and elsewhere as the Government may desire to colonize therein.

Not much stress was laid on this, for by the treaty of 1866 it appears that provision did not relate to the lands ceded by this treaty. That provision, relating to the Indians from Kansas, was met by the Choctaws and Chickasaws agreeing to receive them into their home country, and that is practically what they were required to do.

Sixth—

None of these are quoted accurately—

Sixth. That the policy of the Government to unite all the tribes of this region into one consolidated government should be accepted.

Now, I want to show how that was when it was presented to the Indians:

Sixth. It is the policy of the Government, unless other arrangements be made, that all the said nations and tribes in the Indian Territory be formed into one consolidated government, after the plan proposed by the Senate of the United States in a bill for organizing the Indian Territory.

The committee say that because that was one of the propositions on which these treaties were negotiated therefore you can not get away from the idea that a trust estate only was conveyed by this cession. If they had any reference to lands at all it would be pretty important; but note the difference in the proposition which was actually submitted to the Indians and the proposition which it is said was submitted to the Indians, because in the proposition which was actually submitted to the Indians and which it is attempted here to show had some reference to the title which the Government should get in these lands they would have been told that unless "other arrangements were made" by the Government all the nations and tribes in the Indian Territory were to be formed into one consolidated government, etc.

If this proposition could by any means be held to relate to any land, then the argument would fall, because by the very terms of it the Indians would have been told that "other arrangements" might be made by the Government with reference to the land. But the truth is that the sixth proposition had no reference whatever to lands; and here again I say that the committee are driven to desperate straits when they rely upon the acceptance of this proposition by the Indians as in any way controlling the Government title or the nature of the estate which the Government received by the sale.

What was that proposition? We shall have to go back a little to history. It was well stated perhaps, so that I need not refer to it, by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] the other day. But he did not allude to the fact that just about that time two bills had been introduced into the Senate of the United States, one by Senator Ramsay, of Minnesota, which looked, not to the control of lands, but to the establishment of a political organization. And why were the Indians required to consent to that?

Because as the matter stood they had independent organizations. They had the right of self-government. They depended upon no outside government; they made their own laws; they enforced their own laws; they had their own courts.

What was the proposition of the United States Senate?

That in all this country called the Indian Territory, as shown there, all included in that map [indicating], embracing the five civilized nations, there should be one consolidated Indian government, of which the governor should be appointed by the President, and should be a white man, and Mr. Cooley, the man who negotiated this treaty, departed a little from the Senate bill and included in all these treaties in the plan for the Government that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs should be the governor of the new territory. He wanted to magnify his office a little. That was not in the original plan as the bills were proposed in the Senate. The idea was that these five nations, with their independent governments, should consent that there should be one consolidated Indian government in that Territory, to which they should send delegates, and where the other Indian tribes, sending delegates, should have equal rights with them in the political organization.

Mr. DAWES. If they did not make some other arrangement.

Mr. PLATT. If they did not make some other arrangement. Now, that related not to lands. I want to repeat it. It does not in any way affect and can not be held to affect the tenure of the United States to those lands. It related to a political organization. There was to be another one up in the Sioux Nation somewhere.

Mr. ALLISON. In the Dakotas.

Mr. PLATT. One in the Dakotas and one in the Indian Territory. It was the idea of the Government that we would have two Indian governments. The Government felt then that it was an anomaly that here should be five governments or four governments within the Government of the United States and over which the Government of the United States had no control. It wanted to obviate that, and these Indians having all been in rebellion it proposed, before it took them back, before it gave them any rights, that they should assent to the surrender of some of their independence and some of their rights of self-government and be welded into one consolidated Indian government, over which the United States should have some control and over which the President should appoint a governor.

Will any Senator who concurs in this report tell me what that had to do with the title which the United States took to these lands, and in the face of this explicit language of the treaty? I think I have disposed of that, Mr. President.

Now, there is only one other claim made, so far as I recollect, upon which the argument is founded that it must have been only a trust estate which the Government took in these lands, and that was upon the seventh proposition. What was that?

Seventh. No white person, except officers, agents, and employes of the Government, or of any internal improvement company authorized by the Government, will be permitted to reside in the Territory, unless formally incorporated with some tribe according to the usage of the band.

They say that shows that the Government would not have the right to let white people go on the lands ceded to it. At first blush there is something in the claim, but it disappears when you refer to the manner in which it was incorporated in the treaty; and that is alluded to by the President in his message. The President discovered things which this committee had never thought of when this appropriation was recommended by them and passed. When you come to look at the treaty and that article in the treaty which follows out that proposition you will find that the language is used with care so as to exclude these leased lands from that obligation.

It is somewhat remarkable that in all the treaties negotiated at that time the Choctaw and Chickasaw treaty is the only one in which there is any allusion to this seventh proposition, and it is fair to presume, and the conclusion is inevitable, that it was put in there so that it might be limited not to apply to these lands but only to apply to what might be called the home country of the Choctaws and Chickasaws. I will turn to that article, and it is the only one, as I say, in all these treaties, if I am not mistaken, that refers to this.

By article 43 of the treaty of 1866 the United States included a provision which showed just what the understanding of the parties was with reference to this thing. It is an article which shows just what the understanding of the parties was with reference to this seventh proposition as relating to these lands. It does not happen to be in any of the other treaties. It was thought necessary to put it in to show that it referred only to the home country of the Choctaws and Chickasaws and not to the lands the title to which had been conveyed to the United States at that time.

Article 43.—

And it is worth while to look at this a little carefully—

The United States promise and agree that no white person, except officers, agents, and employes of the Government, and of any internal improvement company, or persons traveling through, or temporarily sojourning in the—

It will be observed that the language of the seventh proposition is used down to this point—in the said nations, or either of them, shall be permitted to go into said territory—

And "territory" with a little t, not a large t, to show that the Indian Territory was not meant, the word "nations" having been referred to showing what "territory" was meant—unless formally incorporated and naturalized by the joint action of the authorities of both nations into one of the said nations of Choctaws and Chickasaws, according to their laws, customs, or usages—

I stop the reading right here to say that it is admitted and relied upon that by the treaty of 1866 the Choctaws and Chickasaws had divested themselves of their right to go on the ceded district at all, and that shows that this article can not refer to the leased district, but refers only to the home lands. The rest of the article shows the same thing—but this article is not to be construed to affect parties heretofore adopted, or to prevent the employment temporarily of white persons who are teachers, mechanics, or skilled in agriculture—

What were they required in that district for? They were only required in the home districts where the Choctaws and Chickasaws had the right to live—or to prevent the legislative authorities of the respective nations from authorizing such works of internal improvement as they may deem essential to the welfare and prosperity of the community, or be taken to interfere with or invalidate any action which has heretofore been had in this connection by either of the said nations.

What becomes of the claim that a trust estate only was conveyed here, because this seventh proposition was understood by the Indians to mean that the United States were not to be allowed to settle any white people within these leased lands, when the article of the treaty especially limits that guaranty that no white people should be permitted to occupy the territory, by its very language, to the home country of the Choctaws and Chickasaws and not to the leased district?

Mr. President, I have adverted to every argument that has been made here to show that there was a trust estate only; first, the monstrous argument that the $1,100,000 which the Government has paid for these lands, more, I venture to say, than it could have obtained for any lands so far remote from a railroad by public sale in the days when it paid it, was not paid for the lands at all, but for something else; second, that four treaties having been negotiated at the same time, two of them conveying a trust estate only and stated to be so in the treaty, it must be understood that the same title was conveyed by each; and, third, that these propositions upon which the treaty was based in some way contain a guaranty of the United States that they would not put white men on the lands leased and ceded. Neither of them are tenable. Neither of them would be or could be argued before the Supreme Court of the United States.

One of the propositions I have referred to was not enough thought of by one of these tribes when presenting its memorial to include. That was the sixth. I desire to turn to the memorial of the Chickasaws, where they do not think that either the fifth or the sixth are of consequence enough to incorporate in their argument. Yet this committee, to prove the statement in the appropriation that these lands were lands which were "ceded in trust" to the Government, have thought necessary to go further than the Chickasaws go and rely upon the fifth and sixth propositions which were made to the Indians.

The Chickasaw memorial, page 5, has a line of asterisks in the quotation taken from Mr. Belt's letter, where the fifth and sixth propositions occur in that letter, and rely only upon the seventh proposition, which they emphasize to show that no white person was to be permitted in this territory. I have shown by the treaty what the understanding between the United States and the Indians was, and that the only guaranty was that white people should not be admitted into the home country of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, and that it had nothing whatever to do with these lands.

I repeat the statement with which I opened this case—that there is neither in law nor strict equity any basis for the claim that one dollar should be paid to these Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians for anything relating to the use of these lands by the Government. I do not believe that the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians themselves, up to the time when we began to pay their neighbors for some lands to which they held altogether a different title, and which everybody concedes was a trust estate, ever supposed that they could obtain anything more from the Government on account of these lands.

The Creeks and Seminoles held their lands prior to the treaties of 1866 by an absolute title under a patent of the United States. They only consented by those treaties that the Government might settle friendly Indians and freedmen upon them; and when in 1889 we wanted to open those lands for settlement we negotiated with them for the further right, for the same right to be conveyed to us by them in 1869 which was conveyed by the Choctaws and Chickasaws by the treaty of 1855; and then when the Choctaws and Chickasaws saw that their neighbors, the Creeks and Seminoles, were getting a million or two dollars each out of the Government they began to try to see if there was not some way in which they could make a claim against the Government on some basis. There is nothing in the history of our dealings with these tribes from 1830 to this date which shows that they ever supposed they had a claim or could make a claim upon the Government after 1866 for anything further than was then paid for their final cession, whatever the Government might do with these lands.

That is where I stand, Mr. President, but I should not be doing justice to this case if I omitted to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that those persons who believe that there is a claim here have, as it seems to me, swelled that claim beyond what law or justice or equity or decency would allow.

I agree, Mr. President, that some things have been said by the Indian Office, which look as if that office had considered that these Indians had reserved some rights in these lands under the treaty of 1866. But I desire to say this about that: That with the exception of the letter of Mr. Belt, Assistant Indian Commissioner, of September 13, 1890, there never has been any separate or independent opinion given with regard to the title which the Government obtained.

The statements which have been made on behalf of the Indian Office have been with reference to the general subject of the title of the Government to lands in the Indian Territory, and whether they were open to settlement, most of them about the time when it began to be claimed in Kansas that the Oklahoma lands were open to settlement. The Indian Office and Interior Department were called upon to make a statement on that subject. And yet I say that, with the exception of the letter of Mr. Belt of September 13, 1890, it was manifest that no attention was ever paid to this question of what title the Government acquired in and to the lands leased and ceded by the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

It is true that the president of the commissioners who negotiated this treaty of 1866, he being Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his report of that year used a sentence which has been from that day to the present referred to in statements from the Indian Office, and which would seem to indicate that the Indian Office supposed that there was some remnant of title left in the Indians. I will read it, because it is claimed as an important admission. It will be found on page 204 of the report of the Secretary of the Interior for 1865-'66. Speaking of the whole transaction he says:

With the Choctaws and Chickasaws a treaty was agreed upon upon the basis of the seven propositions heretofore stated, and in addition to which those tribes agreed to a thorough and friendly union among their own people and forgetfulness of past differences; to the opening of the "leased lands" to the settlement of any tribes whom the Government of the United States may desire to place thereon; and to the cession of one-third of their remaining area for the same purpose; the United States to restore these tribes to their rights forfeited by the rebellion. This treaty, after its approval by the councils of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, is to be signed in this city by three delegates from each nation sent here for that purpose.

The treaty of 1866 had not been signed at the time of this report. Of course if the Government got its full title, it got the right to settle other Indians on these lands, and that is the only explanation which can be given of the language of the president of these treaty commissioners, who in making it was extremely careful to distinguish this treaty in language and effect from all the other treaties which he made on that occasion.

I regret, Mr. President, to take so much of the time of the Senate, but yet there is $6,000,000 behind, and in addition to this, $3,000,000; and, as reaffirmance of the ground upon which this appropriation was made, commits this Government to the future payment of $6,000,000 more. I think it may be well to put these facts on record, so that if the question comes up again it will not be necessary to hunt and search and investigate to find the facts in relation to this matter.

I have spoken of what is claimed to be an admission of the president of the treaty commissioners, because I do not wish to conceal or omit or overlook anything which by any possibility can be claimed to argue against my position. Now, it is also said that the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Schurz, in a document, not considering this treaty specifically, but considering the general question of whether any or all lands in the Indian Territory, not occupied by the five civilized tribes were open to settlement or not, made an expression to the effect that the trust was not extinguished. He says this:

The lands ceded by the Choctaws and Chickasaws were, by article 9 of the treaty of June 22, 1855, leased to the United States * * * for the permanent settlement of the Wichita and such other tribes or bands of Indians as the Government may desire to locate therein.

That is not a correct statement of the purpose for which it was leased, because there were certain Indian tribes that they might not put on it. This statement of Mr. Schurz is that they might put any Indians on it. Then he continues:

The treaty of 1866 substituted a direct purchase for the lease, but did not extinguish or alter the trust.

Mr. Schurz was not a lawyer, or he never would have said that, because when he says that the treaty of 1866 was a direct purchase, but did not extinguish the trust, he has expressed a legal contradiction in terms. Either the one or the other was not true. Either it was an extinguishment of the trust or it was not a direct purchase.

Then the next person relied upon as having entertained an opinion different to the one which I have expressed was Mr. Holcomb, who was a law clerk in the General Land Office, and as a law clerk in the Land Office of the Interior Department happened to be acting as Land Commissioner.

Speaking of this general subject, whether or not the people in Kansas could go down and settle on the vacant lands in Oklahoma, whether those lands were open to settlement, he alludes incidentally to the Choctaws and Chickasaws, and says:

The Choctaw and Chickasaw cessions of April 28, 1866 (14 Stats., 769), was, by the tenth section thereof, made subject to the conditions of the compact of June 22, 1855 (11 Stats., 613), by the ninth article of which it was stipulated that the lands should be appropriated for the permanent settlement of such tribes or bands of Indians as the United States might desire to locate thereon.

Now, Mr. President, let us turn to the tenth article of the treaty of 1866, because in 1855 there was a limitation upon the right of the Government to use the lands expressed in article 9 of the treaty of 1855, viz: the purpose of the Government to locate thereon certain specified tribes of Indians. Article 10 of the treaty of 1866, which they seek to make use of here to show that some understanding continued after the treaty of 1866, notwithstanding the express terms of the treaty, is as follows:

ARTICLE X.

The United States reaffirms all obligations arising out of treaty stipulations or acts of legislation with regard to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations entered into prior to the late rebellion, and in force at that time, not inconsistent herewith.

But it is absolutely inconsistent with the cession of 1866, made without condition and without stipulation, that article 9 of the treaty of 1855 should remain in force as to the lands so ceded.

Mr. Holcomb goes a little further, and he says this with reference to the treaty of 1866:

The lands embraced in the Choctaw and Chickasaw cessions were also included in a definite district established by the stipulations of the treaty of 1855, pursuant to the act of Congress of May 23, 1850, the United States engaging, by the seventh article of said treaty, to remove and keep out from that district all intruders.

Now, by the treaty of 1855 a new district was established for the Chickasaws which did not embrace these leased lands at all, but the lands farther east—they giving up by the treaty of 1855 lands between 98° and 100°, and making their district east of 98°. The seventh article of the treaty of 1855, which the law clerk and Acting Commissioner of the Land Office says obliges the Government to keep white intruders out of these leased lands, in its terms refers to other lands and does not embrace these leased lands.

I refer to this in order to show in what a cursory way this subject has been treated by the Indian Office and the Land Office, whereby the people who claim that there was only a trust estate ceded derive some little comfort.

I want to put into these remarks of mine the entire letter of Mr. Belt, Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, of September 13, 1890, for he is the only person connected with the Indian Office who has ever treated this subject alone.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, September 13, 1890.

SIR: I am in receipt, by your reference for report, of letter of August 21, 1890, from Hon. S. W. PEEL, of the Committee on Indian Affairs, House of Representatives, in which he incloses a memorial of the Choctaw Nation relative to the claim of that nation for compensation for the relinquishment of its rights in certain lands west of the ninety-eighth degree of longitude, in the Indian Territory, which were ceded by the third article of the treaty of 1866 (14 Stats., 769), and a copy of Senate bill 4049, entitled "A bill to fully execute article 3 of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw Nation of Indians, concluded on the 28th day of April, 1866," by which it is proposed to pay in the proportion of three-fourths to the Choctaw Nation and one-fourth to the Chickasaw Nation of Indians, for all the right, title, interest, and claim which said nations of Indians may have in and to certain lands ceded in trust by article 3 of the treaty between the United States and said nations of Indians, except the land within Greer County, so called, the sum of $7,752,088.53.

In reply, I have to say that, although the original title of the Choctaws to this land is not brought in question by Mr. PEEL's letter, yet to fully discuss the present status of the lands for which it is proposed to pay the Choctaw and Chickasaw people, a brief history of the manner in which these nations became possessed of the lands and character of the title by which it was held, as well as the terms of the subsequent cessions thereof, etc., will be necessary to a full understanding of the matter.

By the treaty of October 18, 1820 (7 Stats. 210), with the Choctaws, who were then living in Mississippi and Alabama, the United States, in consideration of the cession by the said Choctaws of their land in those States (Mississippi and Alabama), ceded to the said nation a tract of country west of the Mississippi, "situate between the Arkansas and Red River, and bounded as follows: Beginning on the Arkansas River, where the lower boundary line of the Cherokee strikes the same; thence up the Arkansas to the Canadian Fork, and up the same to its source; thence due south to the Red River; thence down Red River, 3 miles below the mouth of Little River, which empties itself into Red River on the north side; thence a direct line to beginning."

Subsequently, in 1835 (7 Stats., 234), a treaty was negotiated with the Choctaws by which a part of the land on the east, ceded in the treaty above referred to, was retroceded to the United States, it having been ascertained that settlements by citizens of the United States had been made on that portion of the grant.

In 1839 a treaty was made with the Choctaws (7 Stats., 332), by which the Choctaw country was again defined, in terms, etc., as follows:

"ARTICLE II. The United States under a grant specially to be made by the President of the United States, shall cause to be conveyed to the Choctaw Nation a tract of country west of the Mississippi River, in fee simple to them and their descendants, to inure to them while they shall exist as a nation and live on it, beginning near Fort Smith where the Arkansas boundary crosses the Arkansas River, running thence to the source of the Canadian Fork; if in the limits of the United States, or to these limits; thence due south to Red River, and thence down Red River to the west boundary of the Territory of Arkansas; thence north along that line to the beginning. The boundary of the same to be agreeably to the treaty made and concluded at Washington City in the year 1825; the grant to be executed so soon as the present treaty shall be ratified.

By article 3 of the same treaty, the Choctaws ceded to the United States all of the lands owned by them east of the Mississippi River. In accordance with this treaty a patent, dated March 23, 1842, was issued, conveying the title provided for to the Choctaw Nation.

By a convention and agreement between the Choctaws and Chickasaws, January 17, 1837, which was approved by the Senate February 25, and by the President March 24, 1837 (11 Stats. 573), it was agreed that the Chickasaws should have the privilege of forming a district within the limits of the Choctaw country, to be held on the same terms as the Choctaws held it, except the right of disposing of it, which was to be held in common with the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

This district was to be known as the Chickasaw district of the Choctaw Nation, and to be entitled to equal representation in the general council, and to be placed on an equal footing in every other respect with any of the other districts of the Choctaw Nation, except that it should not have a voice in the management of the consideration which was given for the rights and privileges granted to the Chickasaws. The Chickasaws reserved to themselves the sole right and privilege of controlling and managing the residue of their funds, as far as was consistent with the treaty between those people and the United States, and making such regulations and electing such officers for that purpose as they might think proper.

In 1855 the necessity for the readjustment of the relation between the Chickasaws and Choctaws became apparent, and a treaty (11 Stats., 611) was negotiated by which those nations were permitted to establish separate governments for their internal affairs, and the Chickasaw district of the Choctaw Nation came to be known as the Chickasaw Nation. The right of disposing of any of the lands granted to the Choctaws originally by the treaty of 1839, however, remained in common with the Choctaws and Chickasaws. Articles 9 and 10 of that treaty are in words as follows:

"ARTICLE 9. The Choctaw Indians do hereby absolutely and forever quitclaim and relinquish to the United States all their right, title, and interest in and to any and all lands west of the one hundredth degree of west longitude; and the Choctaws and Chickasaws do hereby lease to the United States all that portion of their common territory west of the ninety-eighth degree of west longitude for the permanent settlement of the Wichita and such other tribes or bands of Indians as the Government may desire to locate therein; excluding, however, all the Indians of New Mexico, and also those whose usual ranges at present are north of the Arkansas River, and whose permanent locations are north of the Canadian River, but including those bands whose permanent ranges are south of the Canadian, or between it and the Arkansas; which Indians shall be subject to the exclusive control of the United States, under such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the rights and interests of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, as may from time to time be prescribed by the President for their government: Provided, however, That the territory so leased shall remain open to settlement by Choctaws and Chickasaws as heretofore.

"ART. 10. In consideration of the foregoing relinquishment and lease, and, as soon as practicable after the ratification of this convention, the United States will pay to the Choctaws the sum of $300,000, and to the Chickasaws the sum of $300,000, in such manner as their general councils shall respectively direct."

The district thus leased by the United States from the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, west of the ninety-eighth meridian, comprised (exclusive of the disputed lands known as Greer County) about 6,201,863 acres. It is for these lands that the Choctaws now claim a right to compensation.

By article 3 of the Choctaw and Chickasaw treaty of April 23, 1855 (14 Stats., 799), it is provided that "the Choctaws and Chickasaws, in consideration of the sum of $300,000, hereby cede to the United States the territory west of the ninety-eighth degree of west longitude, known as the leased district, provided that the said sum shall be invested and held by the United States, at an interest not less than 5 per cent, in trust for the said nations, until the Legislatures of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, respectively, shall have made such laws, rules, and regulations as may be necessary to give all persons of African descent, resident in the said nations at the date of the treaty of Fort Smith, and their descendants, heretofore held in slavery among said nations, all the rights, privileges, and immunities, including the right of suffrage of citizens of said nations, except in the annuities, moneys, and public domain claimed by or belonging to said nations, respectively, etc."

In this connection, it may be pertinent to notice the words employed and made use of in the treaties negotiated about the same time with each of the other tribes, so far as cession of portions of their territory was concerned. In the treaty with the Cherokees, of 1866, (14 Stats., 799), the Cherokee Indians agreed (article 16) that "The United States may settle friendly Indians in any part of the Cherokee country west of the ninety-sixth degree, to be taken in a compact form, in quantity not exceeding 160 acres for each member of each of said tribes thus to be settled; the boundary of each of said districts to be distinctly marked, and the land conveyed in fee simple to each of said tribes to be held in common, or by their members in severalty, as the United States may decide. * * * The Cherokee Nation to retain the right of possession and jurisdiction over all of said country west of ninety-sixth degree of longitude until thus sold and occupied, after which their jurisdiction and right of possession to terminate forever as to each of such districts thus sold and occupied."

In the treaty with the Creeks, in 1866 (14 Stats., 735) those Indians agreed (article 3) that "In compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon, the Creeks hereby cede and convey to the United States, to be sold to and used as homes for such other civilized Indians as the United States may choose to settle thereon, the west half of their entire domain, to be divided by a line running north and south; the eastern half of said Creek lands being retained by them shall, except as herein otherwise stipulated, be forever set apart as a home for said Creek Nation; and in consideration of said cession of the west half of their lands, estimated to contain 3,250,560 acres, the United States agree to pay the sum of 30 cents per acre, amounting to $975,168, in the manner hereinafter provided," etc.

In the treaty with the Seminoles, in 1866 (14 Stats., 755), those Indians agreed (article 3) that: "In compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon, the Seminoles cede and convey to the United States their entire domain, being the tract of land ceded to the Seminole Indians by the Creek Nation under the provisions of article 1, treaty of the United States with the Creeks and Seminoles, made and concluded at Washington, D. C., August 7, 1856. In consideration of said grant and cession of their lands, estimated at 2,169,090 acres, the United States agree to pay said Seminole Nation the sum of $253,392, said purchase being at the rate of 15 cents per acre."

It will be seen that in the treaties with the Cherokees, Creeks, and Seminoles, the purposes for which the ceded lands were to be used are specifically set out, while the cession made by the Choctaws and Chickasaws was without reservation or condition expressed, so far as the words of the treaty are concerned, as to the purposes to which the United States intended to devote the country so ceded.

The Choctaw delegation, notwithstanding the absence of expressed conditions in the treaty, assert that "this cession (cession of 1866) was made as a trust for the sole and only purpose of providing homes for friendly Indians at a nominal cost to the Government, who had the responsibility of their care;" that "the tenth and forty-fifth articles of the treaty of 1866 reenacted the former guaranties that this country should not be subject to homestead settlement, nor included within the limits of a State or Territory;" that "it was not only understood by the Choctaws and Chickasaws, but it was so understood and has been continuously since, without known exception, so construed by the officers of the United States."

In support of this latter allegation they refer to several letters from the Secretary of the Interior, covering dates from 1879 to 1893, and to action taken by Presidents Hayes and Arthur.

In order that these expressions of opinion may be properly understood, reference is made to the subject-matter of the correspondence containing them, and the questions under consideration at the time.

In a letter addressed by the Secretary of the Interior (Mr. Schurz) to the Secretary of War, May 1, 1879, answering a request for a reference to the laws and statutes of the United States which declare the Indian Territory under its present boundaries to be Indian country, so as to subject it to the intercourse laws, and make it lawful to expel intruders therefrom by military force if necessary, under section 2147 of the Revised Statutes, the following statements appear after a recital of the laws and treaties on the subject:

"The title acquired by the Government by the treaties of 1866, was secured in pursuance and furtherance of the same purpose of Indian settlement which was the foundation of the original scheme. That purpose was the removal of Indian tribes from the limits of the political State and Territorial organizations and their permanent location upon other lands sufficient for the needs of each tribe. These lands being ample in area for the purpose, it has become a settled policy to locate other tribes thereon as fast as arrangements can be made, and provisions have been constantly made by treaties, agreements, and acts of Congress to effect these objects.

"That purpose is expressly declared in the said treaties. The cessions of the Creeks and Seminoles are stated to have been made 'in compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon.' These words must be held to create a trust equivalent to what would have been imposed had the language been 'for the purpose of locating Indians and freedmen thereon.'

"The lands ceded by the Choctaws and Chickasaws were by article 9 of the treaty of June 23, 1855, leased 'to the United States * * * for the permanent settlement of the Wichita and such other tribes or bands of Indians as the Government may desire to locate therein.'

The treaty of 1856 substituted a direct purchase for the lease, but did not extinguish or alter the trust. In 1869 the Cheyennes and Arapahoes were located by Executive order; the Wichitas being already upon a portion of the same prior to the purchase. The Executive order of August 10, 1869, for the Cheyennes and Arapahoes, also covers all that portion of the Creek and Seminole lands west of the ninety-eighth meridian and south of the Cimarron River.

"It will thus be seen that the 'Indian country' as defined by statute, embraces the whole Indian Territory. No part of it has been brought under the operation of general laws or made subject to settlement as public lands. It is attached as 'Indian country' for the enforcement of the intercourse laws alone, to the western district of Arkansas, by section 533, of the Revised Statutes. It is expressly named as 'Indian country' in the act of March 3, 1875, to establish the boundary between the State of Arkansas and the Indian country, 'which recognizes the proper closing of the surveys of the public lands upon its boundaries as originally marked.'

This question was also discussed and similar views were expressed thereon in a letter of April 25, 1879, addressed by the Secretary of the Interior to this office, on the subject of complaints on behalf of the Cherokees and Creeks of attempted settlement by white persons within portions of the Indian Territory. In that letter the Secretary also said:

"The whole Indian Territory has been regarded as Indian country, subject to no State or Territorial laws, and excepted from judicial process, except under special enactments provided for a limited and restricted jurisdiction. * * * It may be further stated that no part of the said Territory remains free from appropriation, either to a direct trust assumed by treaty or by reservations for tribes thereon under Executive order, except that portion claimed by the State of Texas, and lying between the Red River and the North Fork of the same.

By Executive order of August 10, 1869, the United States settled the Cheyenne and Arapahoe tribes of Indians on a reservation in the Indian Territory, of which about 2,489,160 acres lie within what was formerly the Choctaw and Chickasaw 'leased district,' by an unratified agreement of October 19, 1872, with the Wichita, Caddo, and other bands of Indians, and the treaty of July 4, 1866 (14 Stats., 794), with the Delawares, the said Wichita and affiliated bands were located on a reservation, within the said 'leased district,' containing 743,610 acres; and by the treaty of October 21, 1877 (15 Stats., 581), the Kiowa and Arapahoe Reservation, containing 2,968,840 acres, was established for the use of those Indians and the Apaches. These three reservations comprise all the lands formerly known as the Choctaw and Chickasaw leased district, except that portion which is in dispute between the United States and the State of Texas, known as Greer County.

"These lands are now occupied by the Indians located thereon, as above stated, and therefore have been appropriated by the Government to the purposes for which the Indians themselves understood them to be ceded."

Letters are referred to by the delegates as bearing on this subject as follows:

Hon. S. J. Kirkwood, Secretary of the Interior, February 17, 1883 (should be 1882); Hon. N. C. McFarland, Commissioner of the General Land Office, April 25, 1881; and Hon. C. W. Holcomb, Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office, April 25, 1881.

These letters may all be found in Senate Executive Document No. 111, Forty-seventh Congress, first session. Those of Secretary Kirkwood and Commissioner McFarland are mere letters of transmittal, forwarding, in compliance with a Senate resolution to the Senate a copy of the report of the Acting Commissioner (C. W. Holcomb) of the General Land Office, in reference to the right of occupation by settlers of any portion of the Indian Territory. In that report reference is made to the various treaties and agreements made by Indian tribes affecting the title of lands in the Indian Territory, after which the following statements pertinent to the case now under consideration are found:

"The lands reconveyed to the United States by the foregoing treaties are therefore held subject to the trust named. They can be appropriated only to the uses specified, and to those uses only by the United States, and then only in the manner provided for by law. Miscellaneous immigration even by the intended beneficiaries would be unauthorized and illegal.

"The Choctaw and Chickasaw cession of April 23, 1866 (14 Stats., 769), was by the tenth section thereof made subject to the conditions of the compact of June 22, 1855 (11 Stats., 613), by the ninth article of which it was stipulated that the lands should be appropriated for the permanent settlement of such tribes or bands of Indians as the United States might desire to locate thereon.

"The lands embraced in the Choctaw and Chickasaw cession were also included in a definite district established by the stipulations of the treaty of 1885, pursuant to the act of Congress of May 28, 1890, the United States re-energizing by the seventh article of said treaty to remove and keep out from that district all intruders.

"The title of the United States to lands in the Indian Territory is, as heretofore shown, subject to specific trusts, and it is not within the lawful power of either the legislative or executive departments of the Government to annihilate such trusts, or to avoid the obligations arising thereunder.

"Such trusts are for the benefit of Indian tribes and Indian freedmen. The 'freedmen of the United States' are not comprehended within the policy or intention of the treaty provisions, and said lands have accordingly not been purchased for the use and occupation of the colored people of any of the States."

In a letter of Secretary Teller to the President pro tempore of the Senate, dated February 4, 1884, replying to a resolution on the subject, his views were expressed with general reference to the lands in the Indian Territory, as follows:

"None of the land or general laws of the United States have been extended to any part of the Indian Territory, except as to crimes and punishments and other provisions regulated by the intercourse acts.

"This being the case, no portion of the lands within the Indian Territory is subject to entry under the land laws of the United States, and no portion can be made subject to such entry by the action of the Executive in the present status of said lands.

"Those lands were acquired by treaties with the various Indian nations or tribes in that Territory in 1866, to be held for Indian purposes and to some extent for the settlement of the former slaves of some of said nations or portions thereof.

"Such are the purposes for which said lands are now being used or held according to the common understanding of the objects of treaties by which they were acquired, and from these arise the necessity for or obligation to keep said lands in their present condition of occupancy or otherwise." (Senate Executive Document No. 109, Forty-eighth Congress, first session.)

Reference is made in the memorial to views expressed by Presidents Hayes and Arthur, Hon. H. M. Teller, Secretary of the Interior, and Hon. Hiram Price, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, on the subject of the alleged trust upon which the United States hold these lands. These may all be found in Senate Ex. Docs. Nos. 50-54, Forty-eighth Congress, second session. They are upon the subject of the threatened invasion by "Capt. Payne's Colony" of these unoccupied portions of the Indian Territory acquired from the Creek and Seminole Indians.

A consensus of those views is expressed in the letter of President Arthur of January 27, 1885, transmitting a reply to Senate resolution, wherein he states that "Until the existing status of these lands shall have been changed by agreement with the Indians interested or in some other manner, as may be determined by Congress, the treaties heretofore made with the Indians should be maintained, and the power of the Government to the extent necessary should be exercised to keep off intruders and all unauthorized persons."

The provisions of article 3 of the Choctaw and Chickasaw treaty of 1866, if taken alone and according to their legal meaning and effect, can only be considered as conveying to the United States all the right, title, and interest owned or possessed by the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians to the lands ceded thereby, without condition or reservation.

The courts, however, have laid down certain rules for the construction of Indian treaties, and no reason is found for not applying those rules in the consideration of this case.

In Worcester against the State of Georgia (6 Peters, 515) the United States Supreme Court held that "the language used in treaties with the Indians should never be construed to their prejudice. If words be made use of which are susceptible of more extended meaning than their plain import as connected with the tenor of the treaty they should be construed as used only in the latter sense. * * * How the words of the treaty were understood by these unlettered people rather than their critical meaning should form the rule of construction." And in United States against Kagama (118 U. S., 375) the court said:

"These Indian tribes are the wards of the United States; they are communities dependent on the United States; dependent largely for their daily food, dependent for their political right. * * * From their very weakness and helplessness, so largely due to the course of dealing of the Federal Government with them and the treaties in which it has been promised, there arises a duty of protection, and with it the power. This has always been recognized by the Executive and by courts, and by this court whenever the question has arisen." Then in the case of the Kansas Indians (5 Wallace, 737) the court declared that "rules of interpretation favorable to the Indian tribes are to be adopted in construing our treaties with them."

In determining the extent of the title received by the United States from these Indians by the cession made in the third article of the treaty of 1866, it will be necessary to ascertain definitely what the Indians understood they were at that time parting with. To do this, reference is had to the condition of the Indians and the purposes of the Government, at the time that this treaty was made, with regard to these lands. The records of this office show that in 1865 a commission was appointed to negotiate with the Indians of the then southern superintendency, among them the Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, Seminoles, and Cherokees, for the establishment of peace, all of those nations having to a more or less degree been guilty of a violation of their treaties with the United States prior to the war by their association and affiliation with the forces of the so-called Confederate States, and to make new treaties with these Indians by which they would again come under the protection of the United States.

A council was held between this commission and representatives of the southern Indians at Fort Smith, Ark., in September, 1865, beginning on the 8th and ending on the 21st day of that month. On the 9th of September, 1865, the president of the commission, Hon. D. N. Cooley, who was also at that time Commissioner of Indian Affairs, addressed the council, in which he named the different nations and tribes who had violated their treaties by making treaties with the Government of the so-called Confederate States, as follows:

The Creek Nation, July 10, 1861; Choctaws and Chickasaws, July 12, 1861; Seminoles, August 1, 1861; Shawnees, Delawares, Wichitas, and affiliated tribes, August 12, 1861; the Comanches of the prairie, August 12, 1861; Great Osages, October 2, 1861; the Senecas and Shawnees, October 4, 1861; Quapaws, October 4, 1861; and the Cherokees, October 7, 1861, and declared that the President of the United States was anxious to renew the relations with these Indians which existed prior to the war; that as the representatives of the President of the United States, the commission, for which he spoke, was empowered to enter into new treaties with the proper delegates of the tribes located within the Indian Territory, and others above named, living west and north of Indian Territory; that such treaties must contain substantially the following stipulations, viz:

First. Each tribe must enter into a treaty for permanent peace and amity with themselves, each nation and tribe, and the United States.

Second. Those settled in the Indian Territory must bind themselves, when called upon by the Government, to aid in compelling the Indians of the plains to maintain peaceful relations with each other, with the Indians in the Territory, and with the United States.

Third. The institution of slavery, which has existed among several of the tribes, must be forthwith abolished, and measures taken for the unconditional emancipation of all persons held in bondage, and for their incorporation into the tribes on an equal footing with the original members or suitably provided for.

Fourth. A stipulation in the treaties that slavery or involuntary servitude shall never exist in the tribe or nation, except in punishment of crime.

Fifth. A portion of the lands hitherto owned and occupied by you must be set apart for the friendly tribes now in Kansas and elsewhere, on such terms as may be agreed upon by the parties and approved by the Government, or such as may be fixed by the Government.

Sixth. It is the policy of the Government, unless other arrangements be made, that all the said nations and tribes in the Indian Territory be formed into one consolidated government, to aid in compelling the Indians of the United States in a bill for organizing the Indian Territory.

Seventh. No white person, except officers, agents, and employees of the Government, or of any internal improvement company authorized by the Government, will be permitted to reside in the Territory, unless formally incorporated with some tribe according to the usages of the band.

On September 11, 1865, in a letter addressed to the commissioners of the United States, the Choctaw delegates said:

"In answer, therefore, to your propositions to the several tribes of Indians, we say that the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth articles meet our approval," and submitted in lieu of the seventh proposition a proposition which provided that "No white person, except officers, agents, employees of the Government, or of any internal improvement company authorized by the Government of the United States; also, no person of African descent except our former slaves, or free persons of color who are now or have been residents of the Territory, will be permitted to reside in the Territory unless formally incorporated with some tribe according to the usages of the band."

Later, in the progress of the council, about the 18th of September, the commissioners of the southern factions of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes accepted the propositions suggested by the commissioners, and before the final adjournment of that council, the 21st of September, all of the delegates of the tribes represented signed a treaty of peace between themselves and the United States. (These proceedings will be found in the Annual Report of the Indian Bureau, 1885, page 165, etc.)

It will be observed that in each of the treaties made with each of the other civilized tribes, extracts from which are above given, the purpose for which the land was being ceded to the United States is specifically stated. No such purpose is stated in the treaty made about the same time with the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

It is possible that the commission, when it came to negotiate with the Choctaws and Chickasaws, may have omitted from the treaty with those Indians a similar condition and reservation regarding the purposes for which the lands were to be used, because of the fact that the United States had secured by a prior treaty a lease, which amounted to a permanent lease, of the lands in question for Indian purposes, for which, together with other considerations, it had paid the sum of $800,000. Considering this fact, the commission negotiating the treaty may have considered the payment of the $300,000 additional, as provided for in the treaty of 1866, a sufficient compensation for an absolute cession of all right, title, and interest that the Choctaws and Chickasaws had in and to the said "leased district."

This conclusion, however, can not be fairly reached when the record of the negotiations is fully considered, for we have already seen that these Indians accepted the terms proposed by the commission, upon which the treaties would be negotiated; and these very terms indicate the purpose for which the ceded lands were to be used. And it shows quite clearly that the Indians understood that they were parting with whatever right, title, and interest remained to them in the "leased district" to the United States to be used for the location and settlement of other Indians thereon.

The negotiations made about that time by the United States with Indian tribes show very conclusively that a policy had been carefully mapped out for the acquisition by the United States of the right to locate other Indians upon portions of the lands owned and occupied by the five civilized tribes in the Indian Territory.

I am inclined therefore to the opinion that the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians have good ground for the claim that the United States took the lands ceded by them upon the trust to settle other Indians and freedmen thereon, as the policy upon which the negotiations were made clearly indicated its desire and purpose to do.

Admitting, however, the fact of a trust as the basis of their claim, I do not think that they have any ground upon which to demand payment for further compensation for the release and discharge of said lands from the alleged trust so long as the purposes of said alleged trust are observed and adhered to; that is, so long as the lands are occupied by Indians placed upon them by the United States. The Indians placed upon said lands, as heretofore shown, are still occupying them. No negotiations have been concluded with any of said occupying tribes for relinquishment of their right, title, and interest in and to said lands or any portion of them, nor has the United States appropriated any of said land to any other use, nor authorized the appropriation of any portion of them to any other use. In view of these facts it would seem that the basis of claim of the Choctaws and Chickasaws for further compensation for the lands, if valid, the claim itself is prematurely presented.

It is presumed, however, that the fact that negotiations have been authorized, and under the authority of law have been and are being pursued for cessions by the "Indians owning or claiming lands lying west of the ninety-sixth degree of longitude in the Indian Territory, * * * to the United States of all their title, claim, or interest of every kind or character in and to said lands" (25 Stats., 1005), has prompted the Choctaws and Chickasaws to bring forward this claim.

So far as this office is aware nothing is contained in the instructions given to the commission appointed to make those negotiations which would authorize or warrant it in negotiating with the Choctaws and Chickasaws covering this claim. This may account for its direct presentation to Congress.

The United States ought not to be expected to pay for the land at the present time more than its fair valuation, considering its status. It has located other Indians upon said land—the Kiowas, Comanches, Apaches, Wichitas and affiliated bands, and the Cheyennes and Arapahoes. Negotiations will no doubt be made with these Indians for the relinquishment of their right, title, and interest in and to the lands occupied by them, except so much as may be found necessary to be continued in a state of reservation for allotment or for homes for said Indians. To pay full value of the relinquished land to these occupying Indians, and also to pay full value to the Choctaws and Chickasaws in adjustment of their claim for release of the trust claimed by them to be upon the land, will be doing more than equity demands of the United States in settlement of these claims.

While there are clearly no words of limitation in the treaty of 1866 as to the use to which the ceded lands should be put by the United States, the history of the negotiation preceding and resulting in that treaty, and the subsequent treatment of the subject, quite clearly indicate that the Choctaws and Chickasaws have good grounds for claiming that they understood that the lands were to be used for the location of other Indians and freedmen thereon. If they have, as seems to be the case, an equitable claim, it is for Congress to determine what shall be the measure of allowance to be made for its adjustment in order to clear the lands of the incumbrance.

If anything is to be allowed, the settlement made with the Creeks and the Seminoles in 1869 of similar claims may assist in reaching a conclusion on this case. The amount allowed to the Creek Indians was $2,380,857.10.

To show how this sum was reached, the following extract is made from the message of President Cleveland of February 5, 1889, to the Congress (see Senate Ex. Doc. No. 98, Fiftyeth Congress, second session):

"The unassigned lands must be those which are unsold, because not only is that the fair significance of the term, as used technically in conveyancing, but because the limiting condition in the Creek treaty was that the lands should be sold to, as well as used as homes for, other Indians.

	Acres.
The total quantity of lands in the western half of the Creek Nation, and which were ceded in 1866, is	3,402,428.88
The assigned lands as above defined are in three bodies—
(1) The Seminole country, by the treaty of 1866	300,000.00
(2) The Sae and Fox Reservation, sold and conveyed by article 6 of the treaty of February 18, 1867 (15 Stats., 495), amounting to	479,668.05
(3) The Pawnee Reservation, granted by section 4 of the act of Congress of April 10, 1876 (19 Stats., 29), for which the Government received the price allowed the Creeks, 30 cents per acre	53,005.94
Making a total of assigned or sold lands of	732,673.99

And leaving as the total unassigned lands

"Of this total quantity of unassigned land, which is subject to the negotiations provided for under the law of 1855, there should be a further division made in considering the sum which ought fairly to be paid in discharge of the Creek claim thereto.

"I. In that part of these lands called the Oklahoma country no Indians have been allowed to reside by any action of the Government, nor has any execution been attempted of the limiting conditions of the cession of 1866.

"The quantity of these lands carefully computed from the surveys is 1,392,701.70 acres.

"II. The remainder of these unassigned lands has been appropriated, in some degree, to Indian uses, although still within the control of the Government.

"Thus, by three Executive orders, the following Indian reservations have been created:

	Acres.
(1) By President Grant, August 10, 1869, the reservation of the Cheyennes and Arapahoes, which embraces of this land	619,450.59
(2) By President Arthur, August 15, 1883, the reservation for the Kiowas, containing	228,417.67
(3) By President Arthur, August 15, 1883, the Kickapoo Reservation, embracing	206,465.61
(4) A tract set apart for the Pottawatomies by the treaty of February 27, 1867 (15 Stats., 531), followed by the act of May 23, 1872 (17 Stats., 159), by which individual allotments were authorized upon the tract, though but very few Indians have selected and paid for such allotments according to the provisions of that law. The entire quantity of the Pottawatomie Reservation is	222,716.32

This shows the quantity of lands unassigned but to some extent appropriated to Indian uses by the Government, amounting to 1,277,050.19

For the lands which are not only unassigned but are unoccupied, and which have been in no way appropriated, it appears clearly just and right that a price of at least $1.25 should be allowed to the Creeks. They held more than the ordinary Indian title, for they had a patent in fee from the Government. The Osages of Kansas were allowed $1.25 per acre upon giving up their reservation, and this land of the Creeks is reported, by those familiar with it, to be equal to any land in the country. Without regard to the present enhanced value of this land, and if reference be only had to the conditions when the cession was made, no less price ought to be paid for it than the ordinary Government price. Therefore, in this provisional agreement which has been made with the Creeks, the price of $1.25 has been settled upon for such land, with the deduction of the 30 cents per acre which has already been paid by the Government therefor.

"As to the remainder of the unassigned lands, in view of the fact that some use has been made of them of the general character indicated by the treaty of 1866, and because some portion of them should be allotted to Indians under the general allotment act, and to cover the expenses of surveys and adjustments, a diminishment of 20 cents per acre has been acceded to. There is no difference in the character of the lands.

"Thus computing the unassigned and entirely unappropriated land, being the Oklahoma country, containing 1,392,701.70 acres, at 95 cents per acre, and the remainder which has been appropriated to the extent above stated, being 1,277,050.19 acres, at 75 cents per acre, the total price stipulated in the agreement has been reached—$2,380,857.10."

In the case of the Seminoles, the Executive did not feel warranted to enter into any agreement for further compensation to them for the lands ceded by their treaty of 1866 because of absence of words in the treaty showing a legal obligation on the part of the Government to make such further compensation to them for said land. Their claim, however, was submitted for the consideration of the Congress by President Cleveland, on February 19, 1889, (See Senate Ex. Doc. 122, Fiftyeth Congress, second session.)

The letter of Secretary Vilas, set out in that document, after calling attention to the difference between the wording of the Creek treaty and that of the Seminole treaty, which can clearly be seen by examination of the quotation already made in this letter (p. 7), proceeds as follows:

"The Seminole treaty omitted, therefore, the words such as those underscored (italics) in the above extract from the Creek treaty, by which a condition subsequent, or a limitation to a use, was provided. A new conveyance or cession by the Seminole Nation would add nothing in law to the title which the United States already possesses. There is nothing, as it seems to me, in this condition of things which authorizes this Department, without legislation distinctly providing for it, to make any further agreement for additional compensation, even conditional.

"It is claimed, however, and perhaps with force, that the cession by the Seminoles was in fact made upon the same understanding, in support of which they refer to the words of recital above quoted, and aver in further proof that they have always so understood it, and that that understanding has been in some degree recognized by the act of 1885, which directed negotiations to be opened with them as well as with the Creeks and Cherokees, and otherwise. In view of this they ask that the whole matter be submitted to Congress with such recommendation as may be deemed proper, and express their willingness to abide by the decision and action of that body.

"There appears to be reason to suppose that the treaty was made with the expectation that the lands would be used as homes for other Indians and freedmen, and that the Seminoles have claimed that a failure to so use them gave them some right; but in the clear absence of any stipulation for that purpose I am unable to recognize any demand upon the Government or to fix upon any sum which might in generous consideration be granted them if any such action should be esteemed desirable or proper by the Congress."

The Congress, after careful consideration of the claim, made an appropriation of $1,912,942.02 for the land, ascertained to contain 2,037,414.62 acres. (See sec. 12 of act approved March 2, 1890, 25 Stats., 1004.)

In ascertaining the sums of these payments, it appears that the land which had not been used to settle other Indians upon was rated at $1.25 per acre, while those portions of the cession made by those two nations upon which other Indians had been located (not including the portions sold to other Indians) were rated at $1.05 per acre. This is clearly shown by the quotation made from the President's message in relation to the Creek agreement.

Deductions were made from the sums reached by this computation of the amounts previously paid by the United States to these respective nations under the treaties of 1866, viz, 30 cents per acre to the Creeks and 15 cents per acre to the Seminoles.

Other Indians have been put in occupation of all of the lands comprised within the "leased district" ceded in 1866 by the Choctaws and Chickasaws (not including the disputed tract commonly known as Greer County), as follows:

	Acres.
The existing reservation occupied by the Cheyennes and Arapahoes and Apaches, under executive order of August 10, 1869, comprise within its limits of said "leased district"	2,489,160
The tract of land occupied by the Kiowas and Comanches, etc., under a treaty with them of October 21, 1867 (15 Stats., 581), is wholly within the said "leased district," and comprises	2,908,823
The tract occupied by the Delawares and Wichitas, Caddos, and affiliated bands under treaty of July 4, 1866 (14 Stats., 794), as to Delawares, and an unratified treaty of October 19, 1872, as to Wichitas, etc. (see I. O. Annual Report, 1872, p. 101), comprises a total area within the said "leased district" of	743,610

Total

Applying, therefore, to the whole quantity of that tract so occupied by other Indians the rate allowed to the Creeks and Seminoles for land similarly conditioned, the total sum will be for 6,201,633 acres, at $1.05 per acre, $6,511,714.65.

From this sum should be deducted whatever portion of the $800,000 paid under the treaty of 1855 may be determined to have been the consideration for the lease of said land for the permanent purposes then made to the United States. There should also be deducted the $300,000 allowed by the treaty of 1866 for the cession of said "leased district" so far as the sum has been paid to or disbursed for the interest of the Indians or their freedmen.

The condition of the $300,000 fund is shown by the following extract from the annual report of this office for 1887, pages 62, 63:

"The account for both nations was stated as follows: From the $300,000 should be deducted not only the $300,000 appropriated and paid over immediately upon the proclamation of the treaty, but also the two years' interest on that $300,000, which for some unknown reason was also appropriated.

to be paid the Choctaws and Chickasaws in case they adopted their freedmen. Of this their three-fourths share, amounting to $52,125, was appropriated and placed to the credit of the Choctaws.

"Inasmuch as the Chickasaws seem to have definitely decided not to adopt their freedmen, there remains of the $300,000 $17,375, which should be appropriated to assist those freedmen in removing from the Chickasaw country, and there should be recovered from the Chickasaws for the same purpose the $55,125 which has been paid them, and to which they have no shadow of claim. This, with a sum of $2,500, which has already been recovered from the Chickasaws and expended for the education of their freedmen, under the provisions of the act of May 17, 1882, quoted above, makes up the Chickasaw one-fourth of the $300,000 named in the treaty."

In any adjustment that may be made of this claim the interests of the Chickasaw freedmen should be guarded and protected.

With return of the papers referred by the Department for report, I also inclose herewith printed briefs and arguments prepared on behalf of both the Choctaws and Chickasaws in the matter of this claim. By each it is argued that no deduction should be made from the claim of any portion of the $300,000 consideration for the cession made by the treaty of 1866. It is further argued on behalf of the Chickasaws that no deduction should be made on account of the $800,000 paid as consideration for the cession and lease made by the treaty of 1855.

Notwithstanding that consideration was specifically stated to be in part for the lease of the district comprising the lands now under consideration, I do not think that these claims for exemption from deduction on those accounts are well founded. What deduction shall be made on those accounts is a matter for Congress to determine upon the facts in the case as herein presented.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. V. BELT, Acting Commissioner.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Against Mr. R. V. Belt I put the present Secretary of the Interior, who advises the President that these lands were not ceded in trust; and I put against him the opinion of the President of the United States, a better lawyer than Mr. R. V. Belt, Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that these lands were not ceded in trust, and the President of the United States never delivers a legal opinion until he has examined the case and is ready to stand by it. Mr. Belt, taking up what had gone before, and seeing these loose statements which have been thrown out when other subjects were being considered and which I have shown must have been made without careful examination, speaks with a good deal of doubt upon the question whether these Indians have any claim against the Government, but he winds up his argument by saying:

I am inclined, therefore, to the opinion that the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians have good grounds for the claim that the United States took the lands ceded by them upon the trust to settle other Indians and freedmen thereon, as the policy upon which the negotiations were made clearly indicated its desire and purpose to do.

Then he goes on to say further:

While there are clearly no words of limitation in the treaty of 1866 as to the use to which the ceded lands should be put by the United States, the history of the negotiations preceding and resulting in that treaty and the subsequent treatment of the subject quite clearly indicate that the Choctaws and Chickasaws have good ground for claiming that they understood that the lands were to be used for the location of other Indians and freedmen thereon.

I deny that conclusion, Mr. President. I have shown that that conclusion can not be correct. Then he goes on:

If they have, as seems to be the case, an equitable claim, it is for Congress to determine what shall be the measure of allowance to be made for its adjustment in order to clear the lands of the incumbrance.

There is an admission there that there is no legal claim, certainly. When he says: "If, as seems to be the case, they have an equitable claim," if he had been a lawyer he would have understood that he was saying that they had no legal title whatever in these lands, and that the United States had the full and complete interest.

This leads me, Mr. President, to consider whether the amount appropriated is just, right, and fair upon the theory that something ought to be paid to these Indians. But before I come to that, I want to call attention to the fact that in these laws which have been passed by the Choctaw Nation—and there are twelve or fifteen of them that have been passed with reference to the procurement of this appropriation and the distribution of it—the Choctaw people have taken occasion to repeat over and over again a statement which I have been unable to find any justification for in the record. For instance, here is an act on page 31 of the President's message in which it is recited that this treaty of 1866 was negotiated upon certain propositions, which I have commented upon, citing the fifth and seventh and leaving out the sixth, upon which so much stress is placed by the committee, from which act I make the following quotation:

And whereas on the further representation of the said board of the United States Commissioners that the lands west of the ninety-eighth degree of west longitude, on which the Choctaws and Chickasaws had still the right to settle, would all be needed for the use of friendly Indians and colonization of the negro freedmen in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, unless otherwise adopted by the Choctaws and Chickasaws, the Choctaws and Chickasaws did, by the third article of the treaty of 1866, cede the land west of the ninety-eighth degree of west longitude to the United States in trust for the purposes aforesaid, and under the conditions of the existing laws and treaties of the United States hereinbefore mentioned.

Mr. President, I have read every word of the report of the council proceedings by which those treaties were negotiated, and there is not one word in the report of those council proceedings which will justify or excuse this statement in those Indian acts.

But, Mr. President, upon the ground that something ought in good conscience or generosity to be paid to these Indians, how much? This matter first came before Congress by a report in the House of Representatives in the last Congress. That report proceeded upon the basis of paying $1.05 an acre. This appropriation proceeds upon the basis of paying $1.25 an acre. That report, from the price of $1.05 per acre to be paid for all these lands—for the bill included all the lands except Greer County—deducted the $300,000, and said it ought to be deducted, and, if I am not mistaken, the chairman of the House Committee on Indian Affairs is now a member of this body, insisting that the $300,000 shall not be deducted.

Here is the report of his committee, made by Mr. PEEL, and assented to, as I suppose, by every member of that House committee, in which it is said that $300,000 ought to be deducted. The difference between the whole amount at $1.05 an acre, and at $1.25 an acre, as applying to that portion of the lands in question, is, if my figures are correct, $520,000. How can the Senator, how can the Senate, after this matter has been settled by a committee of the House upon a basis of $1.05 an acre, and the attention of the Senate is called to it by the President—how can the Senate sanction this extra $520,000 which has crept into this appropriation upon the basis of $1.25 an acre? And if they rely upon Mr. Belt, that is all that he says ought to be paid for it. He says, too, that $300,000 ought to be deducted as well as the $300,000 from the price of $1.05 an acre, and I have, I think, conclusively shown that both sums should be deducted.

There is one other thing to which I desire to allude. It is a small matter of $50,000 only, Mr. President, not very much. But upon the very basis and groundwork of that appropriation these Indians are not entitled to it. Very likely this Senate would be quite willing to vote it as an addition to the 25 per cent which the attorneys and delegates, one of whom admits that he bribed the senators of the Choctaw council in order to get his confirmations, are going to receive up on the payment of this claim. It is only $50,000. It is a little matter. But upon the plain language of this appropriation it was $50,000 too much. And yet the committee says there is no reason for action, sees no reason for the interference of the Senate.

Let the $50,000 go. That is not worth while to talk about. I do not know that there is any use of considering a small matter of this sort; I do not know that we ought to dwell upon it. But the basis on which this claim is made up is stated here in this way:

Said lands have been ceded in trust by article 3 of the treaty between the United States and said Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, which was concluded April 28, 1866, and proclaimed on the 19th day of August of the same year, and whereof there remains, after deducting allotments as provided by said agreement, a residue ascertained by survey to contain 2,333,160 acres.

Mr. Standley says he told Senator JONES, who prepared the amendment, that there were about six hundred Indians who would be entitled to allotments and who would take them.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. He gave me a letter from the agent, who stated in that letter that he estimated the number of Indians at six hundred, and he thought that was the number.

Mr. PLATT. Perhaps I was not exactly accurate in saying he told you. The Senator from Arkansas is quite correct. Mr. Standley says:

I furnished that letter to Senator JONES of Arkansas, and upon their information he prepared the amendment to the Indian appropriation bill approved March 3, 1891, appropriating $2,991,450 for the Choctaws and Chickasaws, which amount was arrived at in this way: The whole number of acres of said lands are 2,489,160. Estimating 160 acres for each one of the resident Indians or allottees, it made 96,000 acres to be reserved for allotment to the resident Indians. Deducting, then, 96,000 acres from 2,489,160, the whole number of acres, there will be found a residue of 2,393,160 acres, calculating which at $1.25 per acre the amount of the said appropriation of $2,991,450 will be obtained.

Mr. President, there were eight hundred and fifty Indians entitled to those allotments and who have obtained them, and that calls for just $50,000 less than this appropriation on the basis on which it is stated in act of appropriation and on which the delegate says it was made up. I repeat, I do not suppose this little item of $50,000 will be considered of any consequence. I suppose the Senate will follow the committee and say that although this is a plain gift on top of the $2,900,000 to these Indians, it is not worth while for the Senate to spend any time to stop to consider it.

I notice, Mr. President, that the Senate very often spends all day in considering a question whether some claim of $5,000 or $10,000 ought to be paid, but when it comes to considering one of these Indian claims which has back of it the badges and evidences of fraud in its prosecution, such as this claim has, I do not suppose a little matter of $50,000, which they clearly are not entitled to, will stand in the way of reaffirming this appropriation.

I desire, Mr. President, to put in the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, which I will not stop to read, showing that there are eight hundred and fifty allotments instead of six hundred, and this would make a difference of $50,000.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, April 30, 1892.

SIR: At your request I have to report in connection with the matter presented to the Senate by the message of the President and now under discussion, as to the appropriation to Chickasaws and Choctaws dated June 30, 1891, that the allotments to the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians south of the Canadian River have been all made and are two hundred and fifty in excess of what was estimated when the amount appropriated was fixed. These amount to 40,000 acres, which, at $1.25 per acre, amounts to $50,000.

It appears that the calculation as to the amount of land to be paid for out of this appropriation was based upon an estimate that there were 600 Indians to receive allotments south of the river named. This was, at the time, a conjecture. It has turned out that there are 850 Indians who received allotments there. This renders it definite and certain that the appropriation should have been, on the theory on which it was granted, at least $50,000 less than it is.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. NOBLE, Secretary.

Hon. O. H. PLATT, United States Senate.

There is one other little matter in regard to which I suppose the Senate will not hesitate at all to follow the report of this committee, and say that for the reasons in this report there is no occasion to interfere with the action of the Executive on this appropriation. I do not suppose the fact that these attorneys, appointed in the way they were, will, when the Choctaws receive their share of this appropriation, put $560,000 in their pockets, and, if Mr. Ward lives up to his contract, pay $82,000 of that to the senators whom he bribed to vote for him—I do not suppose that will make any difference with the action of the Senate. But I turn to the statutes of last year and I find that it was provided when enacting the pension legislation of last session that if any attorney charges to a poor pensioner who has no opportunity to be heard in this Congress, more than the paltry sum of $2 for procuring the passage of a special act increasing his pension, he is to be punished by $500 fine and two years' imprisonment. There have been occasions when this Senate was willing to condemn such contracts with attorneys.

Now, Mr. President, taking the basis upon which the House committee proposed to settle this claim upon which Mr. Belt, the Assistant Commissioner, thought it fair to be settled, and there is $520,000 to be deducted on account of the price per acre, besides $50,000 more to be deducted, which together would make $570,000. Mr. Belt says also that $800,000 ought to be deducted. It does not all apply to these lands; about one-third of it does; it was paid for the lease of the whole; that would be about $266,000 to be deducted on account of the land in question. The committee of the House said that the $300,000 which was paid in 1866 ought to be deducted. It was not deducted by this appropriation of last year.

Say that one-third only of the amount paid the Choctaws, about $200,000 out of the $300,000, should be deducted on account of the lands in question, which are practically one-third of the leased lands so called. That would be $66,000. Add this to the $266,000 to be deducted on account of the payment of the $800,000, and there is at least $300,000 in addition to the $520,000 for difference in price, and the $50,000 for land, which confessedly should not be paid for, which ought to be deducted from the appropriation of $2,991,450. If we are to pay these Indians who, in my judgment, have not the shadow of a claim to anything, then, on the basis, and the only basis which up to the date of that amendment to an appropriation bill brought in in the last closing hours of a busy session, and pushed through without opportunity for careful investigation, the most that anybody (the committee of the House, the Indian Bureau or anybody else) ever supposed they were entitled to, it would be nearly $900,000 less than the appropriation which was actually made.

Mr. President, it is possible that I have omitted something, as I have spoken without notes, and if so I shall desire to insert it in my printed remarks in the RECORD.

It has been said that the Indians were justified in contracting one-fourth of this recovery to the delegates appointed because they had had great difficulty in getting their claims through Congress heretofore, and for the further reason that the Cherokee commission, which negotiated with the Cheyennes and Arapahoes and also with the Cherokees and with some other tribes to get the Government a full title to other lands, received secret instructions from the Secretary of the Interior not to treat with these Indians, and that therefore they had a right to assume that there was a hostility to their claim and that they had got to push it in Congress with a good deal of vigor, that it was a critical time and demanded prompt and vigorous action.

But, Mr. President, the Secretary of the Interior has sent me and desired me to present in this connection this telegram received from Judge Sayre, a member of the commission, by which it appears that the commission did hear the Choctaws and Chickasaws with reference to this claim. I will read it:

PONCA, IND. T., April 25, 1892.

TO SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, D. C.:

In December, 1889, Messrs. Owen and Stanley, representing the Choctaws, and it may be the Chickasaws, met the Cherokee Commission at Tahlequah to inquire about possible negotiations with those tribes for lands west of the ninety-eighth degree. The commission then told them that such negotiations would not be entered because the commission understood they had no claim or title, and the instructions did not authorize or direct it.

In January following Alfred M. Wilson and Warren G. Sayre, a majority of the commission being in Washington, said same parties, together with John C. Orrick, appeared before them and made elaborate written and oral arguments in the premises, a direct order being had from you to hear them. This hearing was continued for several days. The written briefs were left with commission after such direction from you to hear them, and after such hearing the commission never decided anything about it, but Mr. Owen asked said Sayre if he would object to the matter being taken directly before Congress. He was informed that he could use his own pleasure about it.

In the discussion before the commission suggestions and intimations were made to Owen, Stanley, and Orrick that might well lead them to the conclusion that the commission regarded their claim invalid, but that was never formally so decided as announced. Mr. Owen's assigned reasons for going before Congress was that it was getting well along in the session, and that the matter would probably have to be fought out there anyhow. A brief was at some time in the proceedings presented for the Chickasaws, purporting to be prepared by Hon. Halbert E. Paine. Mr. Paine, however, never appeared before the commission, nor is the writer certain that anyone ever assumed to speak for the Chickasaws.

The Cherokee Commission never had and never pretended to have any secret instructions in the premises. Governor Jerome was appointed a member of the commission in May, 1890, and, of course, had no part in these proceedings. Mr. Orrick, however, made an appointment with Governor Jerome by wire to meet him in Detroit and hear an argument in the premises. Governor Jerome attended at the appointed time and place, but Mr. Orrick failed to appear.

WARREN G. SAYRE.

In connection with that telegram I submit this letter from the Secretary of the Interior:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, April 30, 1892.

SIR: Having observed in the Congressional debate now in progress concerning the appropriation for the Choctaws and Chickasaws that it is intimated in the communication from the delegates of the Choctaws and Chickasaws that secret instructions were given to the commission not to hear their claim; and also having observed that members of the Senate are laboring under this impression, I beg leave to present a copy of report just made to me by Judge Sayre, a member of that commission, who has been on it during the whole progress of the negotiations with the Cheyennes and Arapahoes and who distinctly states that the Choctaws and Chickasaws were heard both orally and on brief, and that no secret instructions were given the commission.

I beg to assure you and to request you to state for me officially that there was no action on my part prohibiting any consideration by the commission of the claims of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, and as appears the claims were actually heard by the commission by my direction. The reason that the commission did not give an opinion in regard to the title, upon the argument presented, was because the delegates and attorneys having observed, it is possible, that the decision would be adverse to them, did not wait to have it rendered, and begged leave to present it to Congress and there the business with the commission dropped and that with Congress began.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. NOBLE, Secretary.

Hon. O. H. PLATT, United States Senate.

Mr. President, I do not know what the action of the Senate will be upon this matter. I know that I have discharged my duty, and that when in the future a new claim shall be made for $6,000,000 more, if Greer County be included, there will at least be in the record of the proceedings of the Senate such a statement of the case that another Senate need not act ignorantly.

Mr. DAWES obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask permission, Mr. President, of the Senator from Massachusetts to put into the RECORD a letter which I desire to appear in connection with this matter. I applied to the Secretary of the Interior after the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] had kindly shown me the telegram which he has just presented to the Senate, and asked him to furnish me a copy of the telegram which he sent to the Cherokee Commission and to which this telegram was a reply. I have in my hand his telegram and desire to read it to the Senate:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 25, 1892.

Hon. D. H. JEROME,
Ponca, Ind. T.:

Did not the Choctaws and Chickasaws appear before your Commission and file argument, and were they not heard orally before you determined not to negotiate with these Indians?

"Senate committee reports against President's message on the three million appropriation, that you did not hear Choctaws and had secret instructions not to do so." Reply by telegram fully.

JOHN W. NOBLE, Secretary.

Now, I have in my hand a copy of the letter written by this Cherokee Commission to the governor of the Choctaw Nation. It is as follows:

UNITED STATES COMMISSION,
Tahlequah, Ind. T., November 26, 1889.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of the 15th instant, and Judge Wilson's reply of the 20th, I have the honor to say to you, for the Commission, that as heretofore intimated, we will be glad to meet the Commissioners on the part of the Choctaws and Chickasaws immediately after the conclusion of pending negotiations with the present Cherokee councils.

This Commission has been unofficially informed that the Choctaw and Chickasaw Commission is authorized to negotiate regarding the lands west of the ninety-eighth meridian only.

It is proper to say to you that the United States claims that it has now full title to that land, and that we are not authorized to negotiate for such lands. This Commission hope that the Commission we are to meet will be authorized to open negotiations for the cession to the United States of the lands west of the ninety-sixth and east of the ninety-eighth degree.

This Commission, will however, hear at that time whatever your commission wish to present regarding lands west of the ninety-eighth degree.

You will be notified at the earliest possible day of the date of the arrival of this Commission at Atoka.

I have the honor to be, respectfully yours,

LUCIUS FAIRCHILD,
Chairman United States Commission.

Hon. B. F. SMALLWOOD,
Principal Chief, Choctaw Nation, Lehigh, Ind. T.

Here is a letter which shows upon its face that they had not met the Choctaw commissioners, a letter in which they distinctly say they are not authorized to treat for the land between the ninety-eighth and one hundredth meridians. I want that to appear in connection with the telegram read by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. Secretary Noble, in his telegram, and I should like to call attention to the fact, makes this statement:

Senate committee reports against President's message on the $3,000,000, that you did not hear Choctaws and had secret instructions not to do so.

There was what is familiarly known as a compilation given to this Cherokee Commission by the Secretary of the Interior, or sent out under his order, in which the Secretary undertakes to give the status of the holdings of the different tribes in each nation. In that compilation he used this language about Greer County:

While that part of the Choctaw and Chickasaw country lying immediately west of the Kiowa and Comanche and Apache reservations, and between the Red River and the North Fork thereof and the State of Texas (marked No. 31 on the map), is not subject to negotiation, the Indian title thereto having been extinguished by the treaty of 1866 with those Indians, I deem it proper to give its status, as understood by this Department.

Now, when the Secretary, in a claim which included Greer County in the balance, claimed that the Indian title had been extinguished by the treaty of 1866, he in effect said that the Indian title to the balance of the country between 98 and 100 had been extinguished. These instructions were not public. They were not given to the public, and in proof of that I read a resolution adopted by the Senate December 19, 1889:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to send to the Senate the compilation recently made in the Indian Bureau concerning the legal status of the Indians and lands located in the Indian Territory, and that he also, if not incompatible with the public interest, send to the Senate instructions issued to the Commission recently appointed pursuant to act of Congress to negotiate for the cession to the Government of lands west of the 96th degree in the Indian Territory.

Mr. Noble responded that it was inexpedient to send those instructions. He did not send the compilation, and it was not sent until some months afterwards the Senate adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to send to the Senate the compilation recently made in the Indian Bureau concerning the legal status of the Indians and lands within the Indian Territory.

The response to this was dated March 12, 1890, and until that time this compilation was secret. Yet the Secretary of the Interior wires out to the commission in the Indian Territory to know if there were any secret orders in the hands of that commission, when it had taken two resolutions of the Senate to get it from the Secretary of the Interior to the Senate. He knew, of course, that these instructions were not public. If they were not public it seems to me they were secret. I do not see how this conclusion can be avoided.

Mr. President, I beg pardon of the Senate for taking up so much time, but it seemed to be so unfair that this sort of statements should go before the Senate, statements palpably not sustained by the record, that I could not help putting in the two points in direct contradiction of what had been stated, for the purpose of correcting the history given.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, it is exceedingly disagreeable to me to ask the Senate at this late hour to listen to further debate upon this question, and were it not for the pressure of time I should certainly ask the indulgence of the Senate and not go on to-night.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Massachusetts does not desire to proceed this evening, as this is a very important matter, and I for one would be very glad to hear the Senator, it seems to me we might lay aside the resolution for the time being and take up some other question, although I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Arkansas who has charge of the matter.

Mr. DAWES. I leave the matter entirely with the Senator from Arkansas. I have listened with great interest to the Senator from Connecticut, and—

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I will simply state the facts to the Senator from Massachusetts. I did not understand just what he said. To-morrow at 2 o'clock we have agreed to take up an order that we can not lay aside, and there will be no time, unless we go on with this matter, to dispose of the resolution for some days to come. To-morrow will be Friday and practically the last working day of this week. I think possibly the Senate may adjourn over for Saturday, and unless we can get through with this discussion to-day I do not see how it is possible for us to dispose of it for several days.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will allow me, the Senator from Massachusetts says it is not agreeable to him to speak at this late hour of the day, and I think the privilege ought to be accorded to him to speak to-morrow if he wants to do so.

Mr. DAWES. It is more for the sake of the Senate than for myself that I make the suggestion.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. So far as I am concerned, could not an arrangement be made to take the vote at a certain hour? I should like to ask if there is any objection to such an arrangement. To-morrow at 2 o'clock we have a special order, as I have just stated. Could there be an agreement now made that to-morrow at half past 1 we shall take the vote on the pending resolution? We can take the matter up immediately after we get through with the routine business, and the Senator from Massachusetts will have ample time to make his remarks to-morrow. If there can be unanimous consent of the Senate to take the vote at half past 1 o'clock to-morrow I should be perfectly willing to have such an agreement.

Mr. CULLOM. There ought to be an understanding, if that is done, that the Senator from Massachusetts can proceed immediately after the routine business.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes, immediately after the routine business.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course I do not wish to interfere with the arrangement suggested, but I know there are one or two other Senators who desire to make observations on this subject. I do not think they will take very long.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why can they not proceed this evening?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. They can go on this afternoon.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not see either of them present.

Mr. FRYE. We adjourned yesterday at about 4 o'clock. There is pressing business before the Senate, and now there is a proposition practically to adjourn at 4 o'clock to-day.

Mr. CULLOM. We need not adjourn now. The pending resolution can be informally laid aside, and the Senate can proceed to Calendar business, or whatever else it chooses.

Mr. COCKRELL. We can not do any business on the Calendar this evening.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It seems to me the discussion on the pending resolution can go on this afternoon.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senate has the patience and is not already wearied, I was about to say, if they had followed the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] as closely as I did, I was afraid they would be, as I am, weary. The Senator's argument deserved close attention, and I endeavored myself to give it full attention, and it has had that effect upon me. If the Senate is not tired I can say what I have to say now.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that the debate shall proceed this afternoon until we adjourn; that to-morrow immediately after the routine business the Senator from Massachusetts shall be recognized as having the floor, and then let him proceed with his remarks; and that at half past 1 o'clock to-morrow we take the vote on the pending resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has heard the proposition of the Senator from Arkansas. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. I shall object to that arrangement, I think, not on my own account, but on account of some other gentlemen who desire to be heard.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to ask if they can not be heard this afternoon, and let the Senator from Massachusetts close the debate to-morrow morning?

Mr. ALLISON. I have already stated that the two Senators who have spoken to me are not in the Chamber at this moment, and I think it would be hardly just to them in their absence to make the arrangement suggested.

Mr. PERKINS. I had not heard that statement by the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the business of the Senate is not so pressing but that we can arrange to take the vote at an early day on this question.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not see how it is possible to take the vote before next week unless we agree to take it to-morrow at half past 1.

Mr. DAWES. I think, perhaps, if the Senate will indulge me, I had better say what I have to say to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being objection, the Senator from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Does the Senator from Iowa object to the arrangement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Iowa to object.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to any reasonable arrangement respecting this matter. To-morrow is Friday, Saturday is another day, and Monday is another day. It seems to me that we should not, in a matter of this magnitude, at this hour of the day, when the Senator from Massachusetts desires, I take it, an hour or more at least, agree, as is suggested, that to-morrow at half past 1 we shall take a vote upon this question.

Mr. CULLOM. It can not be done.

Mr. ALLISON. Whilst I am perfectly willing that a reasonably early day shall be assigned for this purpose, I am not willing that that arrangement shall be made. I am willing to name any hour on Monday or any hour on Saturday when the vote shall be taken.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am willing to accept any suggestion that the Senator may make in that line. I am perfectly willing to accept anything the Senator thinks is fair.

Mr. FRYE. If it is going over until next week what is the use to name any hour?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us name an hour on Saturday, then.

Mr. PERKINS. We shall not probably have a session on Saturday.

Mr. ALLISON. I am perfectly willing to name any hour on Saturday.

Mr. PERKINS. I suggest 2 o'clock on Monday to the Senator from Arkansas who has charge of the resolution.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am perfectly willing to agree to that, if it is satisfactory to other Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the vote may be taken on the pending resolution at 2 o'clock on Monday next. Is there objection?

Mr. FRYE. I think that I should prefer very much that it should be at a later hour than that.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am perfectly willing to fix any other hour on Monday the Senator may name.

Mr. FRYE. My impression is that I shall desire to occupy the first hour of Monday.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Would 3 o'clock be satisfactory?

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to make it half past 4 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. FRYE. Make it half past 4 o'clock and I shall have no objection at all.

Mr. PERKINS. But the danger is that at half past 4 we shall not have a quorum, probably.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then say 4, or half past 3.

Mr. PERKINS. Half past 3 or 4 may do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas modify his request?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas, and say 4 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the vote be taken on the pending resolution at 4 o'clock on Monday. Is there objection?

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to understand the full force of the unanimous consent. Is it a part of the understanding that the Senate will sit on Saturday?

Mr. PERKINS. No.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. No, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no understanding about the interim.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not want to commit myself to that proposition. If that is not embraced in the unanimous consent I shall not object.

Mr. ALLISON. There are Senators who desire to be heard on this question, and if we are to have only an hour to-morrow, then adjourn over on Saturday, and then have other matters intervene, as the Senator from Maine indicates, on Monday, I suggest a later hour, in order that if Senators desire to speak on this question they may have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then I accept the Senator's suggestion, and name half past 4 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. ALLISON. I will agree to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the suggestion as modified, that the vote be taken on the pending resolution at half past 4 o'clock on Monday? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DAWES. I understand the resolution will be taken up to-morrow immediately after the routine business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is understood to be part of the arrangement.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 38) to provide for the disposition and sale of lands known as the Klamath River Indian Reservation; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALLEN, Mr. ROCKWELL, and Mr. WILSON of Washington managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1777) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of James M. Thompson;

A bill (H. R. 2398) granting a pension to William S. Woodward;

A bill (H. R. 3767) granting an increase of pension to George W. White;

A bill (H. R. 5021) granting a pension to Mary Jewett Telford, an army nurse;

A bill (H. R. 5377) granting a pension to Mary Isabella Hutchison; and

A bill (H. R. 5766) granting a pension to Miss Adda Boodger, of Lockport, N. Y.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 5, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

W. B. OWENS AND PETER TOWNSEND, DECEASED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the cases of the following-named persons against the United States: W. B. Owens and Peter Townsend, deceased; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A. C. P. SHOEMAKER AND DAVID STANDIFORD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the cases of the following-named persons against the United States: A. C. P. Shoemaker, deceased, and David Standiford; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

KLAMATH RIVER INDIAN RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 38) providing for the disposition and sale of lands known as the Klamath River Indian Reservation, with Senate amendments.

Mr. GEARY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. This is a House bill with Senate amendments. The gentleman from California moves to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked. Is there objection?

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the title of the bill.

The title of the bill was again reported.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the order will be made to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as conferees the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. ALLEN, the gentleman from New York, Mr. ROCKWELL, and the gentleman from Washington, Mr. WILSON.

W. H. WARD.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 577) for the relief of W. H. Ward.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of that Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California for the present consideration of this Senate bill?

Mr. BUTLER. I object. I think that the bill ought to go to a committee.

Mr. LOUD. The House committee have already reported a similar bill, which is now on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa objects, and the bill will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

JAMES H. WILLBUR.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 466) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust and settle the account of James H. Willbur with the United States and to pay said Willbur such sum of money as he may be justly and equitably entitled to.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of that bill. A similar bill has been reported from the House Committee on Claims and is on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I think the bill had better go to the committee. I demand the regular order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his objection. A bill just like this has been unanimously reported by the House committee.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill lie on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. LOUD. I think the bill had better go where the other one went.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the bill will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas, by unanimous consent, obtained indefinite leave of absence, on account of important business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TERRY and Mr. WHEELER of Alabama addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. LOUD. I withdraw the demand for the regular order.

Mr. SIMPSON. I renew the demand.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the morning hour for the call of committees for reports be dispensed with, and that members having reports to present have leave to file them with the Clerk.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CORRECTION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the Calendar. I find that the bill (H. R. 1824) "directing the Secretary of War to examine and settle the accounts of certain States and the city of Baltimore, growing out of moneys expended by said States and the city of Baltimore for military services during the war of 1812," is upon the Private Calendar. I think that is an error, and that the bill ought to go to the Calendar of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. The bill will be taken from the Private Calendar and referred to the Union Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was discharged from the further consideration of a petition from the Board of Trade and Transportation of New York, and it was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

PRINTING.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the reading of the Journal, one hour be assigned to the Committee on Printing to present reports relating to the printing of documents for Congress unless the committee can get through its business in less time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope that will be subject to the right of the general appropriation bills.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, no objection was made to my request that I heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear any objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not hear distinctly the announcement of the request.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's suggestion?

Mr. HOLMAN. Simply that this should be subject to the right of general appropriation bills.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask for only one hour.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to one hour.

The SPEAKER. The order will be made.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose?

Mr. BLANCHARD. For the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. HATCH in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7820) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reach an understanding, if possible, in regard to the length of time to be consumed in further general discussion of this bill. I ask that general debate be limited to one hour.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have noticed in the list of gentlemen desiring to speak on this bill three or four names. I suggest, therefore, a limitation of two hours, with speeches limited to half an hour each.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. I want ten or twelve minutes. If I can get that time pledged to me, I suppose I need not care how many other gentleman may be cut out. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANCHARD. I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that we limit the debate to an hour and a half in fifteen-minute speeches.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to occupy a little more than fifteen minutes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Well, the gentleman from Indiana suggests two hours, and I do not wish to be obstinate about the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that general debate on this bill be closed in two hours.

Mr. ENOCHS. I object. This is a very important bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move that the committee rise, my purpose being to ask the House to limit discussion on the bill.

Mr. ENOCHS. I withdraw my objection. The proposition is for two hours' general debate, I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the proposition. Is there further objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BLANCHARD. May I ask, Mr. Chairman, whether this time is to be controlled by any member or by the Chair exclusively?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that some four gentlemen have had their names placed on the list, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], making a fifth, has indicated his wish to be recognized.

Mr. BLANCHARD. It is immaterial to me; I merely asked for information.

The CHAIRMAN. Three or four gentlemen have asked to be heard for or against the bill. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], he being first on the list.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the time occupied by each gentleman is to be limited to half an hour. That was the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BUTLER. Is there any understanding by this arrangement as to how the two hours are to be divided? The affirmative of this proposition has already had two hours and a half, and the negative no time at all thus far. If these two hours are to be divided equally between the two sides it will make a total of three and a half hours for the affirmative and only one for the negative.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Iowa is mistaken in his statement. About two minutes over two hours was occupied yesterday.

Mr. BUTLER. Well, say that two hours have already been occupied on the affirmative. Is the division of time to-day to be equal between the two sides, an hour apiece?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. There are gentlemen who wish to speak during the general debate, not in favor of the bill or against it, but upon some particular amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the time occupied by the gentleman from Louisiana who reported the bill can hardly be considered as part of the general debate in dividing the time. Deducting the time occupied by that gentleman, the Chair will endeavor to divide the time as equally as practicable between those in favor of the bill and those against it. The gentleman from Louisiana, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana, asks that under the present order no member shall occupy more than thirty minutes. Is there objection to that? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not expect to occupy half an hour; yet I wish to present a few views in regard to this bill. I approve of the general purpose of the bill; the improvement of rivers and harbors, which are of public concern, affecting the general commerce of the country, has my cordial approval. For that purpose I think a reasonable sum of money ought to be annually appropriated. So that I address myself to the pending measure as one favoring a wise and reasonable system of internal improvements. I think to the extent that I have named that policy has for many years been the policy of the Democratic party, although from 1850 down to about 1867 very little money was appropriated by either political party for works of internal improvement.

I had hoped, Mr. Chairman, in the preparation of this bill, notwithstanding the heavy pressure that is always brought to bear on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for increased appropriations, that the general policy which has controlled the House during this present session would have been manifested at least to a reasonable extent in this bill. I regret very much that the contrary is true.

Every other bill reported to the House and every other bill prepared to be reported to the House, which covers all of the bills except three, one of which is already in a state of preparation, contains a material reduction of appropriations over those for the present current year, not to the extent we had hoped for by any means, but a moderate reduction. I apprehend that we will be all greatly disappointed, perhaps some grievously so, at the outcome of our appropriation bills, but still earnest efforts have been made for retrenchment.

We have reached so high a rate of expenditure, and the current appropriations made of recent years are so large that it is difficult to get down to what would have been deemed fair and reasonable a few years ago. This, however, is the only bill, and I call the attention of my friend from Louisiana to the fact that does not propose any reduction over the appropriations for the present current year. On the contrary, as will be seen, it involves a largely increased expenditure in the coming year and for the future.

Mr. BLANCHARD. My friend does not mean to assert that the aggregate carried by this bill is larger than the aggregate of the bill of September 19, 1890, surely?

Mr. HOLMAN. My language was that it involved a larger expenditure this year, and for the future—a larger expenditure than any preceding bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is $1,317,030 larger than the last bill as it passed the House.

Mr. BLANCHARD. This bill covers nearly four millions less than the bill of 1890.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, as it became a law. My friend will not controvert my statement that it involves a much larger expenditure in future than any preceding bill. But we will see as I go on and call attention to some of the features of the bill.

This bill, as it comes to the House, is larger than it was at that stage in the last Congress, I mean as to direct appropriations, but it is immensely larger when you include the appropriations which are to be made hereafter in accordance with contracts which may be entered into under its provisions.

I do not wish to be understood as objecting to the general provisions of the bill except as to amounts appropriated. My district is located on the Ohio River, and I wish to show that I am speaking on this subject from the standpoint of one interested in river improvements.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will desist for a moment. Complaint is made that there is so much confusion on the floor that the gentleman can not be heard. The Chair desires to call the attention of the Doorkeeper and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House to the rule which makes it the duty of these officers to maintain order in the rear of the seats, and the Chair desires to admonish the officers named that he will insist that the rule must be complied with.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the confusion is most likely occasioned by gentlemen who are improperly on the floor. I am certain that members themselves do not create the disturbance.

But I was saying, sir, that I represent a district lying along the Ohio River, largely interested in the matter of river improvements, a district running almost half way between the great cities of Cincinnati and Louisville, the most beautiful portion of the Ohio River, and, I think, the most beautiful region in the United States, and I represent a people largely concerned in the navigation of the Ohio and the Lower Mississippi, and who have been interested in those rivers for more than seventy-five years past.

I represent a district where there is no trouble about obtaining correct information as to the state of the navigation of the Mississippi River. Pilots and captains abound in that region of country who are far more familiar with the subject than your engineers, and are able to convey more practical information. So I rather speak from the standpoint of experience than from the reports made by the engineers in charge of these works.

But, Mr. Chairman, it is not so much to the appropriations actually made by the bill as to those which are authorized to be made that I raise objection, and to which I desire mainly to address my remarks. Let us see how we are progressing in this field of expenditure and determine if we can not retrench here a little, even if we may not retrench as much here as in the other great appropriation bills. I wish to present a statement of the appropriations authorized by the act of last Congress, and one fact which I hope I may be permitted to impress on the minds of this House is this, that never before in our history, if my reading is correct, has a bill passed Congress providing for the making of contracts in advance and involving future appropriations until the last Congress entered upon that system.

This policy was inaugurated at the first of last Congress, and one question I think this House should carefully consider is, whether it will adopt and continue this policy of the Fifty-first Congress in a matter that may run to such magnitude of expenditures by a process so easy under this system of contracts which are necessarily involved in the pending bill as to justly alarm the country. Contracts were authorized in the river and harbor act, first session, Fifty-first Congress, as follows:

Galveston Harbor, Texas.....	$6,200,000
St. Marys River.....	3,738,894
Hay Lake Channel.....	1,684,115
Philadelphia Harbor.....	3,800,000
Baltimore Harbor.....	700,000
	16,123,079
The act appropriated toward said contracts.....	2,840,000
	13,283,079
Last sundry civil act appropriated.....	1,951,200
Leaving yet to be provided for.....	11,331,779

Mr. CATCHINGS. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow a question in that connection?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CATCHINGS. How much is the gross amount appropriated for these different places contained in the sundry civil bill reported by you at this session of Congress?

Mr. HOLMAN. That will come in the regular order.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Will you kindly answer my question?

Mr. HOLMAN. It will be a part of my statement.

Mr. CATCHINGS. You are going to state that?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, certainly, I am going to make a statement of the whole case. The act of the last Congress appropriated, on these contracts, $2,840,000 in the river and harbor bill. I hope gentlemen will observe—for I do not wish to refer to it again—that when these contracts are authorized, the measure does not then remain with the River and Harbor Committee, but goes to the Committee on Appropriations, and the items appropriated become items in the sundry civil bill. This fact must always be borne in mind in determining how much is being appropriated for any given year. That left, of the five contracts to be executed, at the close of the last Congress, $13,282,979. Of that the sum of $2,840,000 was embraced in the river and harbor bill, but the last sundry civil bill carried $1,951,200; leaving yet to be provided for $11,331,770.

Now, the sundry civil bill of this year will appropriate on those contracts something less than $1,000,000. The exact amount is $814,000; the balance goes over. That is my answer to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS]—$814,000 for these five objects.

Mr. CATCHINGS. That would be about one-thirteenth of the amount for which the Government could contract.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is true as to appropriations in the sundry civil bill of this session.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. I wish to interrupt the gentleman for one moment to ask him if he will state in detail the appropriations for these five works in the sundry civil bill of this year in detail?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not the statement before me, but they amount in the aggregate to something over $814,000. The balance is simply postponed.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. I simply want to state here that the amount for the Philadelphia Harbor is about $49,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. That results from the fact that there is such a large sum of money on hand.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. But still the gentleman makes an aggregate here and he does not state the details. I want that fact to appear for the credit of the Delaware River.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Delaware River is well provided for. The reason why the appropriation is not greater for the Delaware River is, that the appropriations already made for the current year are very large, and are not yet expended; and, under the advice of Gen. Casey, who has charge of the carrying out of those contracts, the amount was made substantially the sum named by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania. Just one minute. I wish to state here, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Louisiana, the chairman of the River and Harbor Committee [Mr. BLANCHARD], correctly stated yesterday that upon the contract for the work in the harbor of Philadelphia, 66 per cent will be saved by the system of contracting at one time for the entire work, as compared with the large expense of doing the work under single appropriations from year to year.

Mr. HOLMAN. We will see as to that later. There is $3,800,000 to be expended at some time on the Philadelphia Harbor. That is all there is about it; and whether the appropriation is made for the current year or the next year is a matter of no consequence. It will have to be made, for there is a contract. It is going to be made, gentlemen, and it has to be made. When you authorize your Chief of Engineers to make a contract for the completion of a given work, of course Congress will make the appropriation. How can you avoid it?

Mr. TRACEY. What is the objection to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. How can you avoid it? As the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY] suggests, it is a proper and necessary thing to be done, and for every dollar provided for in these five contracts authorized by the last Congress, involving $16,122,979, and upwards, every dollar of that amount will be appropriated, as every gentleman knows, and must be appropriated. I suppose all of you Democrats, in your canvass of 1890, added that $16,000,000 of liabilities created to the amount of money authorized and required to be appropriated by the Fifty-first Congress. And why not? It has created a liability as absolute and complete as a judgment lien upon real estate, and one which must be met.

Mr. CATCHINGS. May I ask my friend a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. If it is just a question—

Mr. CATCHINGS. If that $13,000,000 was appropriated by the last Congress, why is it you have appropriated in the sundry civil bill $900,000 of it this year?

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend is too excellent a lawyer, a gentleman of too admirable judgment, to ask such a question as that. [Laughter.] I have been saying all the time that it creates a liability that must be met, and no gentleman will pretend that Congress after authorizing a contract is going to go back upon it.

Ah, no, the last Congress was chargeable with that item of $16,122,797 just as much as if that appropriation had been made, because it was to be made. You make part of it this year, and gentlemen, you will have to make part of it next year. But under this system you are not going to have a single river and harbor bill every two years. In my judgment this contract system will compel you to appropriate every current year.

Now, gentlemen, how about the present bill? I have stated what the last bill was. The specific appropriation of this bill amounts to $21,290,975. There are contracts authorized to an extent that ought to arrest the attention of this House at the very threshold, and you will see how these will grow, and how immense they will become. The last Congress took the initiative step by appropriating $16,000,000 and a fraction; and now you have reached in this bill $26,702,321—$26,000,000 already, on the very second bill ever brought into Congress, for carrying on this contract system, increasing the amount of the contracts to the extent of over $9,000,000. What will it cost year after year, and years to come, especially if gentlemen allow it to enter into their minds that they will not be held responsible for it by their constituents.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] permit me to ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, certainly.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman objects to the contract system, does he not?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I hold in my hand—

Mr. HOLMAN. I only yielded for a question.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am going to ask you a question. I hold in my hand the sundry civil appropriation bill, and under the head of "building for the Library of Congress," I find this proviso:

Provided, That contracts may be entered into—

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will not consume my time.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am asking you if you did not put into the sundry civil bill a provision for a contract?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Well, further, I want to ask you if you did not put in the sundry civil bill provisions for continuing contracts in identically the same language that is used in this bill for the making and continuing contracts?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; I was coming to that much more fully. So this involves the expenditure in the coming year of $21,290,975, and it authorizes and directs contracts to be made covering $26,702,321. Now, that is $47,993,296. Forty-seven millions! Equal to the entire cost of your Government only forty years ago.

Forty-seven millions! This is a large charge upon your Government to be made by a single bill if it become a law, as positive as an actual appropriation, as the contracts will be made, and of course they have got to be carried out. Are you prepared gentlemen, for that state of things? The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] has called attention to the fact that under the advice of the Chief of Engineers—

Mr. BLANCHARD. We did it under his advice, too.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand. (Continuing:) Two contracts have been made of this character—one with regard to the outer wall of the Library building, on account of the long period of time required in which to prepare the granite for the outer wall; second, the post-office building for this city; and, thirdly, the contracts for the interior portion of the Library. I submit they do not stand upon the footing of this matter of appropriations for rivers and harbors. They stand upon a different footing.

Mr. CATCHINGS. What is the difference?

Mr. HOLMAN. They are structures that must be constructed. They are not a matter of experiment in any possible degree. They are buildings that must be erected; they are authorized by Congress, partially constructed, and their construction is a fixed fact. No question ever will be raised on this in this House or the other.

Mr. CASTLE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. HOLMAN. For a question.

Mr. CASTLE. What is the difference between an appropriation for a building and the character of appropriations for a permanent construction like Sault St. Marie Canal?

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, there the gentleman puts a pertinent question which I ought to answer, and which I would really answer more fully if I had time. As to these two structures I have named they are buildings expressly and definitely provided for; but as to these contracts, which I shall name seriatim, they are in a very large measure experimental; the plan may be changed; Congress may hesitate to make the appropriation on account of insufficient money in the Treasury.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that the condition of the Treasury will have to be taken into account in all these great contracts you propose to authorize.

Now, gentlemen, on the basis of your bills as they stand before the House and before the Senate, with a fair estimate of the bills yet to be reported, only three in number, your appropriation will exceed your revenues as estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury, by over $16,000,000. And yet we are proposing to mortgage the future with this enormous sum of $47,000,000, contracts of two Congresses, for river and harbor improvements!

What are the works which are to be provided for under these contracts? They are as follows:

Contracts authorized for expenditures in addition to appropriations carried in river and harbor bill as reported to the House first session Fifty-second Congress.

Harbor of refuge, Point Judith, Rhode Island	$1,075,000
Charleston (S. C.) Harbor	1,878,000
Savannah (Ga.) Harbor	2,792,000
Mobile (Ala.) Harbor	1,093,800
Humboldt (Cal.) Harbor	1,513,115
Hudson River, New York	2,197,906
Mississippi River (Upper)	4,500,000
Mississippi River (Lower)	7,500,000
Ship channel, Great Lakes	2,840,000
Canal, Columbia River, Oregon	1,310,500

	26,702,321
Specific appropriations in the bill	21,290,975
Total	47,993,296

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me call attention to the views of a gentleman somewhat well informed, I think, as to one of these items, the deep-water channel up North. I ask the Clerk to read the letter which I send to the desk. It is a communication addressed to the Hon. JUSTIN R. WHITING and myself, and is written by a gentleman said to be of high character, a resident of Port Huron, familiar with this subject.

The letter was read, as follows:

PORT HURON, MICH., March 30, 1892.

Hon. JUSTIN R. WHITING and Judge HOLMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Your opposition to the 21-foot water channel is much admired in this district for several reasons. I consider it nothing more than a gigantic scheme to plunder the people of this nation of millions of dollars. The cut at the St. Clair flats has cost the Government, as near as I can recollect, the sum of $2,000,000 and it is only three-fourths of a mile long. Now, to make a channel of 22 feet across Lake St. Clair, a distance of 30 miles, it would have to be with piers of wood or stone both sides, or the action of the waves would fill up the cut the dredges would make.

The cut would have to be 5 feet deep, as there is about 16 feet on an average through the lake at this time, so you will readily see that this canal would cost seventy-five millions, and should it be built of stone it would cost three hundred millions. Again at Pelee Point, in Lake Erie, there would be about 10 miles of piers and 5 feet of dredging, and at the "Soo" River there would have to be 50 miles of piers built to maintain a channel of 21 feet of water. At the foot of Lake Huron there would have to be about 3 miles of piers built to maintain this channel now before Congress. This 93 miles of wood piers, with the necessary dredging would cost two and one-half millions of dollars a mile, which amounts to the enormous sum of $282,500,000, and after this fearful expenditure in five years it would not be worth the buttons on a soldier's coat for navigation of 21-foot vessels.

It would require two hundred millions more to dredge out the harbors for these 21-foot vessels, hence jobs or corruptions would be on all sides. Plunder and stealing would be the order of the day; men with small vessels would be hobbling off to the poorhouse on crutches, while greedy monopoly would be in its pristine glory for a few years only. Man must abide by the laws of nature, and she made these great lakes and rivers just as they should be, giving comfort to the rich and poor, democratic fashion, equal rights to all, special privileges to none. But owing to a class of men who have had control of the nation for a quarter of a century, these Jeffersonian ideas have been trampled under foot, class legislation has been all the rage, and they have actually made the attempt to set aside nature's well-known laws, to make millions of one class, paupers and serfs of the balance of those who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow.

This demand for a 21-foot channel came from the monopolists, and when the millions are squandered, the channel of no use, they will hold up their hands in a stage actor's attitude and exclaim, "Who would have thought it!" I have been on and around these lakes for the last fifty-two years, have studied nature's laws on this subject, and know that a channel of 21 feet can not be maintained for three years through the lakes and rivers here in the West. The reason is that nature never intended such a channel, but actually put a dam of solid limestone below Detroit, known as the Lime Kiln Crossing, with 16 to 18 feet of water on the top of it, and these greedy gatherers of yellow dirt got the natural dam blown out with dynamite, at the expense of the people, and now their condition is worse than before the dam was removed.

It has caused the water at this port to fall 4 feet 6 inches, has affected all the harbors on the Great Lakes, made the obstructions in Lake St. Clair and the foot of Lake Huron, and in the face of these facts they now demand more of this kind of medicine. Any man with reason knows that more water will go through a 21-foot channel than will in a 16-foot cut, hence the water of the upper lakes has run away to the ocean, never to return and make the old-time depth of water. Should the 21-foot channel be built it would reduce the depth of water to 12 feet all through the artificial channels in three years after it was completed. Then what would become of the 21-foot crafts? I will tell you. They would ask Congress to appropriate $1,000,000 to make a balloon to go to the planet Mars.

The honorable gentlemen will readily see that it is not possible to maintain a 21-foot channel where nature only intended 16 feet. The area of evaporation will not supply the amount of water to run through this huge channel, hence the water must go down and off to the ocean. The destruction of the dam at the Limekiln below Detroit proves this to be correct, and the demand for a 21-foot channel is a huge scheme to plunder the Treasury Department. I most respectfully ask that you gentlemen lay this matter before the proper committee, and show them the utter impossibility of making such a channel to last any length of time; and is only a wedge to plunder Uncle Sam's strong box of its contents under the hypocritical plea of benefiting navigation. Trusting you will lay this matter before Congress in the proper light.

I remain, your obedient servant,

W. E. LEONARD.

During the reading of the above letter the Chairman announced that Mr. HOLMAN's time had expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I fear that the Chair has failed to deduct the time that was consumed in looking up a rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not failed. The gentleman has consumed thirty minutes.

Mr. WATSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] be allowed to proceed and conclude his remarks.

Mr. CASTLE. If it is to be taken out of the general time I do not object, otherwise I do. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman's time be extended will the extension be taken out of the general time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will answer the gentleman as soon as he understands distinctly the request of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON. My request is for unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Indiana be extended indefinitely until he concludes his remarks.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire only about ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Indiana be extended for fifteen minutes, not to come out of the two hours allowed for general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. CASTLE. If the extension is not to come out of the two hours I object.

Mr. BOATNER. My request was, Mr. Chairman, that the time of the gentleman from Indiana be extended for fifteen minutes, the extension not to come out of the general time.

Mr. CASTLE. I object. If that is done for the gentleman from Indiana it should be done for the other side also.

Mr. CASTLE subsequently withdrew his objection.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I shall not object to this fifteen minutes' extension in addition to the two hours allowed for general debate, but I will not agree to any other or further extension.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER]?

There was no objection, and Mr. HOLMAN's time was extended for fifteen minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to read the remainder of the letter.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the letter as above.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Who is the author of that letter?

Mr. HOLMAN (to the Clerk). Read the name of the writer. The CLERK (reading). W. E. Leonard.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Does the gentleman from Indiana know who the writer is?

Mr. HOLMAN. Not personally. I understand that he is a reputable citizen of Port Huron on Lake St. Clair.

Now, here in this letter you have this work, this deep-water channel, described by a gentleman who lives on its borders. I know nothing of the fact; the letter speaks for itself. You are entering upon a system of improvements there to cost apparently less than $3,000,000, but here you have the opinion of a man who lives right there upon the ground and who tells the character and the probable cost of the work.

Mr. CASTLE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have only fifteen minutes, and I hope I shall not be asked to yield further.

Now, sir, it is said that the improvement of the Mississippi River, its revetments, etc., has passed the period of experiment. I have before me an exhaustive report (which it would be impossible to read now) made by a committee of the House to the Forty-second Congress.

Mr. CATCHINGS. What year?

Mr. HOLMAN. It was the year 1881-'82.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Was not that the second year after the work began?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, several years after.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Did not the work begin in 1880?

Mr. HOLMAN. A portion of the work at Plum Point was completed, a portion of the work at Lake Providence was completed, and a portion of the levee system below the mouth of the Red River had been entered upon; a large amount of money had been expended up to that time; and Congress appointed a committee to investigate the subject. I admit, now, that in a general way the majority of the committee, of which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] was chairman, reported in favor of the system of levees as incidental to navigation. A minority of the committee reported in favor of the outlet system, believing that the levee system had no beneficial effect whatever upon navigation. There was one striking fact shown by that examination.

The trip from Cairo to the mouth of the jetties on the Gulf of Mexico was made at a low-water period, when a large number of pilots were going down from Pittsburg to examine the condition of the river. The committee had unusual facilities for obtaining the testimony of captains and pilots from Pittsburg to New Orleans and from St. Louis to New Orleans as to what was the proper method of improving that river. The sentiment was almost without exception, "You keep the river clear of snags and properly lighted; and the navigation is sufficient." The people of my State who are interested in the Ohio River—

Mr. CATCHINGS. May I ask the gentleman a question right here?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am only mentioning what the testimony was.

Mr. CATCHINGS. But in that connection, I know you want to state the case fairly, because you are a fair man; and I want to ask you a question. You have quoted the pilots of the Mississippi River as being adverse to the method now being pursued to improve that river—

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not say that.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Is it not a fact that all the owners of the great Anchor Line steamers which ply that river, and all the pilots engaged in the service, passed a resolution last year taking back all they had before said against this plan, and stating that they fully indorsed the method being pursued.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend will not expect me to call him a fair man if he consumes all my time. I am not discussing what conventions may have said. I am saying what men have said who know all about the Mississippi River and the Ohio River. It is the Ohio River that is interested in this question as a question of navigation. That river furnishes the great body of the business on the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf. My constituents have more interest in the question of navigation than have those of my friend from Mississippi or my friend from Louisiana. We are interested in the question of navigation, not in the question of levees.

Now, it will be seen how we are drifting. We started out on the theory of building levees simply for the purpose of aiding navigation. We have now reached the point of constructing levees for the protection of the land, and I can not help but wonder what would be the result of this policy if it should be entered upon. I hold in my hand a little correspondence which came to me a day or two ago, and which shows how we are drifting on this question of levees. His letter is as follows:

CLINTON, IND., April 22, 1892.

DEAR SIR: Before now you have received the news from the Democratic convention yesterday, so I shall say nothing but express to you my gratification at the success of our friend Matthews as the nominee for governor. I think it will greatly strengthen the ticket in the State, for Matthews has undoubtedly got the confidence of the farmers, and they have a large balance of power in the State. But enough of this.

My object in this letter is to try to enlist your aid in getting some assistance from the Government to help the construction of a levee from the high grounds on the south side of Raccoon Creek to Walker's Bluff, about 3 miles below Clinton, on the east side of the Wabash River, a distance of about 13 miles. We have already spent about $24,000 on a levee between these two points, which has given us protection as high as the highest banks on said line. But we find this is not sufficient, only protecting against a moderate risk. We think 4 feet more would give us permanent protection, which would cost about $40,000. We are not able to do the work without some assistance. Could we get the aid I have asked for above, $30,000, I think we could raise $10,000 more.

This levee would protect about 5,000 acres as fertile land as lies in Indiana from the periodical overflows, against which an industrious people have been battling with poor success for many years. The sum we ask would be a mere trifle in comparison with appropriations that have been made for far less useful objects. Congress has made many liberal appropriations in aid of rivers and creeks not more worthy of aid than would be this we ask. We only ask aid to finish a work already half accomplished to save the work already begun, which we feel unable to complete.

Yours, truly,

Hon. E. V. BROOKSHIRE,
Washington City, D. C.

C. B. KNOWLES.

In this letter, dated Clinton, Ind., April 22, 1892, and addressed to my colleague, Mr. BROOKSHIRE, the writer requests that an appropriation of $30,000 be made for the purpose of leveeing about 5,000 acres of land on a stream that empties into the Wabash. The letter is signed by C. B. Knowles, the editor of a newspaper, I think. He points out the fact that those 5,000 acres of land would be largely increased in value if protected by a levee.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Do you not think that, as an Indiana Representative, you ought to vote for that proposition?

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, I will not vote for it even if it is an Indiana measure, and yet I generally stand by my State. [Laughter.] To this letter my colleague sent the following reply:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., April 27, 1892.

MY DEAR SIR AND FRIEND: I am in receipt of your kind letter of the 22d instant, in which you suggest that the Federal Government be called on to help construct a levee from the high grounds on the south side of Raccoon Creek to Walker's Bluff, some 3 miles below Clinton, on the east side of the Wabash. You state that the levee, you think, will reclaim about 5,000 acres of fertile land.

Now, there are a great many Democrats who believe that under the Constitution no warrant can be found for appropriating the public money in a river and harbor bill for any other purpose except to improve the navigable water ways of the United States for purposes purely necessary to navigation. Of course it is quite apparent that if the United States should embark in a policy looking to the reclamation of overflowed tracts of land no one can predict the limit of expenditure.

While I would be very glad indeed to help your people it would no doubt be urged that the matter to which you have called my attention is a proper subject for consideration by the State, and for that reason I do not think that Congress as presently constituted would look upon such a proposition favorably.

Trusting that I have made myself understood, and that this will find you well.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

E. V. BROOKSHIRE.

Mr. C. B. KNOWLES, Clinton, Ind.

That is the point of that.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. In a few moments; as soon as I finish this sentence. I have thought of this myself, in passing along this magnificent valley through which the Mississippi River flows on its way to the Gulf, one of the richest valleys on the globe, and through which I have often passed, as have most of the people in my region of country, I thought of this great question of the reclamation of these lands, whether it was a question that the whole people of the country should participate in, or only those who would reap the golden reward of claiming this world of wealth to the river. I examined the constitution of Louisiana; I looked at the subject from all sides.

I have stood on the doorsteps of my home on the Ohio River hills and seen on the north thousand of acres of land in the great Miami River, the most fertile bodies of land on the globe, a valley through which the line dividing Ohio and Indiana runs eastward, the great valley of Boone County, Ky.; southward the great Laughery Valley—hundreds of thousands of acres. I have seen often that whole magnificent region overflowed by the Ohio; and I asked myself the question, is Congress prepared to enter upon the policy of reclaiming these lands from occasional floods by levees at the expense of the whole people.

Mr. Chairman, let us see what the citizens of Louisiana themselves think on this question, and how far they regard themselves as justly bound as a State for the reclamation of the lands of the delta, and I call the attention of gentlemen to the views of the people of Louisiana. I read now from one of the articles in the constitution of the State:

The General Assembly may divide the State into levee districts and provide for the appointment or election of levee commissioners in said districts, who shall, in the method and manner to be provided by law, have supervision of the erection, repairs, and maintenance of levees in said districts; to that effect it may levy a tax, not to exceed 5 mills, on the taxable property situated within the alluvial portions of said district subject to overflow.

Now, it seems that the citizens of Louisiana and of New Orleans themselves do not recognize the justice and fairness of the whole people of the State bearing the burden of reclaiming from the floods these valuable possessions.

Mr. BOATNER. The gentleman is entirely in error, if he will allow me to make a correction.

Mr. HOLMAN. This it will be seen applies to the reclamation of the alluvial lands. Now, can our friends in Louisiana ask the whole people of the United States to appropriate money for this desirable object when they themselves limit such appropriations by a constitutional provision?

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman from Indiana permit me to correct him?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly, if I am wrong.

Mr. BOATNER. That provision applies to the district levee tax. There is also a general levee tax assessed upon all the people of the State.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am glad my friend from Louisiana called attention to that fact, which illustrates the point to which I have referred.

A levee system—

I read now from a clause in the constitution of the State immediately preceding the one to which I referred a moment ago. I read article 213:

A levee system shall be maintained in the State and a tax not to exceed 1 mill may be levied annually on all property subject to taxation and shall be applied exclusively to the maintenance and repairs of levees.

Mr. BOATNER. So that the whole of the people of the State are taxed, as you see, for the levees.

Mr. HOLMAN. The whole of the people bear a tax of one mill, certainly not an oppressive tax, and a tax of five mills on the district subject to overflow, and that is the judgment of the people of Louisiana on that subject. These seem to be just constitutional provisions. That is the view taken of it by the citizens of your State, and that is the principle they apply, and yet you gentlemen are proposing that the whole people of the United States, of the mountains and the valleys, whether subject to overflow or not, shall contribute to the reclamation of the rich alluvial lands along the great river.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman allow me to call his attention to one feature of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BOATNER. I find on page 43 a provision making an appropriation of $13,000, which sum may be expended in completing the embankment on the south side of the Great Miami River near its junction with the Ohio River, to confine the waters of said Miami River in great floods to the general course of its channel at or near the Ohio, to the end that the formation of the bar in the Ohio now obstructing navigation may be arrested.

I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana if this point is not in his district; and if this appropriation, which we would call a levee, was not made at his request?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh certainly. And I am glad that my friend read this. It shows that I am working for the navigation alone and not for the reclamation of lands. I am for improving the navigation of the river, and that paragraph so declares; and yet at the same time the appropriation would protect the neighboring town from disastrous floods, and I am glad the committee has inserted the provision.

Mr. BOATNER. Then I would like to ask the gentleman how many appropriations have been made for this same purpose before?

Mr. HOLMAN. Two or three, and all has been done for the improvement of navigation, and yet has greatly benefited the citizens of Lawrenceburg, in my district, often overwhelmed by disastrous floods. And I am not objecting to levees in aid of navigation; but I am objecting to levees for the reclamation of land.

Mr. CATCHINGS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I want to ask if Col. Merrett did not state that there was no bar there to be removed?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; but all the pilots assert that there is such a bar, a result of the deflection of the river in great floods.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to finish his remarks.

Mr. HOLMAN. I can not do that in justice to other gentlemen. I am just as much interested in getting ahead with this bill as anyone else.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WHITING] is recognized.

Mr. WHITING. Mr. Chairman, I shall endeavor to show to this committee that there is a project in this bill carrying with it $3,300,000, that I believe is premature and illadvised. If the project could be carried out as proposed, it would be very unfair to all the great interests on the lakes. The project that I refer to is the 21-foot channel from Duluth and Chicago to Buffalo, through the connecting of the waters of the Great Lakes. There are at present only two harbors on the Great Lakes that have 21 feet of water for the accommodation of commerce. All the other harbors on Lake Huron and Lake Michigan have less than 21 feet of water.

Mr. BUSHNELL. Which are the two you speak of?

Mr. WHITING. I understand that Marquette, Lake Superior, has 21 feet, and that Buffalo, Lake Erie, has 21 feet. I also understand that this project was promoted by the railroad and elevator interests at Buffalo, and by parties at Duluth, who are dreaming of rivaling New York City and Baltimore as ports of export. They hope to boom their property. A convention was called and this matter was not given fair consideration, and as I say, it was hastily and prematurely brought before this Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will my friend yield for a question?

Mr. WHITING. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Did not the Democratic State convention in Michigan on yesterday pass a resolution indorsing this very improvement?

Mr. BAILEY. And they voted down a free-silver resolution, too!

Mr. WHITING. I will say this in reply: The gentleman very well knows that very often a matter which is very little understood, like this, is inserted in a State platform by one man. The man who was instrumental in putting that into the platform is the one man who believes in a water way to the sea. In my opinion that is utterly out of the question. I have before me a bill and report on a ship canal to the sea. Why, anybody that gives that second consideration knows that great steamers with screw wheels, could not go through such a canal at over 2 or 3 miles an hour speed, and the time that it would consume would be more expensive and make a larger freight cost than is now entailed by the canal boats.

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman one short question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITING. Yes.

Mr. CASTLE. Is it not true that nine out of the eleven members of the Michigan delegation are in favor of this project and signed a paper to that effect?

Mr. HOLMAN. Signed a paper?

Mr. CASTLE. Yes.

Mr. WHITING. Indirectly. And this is the fact, and I state it here: I live upon the borders of the St. Clair River, and I think I am acquainted with as many vessel men, with as many vessel owners and captains as any member of this House, or perhaps any man in Michigan; and it is almost the universal opinion of vessel men of Michigan that the deepening of these channels at this time is not prudent, that there is a better way of accomplishing deep water if it is desired. I have before me the report of an interview with Commander George H. Coffin, United States Navy, which appeared in the Detroit Free Press, February 5, 1892. He was asked with reference to this project, and he said:

Yes, I have heard of the theory that a 21-foot channel and tidewater connection would lower the water in the lakes, and of the other theory that it would not. In my opinion the former view is correct. The great lakes constitute a vast receiving basin for thousands of streams which carry the rainfall of the country. Your present low stage of water is caused by lack of rain in the last few years. Now, I hold that a deeper channel without something to back the water up is going to still further lower the water in the lakes and their connecting passageways even to below the navigable depth of 12 feet. Invert a pitcher of water and the water runs over the spout and lip. Enlarge this spout and more water will run through, emptying the pitcher more quickly. The larger the channel to the ocean the more water will run through. Now, my idea is that this may be stopped by a dam and system of locks to hold the water back.

The boats may be taken through these locks as they are through the Sault Canal lock. There is no other way to get around the water question. The water that is allowed to flow unobstructed through a deep channel is going to empty the lakes to a certain depth, because it can not be supplied as fast as it runs out. With every year vast areas of timber forest are being laid bare and thousands of streams are drying up. These streams have all been feeders to the lakes. You can see, therefore, that the supply from that source is becoming exhausted and that no artificial means should be employed to still further empty the receiving basin.

"What do you think of the duplication of names of islands and points on the lakes; as, for instance, there are two islands carrying the name of Bois Blanc?"

"Oh, that is a matter which we leave to a special board for correction. The duplication of names creates a manner of confusion and bothers us exceedingly, but the names are being changed and the evil will in time be corrected."

Commanders Coffin, Woodward, and Wildes left for Buffalo last night. There Commander Woodward will leave them. At New York Commanders Coffin and Wildes separated, the former going to Washington and the latter to Portland.

Mr. SIMPSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WHITING. Yes.

Mr. SIMPSON. I would like to ask the gentleman if, when they dug out the St. Clair Flats Canal from 9½ feet to 16 feet, it lowered the water in Lake Huron any?

Mr. WHITING. I think it did.

Mr. SIMPSON. There has never been any record of it.

Mr. WHITING. I will state in this connection what I understand from vessel men to be the fact, that three years ago they dug out what was called the Horse Shoe Shoals, just below Buffalo, where the current is 7½ miles an hour. They dredged that to a depth of 20 feet, and the next year Lake Erie fell, and the following year they found the Lime Kiln crossing too low, and they had to dredge that out, and the next year there was trouble at Grosse Point, and now they propose to put a canal through 21 feet in depth, connecting these lakes, which is a system of ditching still further, and which will still lower the level of these lakes, and leave every harbor along the lakes high and dry.

I wish to state to this House that Lake St. Clair to-day is 18 miles across, and only has a depth of 16 feet of water. There were 18 feet of water when Gen. Poe made that report. Two feet more at that time would have made 20 feet, but the water is now still lower. So if they dredge across Lake St. Clair 5 feet and do not wall it, one storm from the south west will fill it up, but if they do the work properly it will cost from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000 to give us this deep water. The proper way to secure deeper water is to build a dam below Tonawanda on the Niagara river. It is feasible and not very expensive. It has been reported by engineers that a dam can be made at a point below where the navigation ends.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. What engineer has ever reported in favor of damming the Niagara?

Mr. WHITING. This very engineer has.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Where?

Mr. WHITING. He has not made a formal report, but he has reported that it can be done. When this item is reached I propose to offer an amendment which will provide for an examination by a committee, or by a board of engineers appointed by the Secretary of War, to investigate this matter and report upon it. It is premature to put this matter through now. When they come here and talk as they do, that all these benefits go to the farmer, it is all nonsense.

I do not disapprove of the river and harbor appropriations, and in the main they are right. I believe this committee has been industrious and just, and I approve of almost everything that they have done; but they can make mistakes like others. Now, they talk about the low rate of transportation, which was 4½ cents per hundred pounds last year by lake and canal, as though the benefit of that went to the farmer. It is not true. The railroads controlled 100,000,000 of the 135,000,000 bushels that went east. They charged 10 cents per hundred pounds, and when the tramp boats carried wheat for 1 cent a bushel from Chicago to Buffalo the elevator companies came in with their charge and made up the difference. So that while at one time the rate was 4½ cents by lake, instead of 1 cent, the average rail rate from Buffalo to New York was no less than that at the smaller rate.

The elevators at New York charge $10.50 for a thousand bushels, and fifteen years ago they charged $2.50. They now charge $4.50 for shoveling. Fifteen years ago, when they had no steam shovels, they only charged $2.50. It is the tramp boats and the smaller class of boats, carrying 2,000 tons and less, that come in and carry this wheat to Buffalo and there meet the canal, that are instrumental in regulating the freight rate. If you leave this matter to the boats that are connected with the railroads they will charge 15 cents next year, instead of 10, and you will have killed the goose that laid the golden egg.

Mr. CASTLE. Is it not true that the greatest amount of wheat that was hauled from Duluth to the East was hauled by the big steamers owned by the railway companies?

Mr. WHITING. I hardly think that is true.

Mr. CASTLE. Well, I know it is. Did not the sixteen big steamers owned by the Great Northern Railroad, and the whalback, owned by Mr. McDougal, haul 90 per cent of the wheat that was hauled?

Mr. WHITING. Not at all. There were hundreds and thousands of boats engaged in carrying wheat at the time. These boats that carry wheat at 1 cent a bushel were last year forced to do it. The railroads charter from Chicago and Duluth to the ports of export at 10 cents per hundred. The local charge from Buffalo east is 6½ cents, the elevator charges and other charges say 2½ cents, only leaving 1½ cents for the tramp boats. The company's boats got their share of the 10 cent charge; whatever is agreed upon, as it is only a matter of bookkeeping.

I say that it is a fact that seven-tenths of the vessel owners of the lakes do not want this bill to go through in this shape. They believe that it will lower the waters in the harbors bordering the Great Lakes. That it will further lower the waters in the lakes, and they do not believe that ought to be done. I hope that it may be postponed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to a matter which is not particularly included in this bill, but which I hope to have put into the bill by way of an amendment. In the river and harbor act of 1888, Congress undertook for the first time to regulate the mode by which bridges and other structures erected over navigable streams by the authority of the various States should be removed. Sections 9 and 10 of that act are as follows:

SEC. 9. That whenever the Secretary of War shall have good reason to believe that any railroad or other bridge now constructed, or which may hereafter be constructed, over any of the navigable water ways of the United States is an obstruction to the free navigation of such waters, by reason of insufficient height, width of span, or otherwise, or where there is difficulty in passing the draw opening or the raft span of such bridge by rafts, steamboats, or other water craft, it shall be the duty of the said Secretary to give notice to the persons or corporations owning or controlling such bridge to so alter the same as to render navigation through or under it free, easy, and unobstructed; and in giving such notice he shall prescribe in each case a reasonable time in which such alteration is to be made. If, at the end of such time, the alteration has not been made, the Secretary of War shall forthwith apprise the Attorney-General of the United States, whose duty it shall be to institute suit, in the name of the United States, without delay, in the circuit or district court of the United States for the circuit in which such bridge is located, which court is hereby invested with jurisdiction for this purpose, to recover from the owners or managers of such bridge the fines mentioned in the succeeding sections of this act.

SEC. 10. That whenever the owner or owners or manager or managers of any railroad or other bridge obstructing the free navigation of any navigable water way of the United States who shall willfully fail or refuse to remove the same, or to cause the necessary alterations to be made in the same so as to render navigation through or under it free, easy, and unobstructed to rafts, steamboats, or other water craft, after receiving notice to that effect from the Secretary of War and within the time prescribed by him, shall be subject to a fine as a penalty therefor of $500 per month for the time he or they are in default, and the amount so recovered shall be placed to the credit of the improvement fund of the water way obstructed by such bridge.

This act, in the judgment of the committee, not proving efficient, an amendment was adopted in the last river and harbor appropriation bill making it much more stringent. That amendment is as follows:

SEC. 5. That section 10 of the river and harbor act of August 11, 1888, be amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

That if the persons, corporation, or association owning or controlling any railroad or other bridge shall, after receiving notice to that effect as hereinbefore required from the Secretary of War, and within the time prescribed by him, willfully fail or refuse to remove the same, or to comply with the lawful order of the Secretary of War in the premises, such persons, corporation, or association shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000; and every month such persons, corporation, or association shall remain in default in respect to the removal or alteration of such bridge shall be deemed a new offense, and subject the persons, corporation, or association so offending to the penalties above prescribed.

Now, there is a case arising in the State of Kentucky, in the city of Frankfort, which seems to me to illustrate how exceedingly dangerous such a general provision is and how very unjust it may be in its operation. In 1810, long before the United States Government undertook to take possession of the interior waters for the purpose of improving them, the State of Kentucky authorized the construction of a bridge over the Kentucky River to unite the two portions of the then town of Frankfort, the capital of the State.

By various enactments that bridge became the property of the city of Frankfort and of the county of Franklin, in which the capital is situated, and became a free bridge. As I have already said, it was erected many years before the Congress of the United States undertook to improve the interior waters. Indeed, the State of Kentucky itself built five locks and dams on that river under a system of internal improvements upon which it entered some fifty years ago.

This bridge, therefore, was a perfectly legal structure, and I doubt whether in any court it would now be held to be an obstruction. But, by the acts of Congress quoted above, the Secretary of War is made the sole judge as to whether it is an obstruction or not. Now, in such cases the Secretary of War refers the subject to the Chief of Engineers, and the Chief of Engineers intrusts it to some lieutenant who is learning the art of engineering by constructing improvements under the authority given by Congress with the appropriations which we here make. So that in point of fact a bridge erected some eighty years ago, erected under the authority of the State, owned altogether by the people, no corporation interested whatever, is now to be removed without any hearing before any judicial tribunal, and really upon the order of a lieutenant of engineers.

I desire to put into the RECORD a statement of the history of the bridge prepared by the citizens of Frankfort, together with a petition which they have sent me to present, and at the proper time I shall move that the cost of the alteration in the bridge shall be paid by the United States, or that such amendment shall be made in the bill as will give to these good people a chance to have the question tried by a judicial tribunal and not by the mere arbitrary action of an executive officer.

The Frankfort Bridge Company was incorporated under an act of the Kentucky Legislature in the year 1810, and under said act a toll bridge was erected in the city of Frankfort and operated until the year 1880, at which time an agreement was entered into between the city of Frankfort and the said bridge company to make said bridge free, and under said agreement the franchises, rights, stock, etc., were purchased by said city, and since that time the bridge has been free to all the traveling public. The State of Kentucky controlled the Kentucky River after said bridge was purchased by the city and made free, and the transfer of the authority of the State to the United States Government of the river, locks, dams, tollhouses, etc., was made after said bridge was purchased and made free. The city paid $19,000 for all the corporate rights and franchises of the said bridge company, and one-third interest in these rights and franchises was afterward transferred to the county of Franklin for valuable consideration. The Secretary of War, under an act of Congress, has given notice to the authorities of the city of Frankfort and county of Franklin that said bridge is an obstruction to the navigation of said river, and that it must be altered or changed by September 1, 1892.

The navigation of this stream has existed for fifty years or more, and said bridge was erected according to the requirements of the act of incorporation. All the rights and franchises of same are owned entirely by the county of Franklin and city of Frankfort and made free to the traveling public by them.

The Federal Government should appropriate a fund sufficient to pay for the old structure at its actual value, and to secure this we request our Representatives and Senators in Congress to have the river and harbor bill amended, appropriating at least $50,000 to aid the city and county in reconstructing this bridge.

Given under our hands this 4th day of April, 1892.

Whereas the Secretary of War has given notice to the county of Franklin and city of Frankfort to alter or change the bridge on St. Clair street, crossing the Kentucky River, in Frankfort, Ky., so that it will not be an obstruction to the navigation of said river; and

Whereas said bridge was purchased and made free to the traveling public by the present owners; and

Whereas the citizens of this city and county believe the Federal Government should appropriate a sufficient sum of money to pay the city and county for the value of the present structure: Therefore,

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting of citizens and taxpayers of this city and county that our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to use all honorable means to secure aid from the Federal Government to reconstruct this bridge, and that a memorial be signed and transmitted to our Congressmen urging their request.

PAT. McDONALD,
HUGH RODMAN,
WASH. T. CRUTCHER,
R. K. MCCLURE,

Committee.

There is a class of bridges built over these interior rivers by railroad companies which do obstruct. As to those I have nothing to say; but the State of Kentucky long ago adopted what is now being attempted to be introduced in various other States, a system of admirable turnpikes, between which and the railroads I doubt very much whether the advantage to the neighborhood is not in favor of the turnpikes. It is the best system of roads, I presume, in America, and is second only to the magnificent system which exists in France and in certain other parts of Continental Europe. In connection with these turnpike bridges were built over the streams.

Now, the Congress of the United States substantially bankrupts several of these turnpike companies by requiring the removal of bridges built over the rivers many years ago, under authority of the Legislature of Kentucky, which at that time had sole control over the interior waters of the State, and it seems to me that this Congress ought to provide in some way that before such injustices shall be worked, and worked under the pretense of prejudice against railroad corporations, there shall be at least a hearing before some judicial tribunal. And that as to the bridge at Frankfort it is only just that the cost of alteration should be appropriated in this bill. To require the people of Frankfort and Franklin County to pay this sum is simply to mulct them in that amount over and above their ratable share of the taxes needed to meet these appropriations. They purchased the bridge many years after its erection in accordance with law, and this is practically a confiscation under the forms of law of their money.

That is all I desire to say on that subject.

Now, if I have a minute left, I want to say a word as to the contract system. I suppose I am entirely impartial in this matter, because the State of Kentucky does not get anything under the contract system. It seems to me to be a good system, but I think we ought to be fair and frank about it. We ought not to pretend that our bill carries only $21,000,000, when it really carries $47,000,000. Let us frankly say to the country that we have, in the exercise of our discretion, authorized the expenditure of $46,000,000 or $47,000,000 instead of $21,000,000, and let us go to the country upon the proposition that it is a fair, just, and proper expenditure, and not upon any idea that we are an economical Congress, spending only $21,000,000 for these objects.

Mr. BLANCHARD. In making the statement that this bill carries $47,000,000 instead of $21,000,000, does the gentleman mean to be understood to say that this bill appropriates more than $21,000,000?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. My friend from Louisiana, by the question that he asks and the play upon words which he makes, illustrates what I mean. Do not let us play upon the expression "carries," or "appropriates," or "sets apart," or "makes an obligation," or any other phrase that a skillful phrase-maker may be able to construct. Let us frankly say, as is indubitably the fact, that the bill which the committee reports is a bill which in the end obliges the Treasury of the United States to pay $47,000,000, for in dealing with a people like ours, with a treasury like ours, and in the name of a government like ours, the making of a contract is substantially the same as the appropriation of the money to pay the contract.

Therefore, I repeat, without saying whether these are the particular items which ought to have been selected, without undertaking to criticize them in the few minutes that I have left, or saying that I would undertake it if I had more time, that I think the Democratic party owes to the people who have entrusted it with control of this House to deal with them with absolute frankness. Let us say frankly that we do put upon the taxpayers of the country the burden of raising $47,000,000 for objects for which we think it is just and fair to pledge our revenues to that extent. That, Mr. Chairman, is all that I desire to say.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to content myself by casting my vote in favor of this bill and remaining silent until the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WHITING] saw fit to attack in the manner in which he has the appropriation carried in the bill for the deep water way on the lakes. His statements partake so much of fancy and imagination and have so little foundation in fact that it is impossible for me, in justice to the great commercial interests of this country, and especially in justice to the interests of those who are engaged in the commerce of the Great Lakes, to let them go unanswered.

The gentleman's first statement was that the project of a deep water way was asked for and had been advocated by the railroad interests and the elevating interests of Buffalo and other ports along the line of the lakes. That statement I have submitted to the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and I am informed by him that not a single person in any manner whatever connected with any of the interests named by the gentleman from Michigan has directly or indirectly appealed to the committee, or to any member of this House so far as he knows, in regard to the deep water way along the line of the lakes. And, sir, I stand here as one of the Representatives of the great commercial interests of the lakes, especially at the city of Buffalo, which is one of the great ports of the commerce of the lakes, and say that in not a single instance outside of the lakes vessel interest large and small alike and the commercial interest has the deep water way been suggested or spoken of except as it was connected with the general welfare and the general advancement and prosperity of the commercial interests of this great country.

The deep water way is in the interest of the people and cheap transportation and not in the interest of any railway, elevators, or corporations.

The commerce of the lakes is increasing annually in importance. It is greater now than the commerce upon any like water way in the world. The port of Buffalo is the largest receiving port of grain in the world. Its coal shipments are of great magnitude. The great Northwest is the beneficiary of cheap coal freights. All the people are interested in this appropriation.

The gentleman says further that the interests of the smaller vessels—the "tramp vessels" as he calls them—are all opposed to it; that this is the sentiment of seven-tenths of the vessel interests on the lake. Why have they not been before Congress? Why have they not come before this committee, at least some of them, and protested against the passage of this bill? Not one of them has been here. The fact is they favor this bill.

Now, as a plain business proposition, what are the facts in regard to transportation upon the lakes? The vessel-men have found it necessary, in order to compete with the railroads, in order to give cheap freights to the people of the Northwest and of the whole country bordering on and connecting with the lakes, to have larger vessels; and those vessels are engaged in carrying 90 per cent of the grain passing down the lakes. They carry 90 per cent of the coal also on their return trip. They are large vessels. They do this as a matter of business, in order to make the transportation as cheap as possible to the freight transporters of the country. They take the grain at Chicago, at Duluth, at Superior City, and bring it to Buffalo; then they carry back a load of coal. They do not enter into competition at all with the small vessel-owners whose craft stop at intermediate points along the line of the lake. They make without stoppage the trip from Duluth to Buffalo and from Buffalo back to Duluth or Chicago, or whatever other point it may be. They do not come into competition with the smaller vessels, but they do come as the great benefactors of the coal and bread consumers of the country, furnishing the transportation that affords to the farming interests of the Northwest the means of getting their wheat to the markets of the world at the cheapest possible price. And they come now and ask of Congress that this great improvement which has long been demanded and which is in the interest of every manufacturer and every agriculturist and every commercial man in this country may be made, so that vessels may go through safely and with despatch from one port to another.

One word only in addition. There has been from the beginning of this Congress to the present time a declaration daily put forth of the necessity of economy. I believe in the general proposition of economy; but I am opposed to that economy which deprives the people of this country of their just rights and their just dues in the matter of transportation, in matters that enter into the everyday life of the citizens of the country. And I say to you that the people of this country, the Democratic party of this country, care not how much money you spend on behalf of the commercial interests of this country, provided it is appropriated and expended in the interests of the people honestly and fairly. [Applause.]

This is not a question of economy; it is a question of generous, open-handed business, upon the same plane upon which any business man would deal with his own business. The people of this country will say "Amen" to the expenditure of any amount of money expended in that way and for such purposes. Thank God, the people of this country have not reached a point where a penny-wise and pound-foolish policy will receive their approval.

Mr. BAILEY. Then why did you abuse the Republicans for spending a billion dollars in the last Congress?

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I did not abuse them at all on that proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. BAILEY. Then I desire to say that it is not the first time the gentleman has been out of harmony with the Democratic party.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I will say that I have been in harmony with the Democratic party ever since I was 12 years old, and I expect to be the rest of my life. But I am not in harmony with any party or with any set of men that refuse to make the necessary appropriations to carry on work which is for the general interest and welfare of all the people of the country, whether Democrats or Republicans. They demand economy, but not parsimony. [Renewed applause.]

Mr. BAILEY. Let me ask a further question. In 1860, when the Democratic party turned over the administration of the Government to the Republicans, the expenses of the Government were something over $60,000,000 and our population 31,000,000. To-day our population is a little more than double, while our expenses have increased eight-fold. Now I desire to ask the gentleman to reconcile this for me: Democrats have always contended that as the population of the country increases you ought to decrease the per capita expenses; and we have arraigned the Republicans for not accomplishing such a reduction. Yet now from a New York Representative, as well as in an editorial from a New York newspaper, we have the novel instruction given to Democrats that it is commendable to make extravagant appropriations.

Mr. PICKLER (to Mr. BAILEY). What item would you strike out of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] is not in order. The gentleman from New York is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LOCKWOOD. I will try to answer the question of the gentleman fairly and thoroughly.

The Democratic party, sir, in the olden time, and at all times, have found fault with appropriations and expenditures only because they claimed that they were not honestly and fairly made and expended. My criticism of the Fifty-first Congress was based upon unnecessary and improper appropriations—extravagance I always condemn. But the Democratic party of the great State of New York, and I believe of the whole country, with some slight exceptions, does not find any fault with expenditures that are made in the interest, and in the common interest, and for the welfare of the whole American people.

This country, sir, is marching with gigantic strides every year in prosperity and wealth, and the people, one and all, require each year as they advance more and more for their happiness, more and more for their comfort, and they ask of this Government such appropriations as will keep pace, step by step, with the march of progress, and with the spirit of advancement of the age. That is the demand of the Democratic party throughout the country, and that is the just and the proper demand of the whole American people. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

[Mr. ENOCHS withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] is recognized.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, if any objection can be made to the river and harbor bill, it must be upon the ground that it is insufficient in amount. In every other respect it can challenge the closest criticism. Those who are acquainted with the wants of the commerce of this great nation at the present time, and who have carefully examined the statistics of the country, will agree, I think, that the sum which is appropriated in this bill, amounting to $20,932,445, is not responsive to the urgent demand of the nation's commerce. It should have been at least $40,000,000 or $50,000,000.

In the next ten years it will be less difficult for Congress to pass a fifty-million-dollar bill than it is to-day a twenty-five-million-dollar bill, and to-day it is easier to pass a twenty-million-dollar bill than it was ten years ago to pass a bill appropriating $10,000,000. If the last Congress was characterized as a billion-dollar Congress, it must not be forgotten that this has become to be a billion-dollar country, and in the next ten years it will be more and more in proportion a great and glorious nation among the nations of the earth.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us look for a moment and observe the character of the estimates in this Congress, and those which were presented at the last. The estimates submitted to the Fifty-first Congress amounted to $39,535,000. The allowances upon those estimates were $20,932,445. The estimates to the Fifty-second Congress were $69,814,954, and the allowances as the bill is reported to this House are $21,290,975. The estimates to the Fifty-first Congress exceeded those to the Fifty-second by $30,279,921, while the allowances of this Congress are only $358,530 above those of the Fifty-first Congress. And yet some gentlemen speak of the extravagance of this bill.

Permit me to suggest that appropriations which are inadequate and insufficient are of themselves extravagant. It is not economy, as has been so fully shown in the reports of the various engineers of the Government, to appropriate amounts which are only a fraction of the sum necessary to complete an improvement. Ninety new projects were favorably reported to the committee from the Engineer Department, and of those ninety projects but twenty-five were adopted by the committee. The committee were impressed with the idea that in this Chamber there is even yet considerable opposition to liberal river and harbor appropriations, and therefore endeavored, timidly as I conceive, to make the limit of the bill satisfactory to the most conservative friends of water-way improvements. It should have been kept up to the high standard of the progressive demand of the people.

Public sentiment in this country has wonderfully changed within the last ten years. Of all the Representatives of this House who appeared before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors—and I assume that at least three-fourths of them appeared before the committee—it was the general judgment that this river and harbor bill should have been reported to this House for at least $25,000,000, and many of them expressed the opinion that it should have been $40,000,000, in order to give something like a reasonable per cent of the $69,814,000, which was recommended by the Engineer Department as absolutely necessary for the proper improvement of the water ways of this country.

Look, if you please, and what are the expressions from the various party conventions of the country? Democratic, Republican, and third party, wherever they have expressed themselves in the South, the West, and in the Northwest, the expression has been in favor of liberal appropriations for rivers and harbors. And so it is all throughout our vast domain. Great changes, in the popular judgment, have occurred even within the last eight years. Many Representatives from the New England States who were defeated but a few years ago, because of their votes in favor of a river and harbor bill, would to-day be defeated because of their votes against it. Ridicule and burlesque were made use of to prejudice opinion by unfriendly allusions to items in the bill.

Even names of creeks and rivers were referred to for purposes of humor and merriment. Motives of individuals were traduced because of the support given by them to liberal river and harbor bills. The bills themselves were characterized as jobs, as bills containing individual speculative schemes, and so forth, and everything in that line was done in order to bring the bill into disrepute. Prospects for such navigable streams as that of New Town Creek were referred to laughingly; but when the reports came in it was found that even on New Town Creek, small as the name would indicate the commerce to be, the imports and exports of that water way amounted to $22,045,745, and that 9,272 vessels were entering and departing every year.

Buttermilk Channel was another subject in the bill for considerable humor and wit, and, yet, when the commerce of Buttermilk Channel was examined into it was found that there were 3,958 vessels arriving and departing during each year. So of Otter Creek in Vermont, for which improvement only $5,000 was allowed, many a jovial laugh went round the House, but Otter Creek disclosed a most creditable showing, with 48 ships arriving and departing each year, with freights decreasing and business rapidly increasing and tenfold more than was appropriated by the Government coming back to the people.

The result all over this country is the same, as was remarked yesterday with reference to what was being done on the smaller ivers, and shows how far these appropriations go in reducing freights and inducing commerce. It was asserted that whenever an appropriation has been made and expended for these smaller places, the result shows a difference in freight rates which inure to the benefit of the consumer, the producer, and the shipper far more than equal, and sometimes doubling and trebling the amount of the appropriation under which the improvement was made; and so it is in regard to the aggregate commerce which immediately follows.

Take, as an instance of water-way benefits, the system upon the Great Lakes, which has been referred to by the chairman of the committee, where grain is now shipped from Chicago to Buffalo, over a thousand miles, for the insignificant sum of 1 cent a bushel; grain being sometimes carried from Duluth to Buffalo, about the same distance, for even less per bushel, whereas by rail the charge is thrice as much.

Coal is carried by water from Pittsburg, Pa., to New Orleans, 1,800 miles, for only $1.35 a ton, and if a few obstructions were removed near the city of Pittsburg, it is said an additional reduction might be made of 25 cents per ton.

What this means to the millions of consumers of limited means, who always enjoy the first benefit of reduced rates in a cheapened market, they alone can best testify.

Look, if you please, to that remote but fertile portion of our vast country facing the Pacific Ocean, and especially upon the Pacific Northwest. In the States of Idaho, Washington, and Oregon, east of the Cascade Mountain range, it is estimated that 18,000,000 bushels of grain were produced in the last year. Now, it costs an average of 16½ cents a bushel to freight what is exported by rail alone over a distance not to exceed 300 miles, either to Portland or to Puget Sound, whereas if obstructions at two reaches in the Columbia River were overcome it is estimated this immense grain yield could be transported by water for 5 cents, or, at the most, 7 cents, from the farthest wheat fields of that magnificent country to the seashore or to deep water at The Dalles, where it could be loaded on ocean vessels and conveyed to any port of the world. When we realize that in the past year there was an exportable product of about 13,000,000 bushels of wheat and 9,000,000 pounds of wool, and that for the future there is an area of 12,000,000 acres adapted to wheat culture, we can conceive of the immense profits which are to inure to the producers of that vast region when an unobstructed and continuous navigation of the Columbia River shall be secured.

The results already accomplished to the people in the Columbia River Valley and a great area tributary to it are astonishing. The entrance to the Columbia was but a few years since the terror of the navigator. Injurious reports, too often exaggerated, were circulated among shippers over the world as to the dangers which lie in wait for every large ship which dared the crossing of the bar. Shipping was thus greatly deterred from entering and competing for the trade. Insurance was high, pilotage proportionately so, and freight rates amounted to a monopoly, since competition among large ships was not to be had. The market being mainly at Liverpool, and the long distance thither requiring the larger class of vessels, in order to leave any margin to the producer and shipper, was another obstacle which only deep water on the bar could remove.

Much of our grain exports went to San Francisco on smaller vessels, and was there transhipped on those of deep draft and conveyed to Europe. Oregon seldom received credit for much of this export, since it was accredited to California, from whence it finally cleared. In this way our producers paid $2.50 and even $4 per ton in excess of the rates to Europe paid by the California producer. All of these drawbacks and injustice, thanks to the policy of liberal water-way improvement and to generous appropriations by the General Government, are now overcome. The Columbia River bar is a thing of the past.

The mighty waters which ebb and flow over those treacherous sands are now confined within the strong headlands to the north and the 4½ miles of enduring jetty walls built by man and aided by nature on the south, and the great currents thus controlled within fixed and permanent bounds are made to do faithful and effective service in maintaining a deep and safe channel rather than producing one of insecurity and uncertainty. Before the improvement the depth was about 19 feet at low water, while now it has reached a depth of about 30 feet, the minimum sought to be obtained in the project of improvement. To-day the largest ships afloat can enter and depart without difficulty. Freights have been reduced, pilotage lowered, insurance decreased, and detentions prevented. It will be interesting to the world to learn the magnitude of the commerce which passes from this great river to swell the volume of our nation's exports.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.

Accompanying Maj. Handbury's report is a statement from Customs Collector Earhart, of Portland, showing the shipping business of the port for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1891. Exports were $5,254,957, imports $1,214,515.33, and receipts $613,829.80. During the year 276 vessels of 336,621 tons arrived, and 280 of 335,128 tons cleared. There is also a statement from the collector of customs of Astoria, giving the exports at $835,488, imports $110,885.43, duties collected $41,477.39. During the year 719 vessels of 650,460 tons arrived, and 678 of 601,609 tons cleared.

There is also a statement from the Merchants' Exchange of Portland, showing that during the year ended June 30, 433 vessels of 459,247 tons crossed the Columbia River bar, inward bound, as compared with 451 vessels and 423,008 tons in 1889-'90; and 458 vessels of 448,909 tons crossed out, compared with 452 vessels and 426,004 tons last year. Appended is a comparative statement of principal exports for the past ten seasons:

Where is the American who can not take pride in a review of such magnificent exhibits from that distant portion of the Republic, where but a few years ago the poet exclaimed:

Where rolls the Oregon and hears no sounds,
Save his own dashings.

Referring to still other benefits derived by our people from river and harbor appropriations, I could justly mention the Willamette River navigation, which from Eugene City to Portland has been greatly advantaged by annual work upon its bars and other obstructions, and which navigation has enabled the producer at all times to maintain such an equality of freight rates as to prevent unreasonable charges by the railways which flank the river on both sides. Then, there is the Yaquina Bay, which in this connection should be mentioned most strongly as one of the greatest equalizers of water-way transportation charges in the Pacific Northwest.

With this outlet to the ocean the grain fields and orchards and factories of the Willamette Valley are in daily communication by a line of railway. Five cents a bushel more for the farmers' products near its valley terminus is paid since completion, than ever before. Coos Bay, on the south, has reaped great benefits within even the past year by the energetic prosecution of its jetty work. Its lumber, coal, fruits, and manufactured products, which in 1890 were exported to the value of $3,000,000, not only find quicker and more certain shipments than heretofore, but at lesser rates. The Coquille, though one of the smaller works which some gentlemen assail so venomously and with so little knowledge, shows one of the best of records. Since the commencement of deepening its entrance freights have been reduced from $10 to $2.50 per ton, and the commerce has increased from 500 tons of imports and exports to 5,000 tons, and is of the value of $750,000 and rapidly becoming greater. That fertile region has grown to its present condition of prosperity as a result of these improvements.

Tillamook Bay, another important water way in my State, is now on the bill for a more thorough improvement than heretofore devised. The bay is 6 miles wide and 15 miles long, and the spruce, fir, and cedar timber of commercial value upon the bay and its tributaries is said to exceed 52,000,000,000 feet.

The Siuslaw River, with an estimated lumber product in its marvelous forests of commercial timber, has been selected for an elaborate system of jetty improvement and merits the most generous attention on the part of Congress. Freights, which are now $6 per ton, will, when a deep and fixed channel is obtained, not exceed $2.50 per ton. Within the watershed of the Siuslaw Valley there are at least sixty townships containing an aggregate of 17,280,000,000 feet of merchantable timber.

The Umpqua River, still another important stream, has an entrance deep and safe for all present commerce, but the upper river, at and below Scottsburg, has been undertaken for improvement, which is now in progress, and which, when completed, will enable steamers of reasonable draft to ascend at all stages of the tide, and by a reduction of freight rates encourage the producers to increase their annual output for the San Francisco markets.

The Nehalem River valley, which possesses some of the finest timber of the Pacific coast and estimated as it stands in the forests at 25,000,000,000 feet, and which also contains coal of superior quality, is also entitled to the attention of the Government. Upon surveys and estimates authorized the last Congress appropriated $10,000 for the commencement of jetty work so as to deepen the existing channel of the river over the bar and thus admit of larger vessels and hence encourage the development of so much natural wealth, but I regret to say the local engineers, like many members on this floor, believe that to entitle a project to their favorable consideration and sympathy it must have considerable existing commerce to justify an expenditure of public money, seemingly forgetful of the fact that without a navigable outlet to the markets the natural wealth which exists in abundance can not be utilized, and hence must remain locked up from the world's commerce.

If in the judgment of the engineers the resources seeking development are such as to warrant encouragement by an improvement of the water way to the open seas, and thereby produce a profitable commerce to the people, they should not hesitate to recommend with earnestness such plan and such estimates of reasonable cost as will produce the desired end. It is hoped that it is not too late in this Congress to secure sufficient appropriation to commence active work at the Nehalem River. The present bill authorizes examinations, with a view to the improvement of navigation of the Nestucca, Coos, Chetco, and Alsea Rivers, in my State, and of the examination of the Rogue River, and for a lock and dam on the Yamhill River. The people upon these water ways are entitled to this consideration by the Government. Improvement of navigation upon these streams will stimulate the development of their varied resources, and open up to profitable commerce some of the most fertile portions of the Pacific coast. My constituents patiently hope, too, that the time will soon arrive when active operations will be commenced upon the Port Orford Breakwater upon the Pacific coast. Years ago the importance of this project was earnestly recommended by a board of engineers.

Everywhere the people are clamoring for cheaper transportation; for it is an established fact that water-way carriage is the cheapest transportation ever discovered. It is also recognized that the value of the crop in the hands of the producer is measured by the cost of transportation. Yes, these are nature's highways. They belong to the people—to the poor as well as to the rich—and they remain as a perpetual menace to all combinations which propose extortionate rates of carriage by land at all places near the water way. Land aid given to railways belong to the companies which own them; but every dollar expended for the navigable water ways belong to the people. Year by year the country increases its appreciation of the value of the nation's rivers and harbors.

This appreciation is more observable in the present bill than ever before, as is seen in the policy pursued as to the system of placing the greater works under the contract system. This policy was first inaugurated in the bill of last Congress, and the excellent results already obtained has induced the present committee to enlarge upon this system. Experience has demonstrated that where the means are guaranteed and the work done in a shorter space of time, and with machinery of suitable capacity, and upon purchases of material on a large scale, the aggregate cost of the project is far less than under the present system. Foreign nations with centuries of experience adopt this method.

The contract of the Manchester Ship Canal in England is for $28,002,500, and the Cherbourg Breakwater in France was contracted for $13,372,000. The expenditure for the Manchester Canal alone exceeds what we are now allowing for the next two years for all the works of our great nation. In the case of the jetty work at the mouth of the Columbia River, funds were supplied in such liberal appropriations as to enable the Government to contract for much of the work, and the result shows a saving under the original estimate of $1,847,500, and the whole project practically completed several years sooner than expected.

A great saving in time and money will be had by placing the Cascade Canal and locks on the Columbia under the contract system, and it is confidently hoped now that within two years will witness the completion of this great work, when, under the old policy, perhaps ten years would have elapsed, and then the cost would have greatly exceeded the most liberal estimates.

In the present works under contract the Chief of Engineers informs us that at Philadelphia the saving will reach the enormous sum of $3,600,000; Galveston, $700,000; Baltimore Harbor, $94,500; Hay Lake Channel, $900,000, and Sault St. Mary, $768,000. In another Congress we can venture to take another progressive step forward and include other great works under this excellent system. Then the producers of the vast empire of the Upper Columbia River Valley will expect, as the commerce already there has a right to demand, that a permanent project for overcoming the obstructions above The Dalles will be authorized, and energetically prosecuted under contract until it shall be completed; and then will be opened to competition of transportation the proceeds of an acreage greater than some of the mighty empires of the Old World, but which, without such facilities for cheap transportation, must forever remain largely in its wild and neglected condition, only useful for pastoral purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CASTLE. I ask that the gentleman be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] is now recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Chairman, the provision in this bill authorizing the Secretary of War, in addition to the sums herein specifically appropriated for them, to make contracts for the completion of ten designated projects, to be appropriated for hereafter, though bitterly assailed by some gentlemen upon this floor, is in my judgment the most valuable and attractive feature in the whole bill. I have served upon the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for seven years, and during the whole of that time the impression has become more and more fixed upon my mind that some departure was required in the method of improving the rivers and harbors of this country. No man can read the reports of the engineers, yearly submitted to us, without reaching the conclusion that the system under which we have heretofore proceeded, has necessarily been wasteful and extravagant to a very considerable degree.

The trouble has been, Mr. Chairman, that we have not been able under that system of making appropriations for these works, to prosecute them continuously from year to year. Everybody knows, who knows anything upon the subject at all, that for years past we have only been able to pass a river and harbor appropriation bill once in two years. The result has been that at least for one-half of the time there has been a total suspension or cessation of these works, and the necessary consequence of that has been that contractors, understanding that they would only be able to work one-half time, and would be obliged to disband their forces, and incur the trouble and cost of reorganizing them again when another appropriation should be made, and that perhaps they would have to acquire a new plant to continue the work, when it should be, after a long suspension, resumed, have been unwilling to make contracts except at prices sufficiently high to compensate for the labor and annoyance and risk in-involved. If they could have known beforehand that the work would have gone on continuously, they could have contracted for the whole of it, and arranged their plant and forces accordingly, and the Government would have let it at greatly reduced cost.

The best evidence of the truth of what I say, Mr. Chairman, is afforded by the result of the departure made by us in the last river and harbor bill, wherein four large works were placed under the contract system, which we propose by this bill to extend to ten other important works. We have the testimony of Gen. Casey, Chief of Engineers, that there will be an actual net saving of $768,000 on the work at St. Mary's Lock and Canal, which is one of the four placed under contract by the last bill, simply because of the fact that the contractors doing, or providing material for, that work, which requires the organization and employment of a large force, the assembling of an enormous quantity of material, and the preparation and maintenance of an elaborate and expensive plant, seeing that they could cover the whole work by their contracts, and proceed with it without interruption, could afford to do it upon very much lower terms than under the old system.

On the work at the Hay Lake Channel, which is contiguous to St. Mary's Lock, there is a net saving to the Government of $900,000 by reason of the contract system. When we come to the work at Galveston we have an actual cash saving of $700,000. When we come to Baltimore Harbor, a much smaller work, there is a net saving of $94,500; and when we come to the work in Philadelphia Harbor, Gen. Casey amazes us by telling us that they would be able to do the work at 33 1/2 per cent of the estimates submitted as the cost under the old plan. So, Mr. Chairman, on these four great works alone there has been a saving to the Government of over $4,000,000 in money under the contract system, which we propose to extend to ten other important works by this bill, and experience more than justifies us in so doing.

Now, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] objects to this system, because he says that it pledges the Government to proceed with these works in the future until they are completed. Why, sir, nobody doubts that the Government will prosecute these works to completion, whether they are placed under the contract system or not. Even if there were no contracts provided for in this bill, the next river and harbor bill, and the next, and the next, would contain appropriations for the continuance of these works. There is nothing in that sort of argument, because the Government has undertaken the improvement of these rivers and these great harbors and will proceed with it from year to year until it is entirely finished.

So, Mr. Chairman, the question with which we are confronted is not whether we propose to bind the Government to the completion of these works, because the Government is already bound to their completion. Nobody doubts that the work of improving the St. Marys Canal, through which more commerce goes than passes the Suez Canal, would go on whether it is contracted for in advance of the appropriations or not; nobody doubts that the islands which have obstructed the harbor at Philadelphia would be removed whether the work was contracted for in advance of appropriations or not; nobody doubts that the improvement of the Mississippi River, the greatest, noblest, and most useful stream on the American continent, will go on until that river is made absolutely safe and sufficient for the purposes of Western and Southern commerce, whether it is done under the contract system proposed by this bill or not. So the only question is whether we shall prosecute these great and costly works in a business-like way and with a view to economy, instead of by the old, wasteful, extravagant method. I expect such magnificent results to follow this departure that in a few years from now every work of consequence will be put under this contract system.

I remember that a few years ago an appeal was made by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury that he should be allowed to make contracts for the entire construction of all public buildings under his supervision, whether appropriated for entirely or not, he stating that if allowed to do so he could construct them at a very much less cost than under the system then prevailing, which restricted his contracts to the sums already appropriated. Gentlemen will understand that we have not been in the habit, when authorizing the construction of a public building, of providing the whole sum needed; we would appropriate one-third, one-quarter, or one-half the total sum needed, as the case might be, leaving to future sessions of Congress to appropriate the remainder.

Under the old rule the Supervising Architect was only permitted to make a contract for the expenditure of the money actually appropriated, so that he would make a number of separate contracts during the construction of a single public building. But he discovered that if he were allowed to contract for the expenditure of the whole amount necessary, whether appropriated or not, a vast saving would be made. I remember, Mr. Chairman, as you do, that when that proposition came before this House my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] arose here and opposed it, as he seems to oppose everything which is a step forward in government administration if an appropriation of money is demanded. But notwithstanding his protest we granted the authority sought by the Architect, and now the Secretary of the Treasury or the Supervising Architect makes contracts for the entire construction of buildings, whether the whole amount needed be appropriated or not. This policy has resulted in great saving to the Government. We are now simply applying that common-sense principle, so far as we can do so, to the work of river and harbor improvements. But inasmuch as it is something novel, we propose to proceed gradually until we are sure that our expectations will be realized.

I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that on the items placed in this bill under the contract system there will be a saving to the Government of not less than fifteen or twenty million dollars in the completion of these works. I have no sort of doubt about that.

The argument of my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that we have appropriated the $26,000,000 needed to complete the works proposed to be put under the contract system needs no answer. Indeed, I answered his whole proposition, when, while he was speaking a few moments ago, I asked him this question, if the gross amount needed to complete the works placed under the contract system in the last bill was appropriated, by that bill, as claimed, why are we called upon in this Congress to make an appropriation in the sundry civil bill for the prosecution of those works? As a matter of course, Mr. Chairman, the last Congress did not make the gross appropriation. If it did, there would be no need to make further provision for those works in this Congress. I heard the charge made here then; and I protested against it. I told gentlemen they were making a statement not justified by the facts, which, if it had received the sanction of the House, would have hindered a most valuable departure in the system of river and harbor work.

Why, Mr. Chairman, nobody supposes that we are now appropriating $46,000,000 for rivers and harbors, yet such is the fact if the bill appropriates the $26,000,000 needed to complete the works put under the contract system. As a matter of fact, when this bill becomes a law, it will not carry more than twenty-three or twenty-four million dollars; and it by no means follows that the amounts authorized to be contracted for will come in hereafter for appropriation in as large sums relatively as they are named in this bill. For instance, out of the $13,000,000 needed to complete the works placed under the contract system by the last bill, Congress is now called upon to appropriate only $850,000—less than one-thirteenth of the whole sum. So, of this $26,000,000 authorized to be placed under contract, it is doubtful if more than three or four million dollars will be demanded of Congress at the next session.

What I have said applies with peculiar force to the work being done on the Mississippi River. That work covers a vast section of the river stretching from Cairo to the Gulf, a distance of about 1,100 miles. Of course, I speak of the Lower Mississippi, though we, in fact, put the whole river from St. Paul to the Gulf under the contract system. The work there consists largely of bank revetments, for which there must be assembled great masses of stone, willows, poles, quantities of cordage, wire, rope, boats, barges, and a multitude of things required in making and sinking the mattresses with which caving banks are protected. Hundreds of employes are engaged to do the work. The sooner it is done the more cheaply it is done. If, for instance, the contractor for furnishing the stone used for riprap could know beforehand that for the next four years he could have the contract for providing all or a large part of the stone required, I have no doubt he would engage to supply it at one-half what it would otherwise cost. So it is with the levee work.

By the way, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that this bill does not, as charged by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], provide that levees shall be built for the purpose of protecting that country from overflow, without regard to the improvement of the navigation of the river. My friend, it would seem, can not argue this question fairly; he appears to be so warped, so biased, so prejudiced in his mind against this work, that it is utterly impossible for him, desirous as I am sure he is to be fair, to state the facts with regard to the improvement of the Mississippi River as they appear in the reports of the engineer in charge. Since I have been in this House there has never been a proposition made that this Government should construct levees solely for the purpose of protecting the Mississippi Valley from overflow. The engineers propose to aid in levee construction, because it is their opinion that unless the waters during the period of flood tides is confined within levees, the river can not be improved. That is the essential reason why the Government has participated in the work of building levees. In this connection I wish to say that while the Government has contributed quite a large sum to the construction of levees, yet, as compared with that paid by the people living along the banks of the river, it is a very inconsiderable amount.

The people of my district, sir, have expended $20 where the Government of the United States has expended $1 in levees; and the same may be practically said with reference to the whole of this lower valley of the Mississippi. And yet the gentleman from Indiana, Judge HOLMAN, would seriously have this House believe that we are asking the Government to build these levees without any contribution from our own people, solely to protect them from overflows. Why, sir, if we depended upon the General Government alone to protect us from overflow I fear that we would all be compelled to move out of the Mississippi Valley. The Government has not expended enough money to build levees along one-tenth of the distance on one side of the river alone, whereas we have already leveed the river on both sides from Cairo to the Gulf, except the front known as St. Francis Basin. It is true that these levees are not as large or as strong as they should be; but we are daily expending our own money to enlarge and strengthen them, and the work is being pushed forward by our own people steadily. We have in my district, as an illustration of this, a large tax upon every bale of cotton which goes to maintain the levees. In addition to that we have an ad valorem tax of 17 mills or more for the same purpose; and so it goes. I say, sir, that if we had depended alone upon the General Government to build these levees, they would never have been built.

I will not undertake, sir, to exploit before this House the engineering features involved in this work on the Mississippi River. I have several times done so before. It is a most attractive subject to me. I have given to it a great deal of thoughtful attention. I presume that I understand the questions involved about as well as a layman can. I have lived on the river all of my life, and I have had personal observation of the work that has been done. I do not believe that there is any engineering work in this country which has surmounted such obstacles, which has achieved such promise and which has shown such wonderfully successful results as the engineering work along the Mississippi River. If you could see the Plum Point Reach as it was before this work began, and compare it with what it is to-day, as the result of the skillful treatment it has received, it would be a revelation to you, I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman, which would both gratify and startle you.

You would have found before this work commenced a vast expanse of shallow water impossible to navigate, dotted all over with towheads and filled with obstructions, where there now is a smooth, deep channel through which vessels pass and repass without difficulty at all hours of the day or night. If the Government should never expend another dollar upon the river the improvement of the navigation in that reach alone has repaid the people of this country tenfold.

The question was asked on yesterday during the debate on this bill by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. REILLY] whether the reduction in transportation charges throughout the country could be traced to the works of the Government in the improvement of river navigation. I wish to say to him that so far as the Mississippi River is concerned, or at least so far as the transportation upon it of grain and bulky products is concerned, that it is not only traceable to the improvement of the river, but it is absolutely owing to it. Until the Government opened the mouth of the river by means of the Eads jetties and had improved Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches of the river such a thing as carrying grain down the river was absolutely unknown, whereas last year we exported by way of New Orleans 18,000,000 bushels of wheat, at a saving in cost of transportation to the people who shipped it of nearly $2,000,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana, Judge HOLMAN, in addressing himself to this bill, and in reference to the appropriation for the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf, referred to a report made in 1880 or 1882 by a Congressional committee in favor of what is known as the outlet system for the Mississippi River, and beyond that undertook to argue that the appropriation of money for the construction of levees was against the real interests of the river and against the improvement of its navigation. He also stated that he had information from pilots and captains, and steamboatmen, whose names he did not give, that the best way to improve the navigation of the river was to pull out the snags and set up lights.

Now, while the distinguished gentleman has been always opposed to any appropriation for levees, it was not fair that he should call the attention of the House to this one single report without calling attention at the same time to the overwhelming weight of authority on the other side of the proposition.

In 1879 Congress created what is known as the Mississippi River Commission; it was composed of seven members, five of whom were required to be engineers and two civilians.

The board as at first constituted had among its members Mr. James B. Eads, than whom, I suppose, a more distinguished engineer has not lived in this generation. That board, thus constituted, from its first report, made in 1881, I think, down to its last, made last year, advocated exactly the contrary of what the gentleman calls attention to as the report of the Congressional committee. In their first report they said that the construction of levees was a most valuable auxiliary in rectifying the channel of the river and improving its navigation. They have stood by that report down to the present time.

The subject has been under investigation repeatedly before committees of this body and of the Senate, and the most distinguished engineers in the United States have, almost without exception, concurred in the opinion that the construction of levees which would confine the volume of the current of the river, was not only an aid in the improvement of the channel for the purposes of navigation, but was absolutely essential. Now I desire to call attention to what Mr. James B. Eads said upon this subject in connection with the first report of the Mississippi River Commission:

My views regarding the important agency of the levees in improving the low-water channel of the Mississippi River were not expressed in that report with a degree of emphasis which I then desired, and I am unwilling to commit myself now to any expression in the present report which in the slightest degree tends to throw a doubt upon the necessity of or to justify any further delay in the closing of these outlets. On the contrary, I deem it proper to urge with redoubled force the absolute necessity of their immediate closure.

From quotations hereinafter made from the previous report of the Commission it will be seen that it relies upon the increased volume of discharge for scouring more deeply the bed of the river and lowering its floods. The loss of its volume through outlets or crevasses is fully recognized in that report as the cause of the deposition of sedimentary matters in the bed of the river by which its flood surface is raised from year to year.

Observations made by the Commission plainly show that the effect of the present gaps in the levees has been to raise the flood line of the river many inches above any heights previously attained within the 700 miles in which they exist most numerous, between Natchez and the mouth of the Ohio River. Within this distance there have occurred during the last eighteen years innumerable crevasses, aggregating, in 1875, a length of about 100 miles, and throughout this part of the river the deposits have raised its bed so much as to greatly injure navigation, and to cause smaller floods to rise to heights never before attained.

This was the testimony of James B. Eads.

Lieut. Col. Suter, a member of the Mississippi River Commission and a distinguished officer of the United States Army, made these replies to questions propounded to him by a member of the Senate Committee which had this subject under investigation:

Senator GIBSON. You stated a moment ago in reply to a question by the chairman, that if you were improving the Mississippi River, even if it were running through a wilderness, if the country through which it ran were not people, you would still build levees on the banks.

Lieut. Col. SUTER. Yes, sir.

Senator GIBSON. Why do you hold that opinion?

Lieut. Col. SUTER. Because I consider that the improvement of the stream for navigable purposes without it is impossible.

Continuing, he says:

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you think the levee is a part of your system as well as the jetties?

Lieut. Col. SUTER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean to say that these dikes and levees are necessary to preserve the channel of the river itself?

Lieut. Col. SUTER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Permanency of the channel?

Lieut. Col. SUTER. Yes, sir, that is my view.

Capt. Smith S. Leach, for twelve years in charge of work on the Mississippi River, expresses the same opinion.

Mr. Henry Flad, a member of the Mississippi River Commission and an eminent engineer, entertains the same opinion. He says:

The CHAIRMAN. So that your method would be by narrowing the channel to 3,000 or 3,500 feet and then by revetments on the banks?

Mr. FLAD. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And levees outside of those?

Mr. FLAD. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Wherever necessary?

Mr. FLAD. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That you would require only for the purpose of navigation. What I mean to ask is this: Do you say that the interests of navigation require levees and revetments and the narrowing of the river, throwing out of consideration the question of protecting the people from overflows?

Mr. FLAD. I believe that the improvement of navigation demands the narrowing of the river, revetment of shores, and levees properly located and constructed.

The CHAIRMAN. So that if you were on the river undertaking alone to improve navigation, and disregarding the people living on the banks, you would still build levees?

Mr. FLAD. I would.

Mr. H. B. Richardson, chief engineer of the State of Louisiana, concurs in that testimony. He says:

Senator GIBSON. Will you be kind enough to state to the committee your opinion as to the proper means to treat the river, both for navigation and for the protection of the people living in the valley, and in that statement you will discuss, of course, the jetty system, the outlet system, and the levee system?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I believe the plans of the Mississippi River Commission for the improvement of the navigation of the river are correct. I believe the bringing of the river to a somewhat uniform width must result in giving it a somewhat more uniform depth than it otherwise would have. The building of revetments for fixing the bank of the river in some one position, and the building of levees along its banks for retaining its flood waters I think are of greater importance than the channel works. You have had the river improvements so fully discussed, and I so fully agree with what has been said by the engineers who have discussed it, that I will not take up your time by saying anything more than that I generally concur and agree with them.

I wish to insert a report by a number of engineers who have had years and years of experience in the treatment of the Mississippi River, all of whom indorsed the opinions expressed by James B. Eads and the other engineers whose testimony I have cited. The report is as follows:

VICKSBURG, MISS., April 29, 1890.

To the Committee on Resolutions of the Mississippi Improvement and Levee Convention:

Your committee to whom was assigned the duty of preparing a statement on the subject of levees beg leave to submit the following:

The testimony of all engineers familiar with the subject is that there is no engineering difficulty in the way of restraining the floods of the Mississippi River through the agency of levees, and that this is the only agency through which that object can be accomplished. The levees, as they existed at the beginning of the recent flood, were admittedly too weak generally, in height and width, to stand an extraordinary high water, as was recognized and affirmed by all levee engineers.

The fundamental defect in the present system of levee building is that they have not been designed and constructed on engineering principles, in the most thorough manner, with the sole view to certain efficiency, as is the case in all other classes of engineering work; but it has always been a mere question of doing the best that could be done with an insufficient amount of money.

The great desideratum has been to pile up as much dirt as possible in the cheapest possible way, so as to cover the greatest extent of territory with the highest bank of earth obtainable with the means at hand. This consideration has precluded such treatment of the foundations as the character and service of the structures demanded, to which deficiency is attributed much of their failure to successfully resist the extraordinary pressure of this flood at various points. The disasters from the recent flood have been exaggerated and magnified beyond their true proportions by the sensational treatment which the subject has received, and which has tended to shake confidence in the efficiency of the levee system.

In confirmation of this attention is invited to the following facts: In 1882 the total number of crevasses in the levees was 284, aggregating 59.09 miles in width; in 1883 the number of crevasses was 224, with an aggregate width of 24.1 miles; in 1884 the crevasses numbered 294, aggregating 10.64 miles in width.

The result of crevasses enumerated during these three years was a general overflow of the Mississippi Delta. In the present flood, the dangers of which are nearly passed, the crevasses which have occurred number 23, aggregating about $\frac{1}{4}$ miles in width, in a total length of 1,109 miles of levees, or less than one half of 1 per cent of the total line of levees, notwithstanding that the present flood has exceeded those of the three years cited in the height attained at Memphis and at all points below, and has not been exceeded in duration.

This excess of height was, at Memphis 0.5 foot, at Helena 0.6 foot, at Sunflower Landing 1.3 feet, at Arkansas City 2.3 feet, at Greenville 1.7 feet, at Providence 3.1 feet, at Vicksburg 0.1 foot, at Natchez 0.8 foot, and at New Orleans 0.5 foot. The general result has been a large measure of protection afforded by the levees this year, notwithstanding the extraordinary character of the flood, which has never been enjoyed during previous high waters of considerable magnitude.

For example, in the Yazoo Basin between 80 and 85 per cent of its area is protected from overflow, there being only one crevasse of 280 feet in width, affecting a very small area, in 180 miles of levee extending from the upper extremity southward. There were other crevasses on this front below this locality. On the Tensas front are two reaches of continuous levee, being respectively 81 and 125 miles in length. The right bank below Red River has 180 miles of continuous unbroken levee, and the left bank has 209 miles with only one break. Of the territory dependent upon the last-named levees 75 per cent has been protected. The percentages of areas protected as above noted embrace all classes of lands subject to overflow; as the lands sought for cultivation are the more elevated portions, the percentage of their area protected is much greater.

From our knowledge of this subject we now feel justified in declaring that very great progress has been made during the past five years in the construction of a complete levee system by the joint efforts of the General Government and the riparian States, and also that the experience of the present flood has strongly added to our conviction that such a system presents the only solution of the protection of the alluvial valley from inundation in connection with the general improvement of the river. We unhesitatingly express our condemnation of all theories for the regulation of the Mississippi River and controlling its floods by the agency of "outlets." It is our conviction that such a system would prove destructive to all the interests which are sought to be conserved and improved in connection with the treatment of the Mississippi River.

We also state with thorough conviction and emphasis that the belief entertained by some that the effect of long confinement of the Mississippi River by levees will be to produce a permanent elevation of the river bed is a fallacious one, which is refuted by experience and contrary to all observation. We are familiar with all surveys that have been made of the Mississippi and with its present navigation, and declare that there is no evidence from either of these sources or elsewhere of progressive elevation of the bed of the Mississippi River from levees or other cause, except where caused by and immediately below outlets.

We submit the following information relating to expenditures upon the levees from the following sources:

By the United States Government, through the Mississippi River Commission, since 1882.....		$3,018,601.50
The Mississippi levee boards, since 1882.....		3,088,745.74
State and levee districts of Louisiana, since 1869.....		15,255,827.13
Of which since 1882 about.....		5,000,000.00
Arkansas.....		340,417.00

The above do not include expenditures which have been made by counties, corporations, and individuals in several States. We estimate that further expenditure of $10,000,000 by the General Government in cooperation with the riparian States, if promptly applied, will suffice to complete a system of levees that will prove entirely effective to restrain all future floods of the Mississippi River.

Now, the gentleman from Indiana occupies the same position with reference to levee improvements that the Puritans did many years ago with respect to bear-baiting. He has not the slightest objection to the construction of levees, except that they may protect private property from overflow. In so far as they will aid in improving the navigation of the river he has no objection at all, but because they have the incidental effect of protecting the country from overflow they meet with his undying opposition. So it was with the Puritans. They had no objection at all to bear-baiting because it gave pain to the bear, but they seriously objected to it on account of the pleasure it gave to the spectators.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is no money which the United States now spends or has ever spent which is so beneficent in effects as the appropriations which have been used partly in the construction of levees upon the Mississippi River. At this time there would be thousands of acres of valuable, fertile land, covered by water, carrying desolation and destruction to all classes of people but for the expenditure of money which the Congress of the United States has appropriated for the Mississippi River to improve its navigation, and incidentally protect these people from overflow.

The opinions of the gentlemen which I have cited, headed by Mr. Eads and followed by all his successors, adopted by the Mississippi River Commission, and held by many able engineers, is that the construction of levees is necessary to improve the channel and give ease and safety to the navigation of the river. Why, then, Mr. Chairman, if this be true—and there can be no reasonable doubt of it—the Congress of the United States is hardly doing its part by the riparian States, because the State of Louisiana had expended before the war not less than $40,000,000 in the construction of such works. The State of Louisiana and her people have spent in the last four years not less than $10,000,000 of their money for the construction of levees, which, according to the opinions of our ablest engineers, conduce to the improvement of the channel of the river and inures to the benefit of the whole country. All that Congress has ever been asked to do and all that Congress has ever done was to come to the relief of the States and communities and assist in the construction of such levees and improvements as were beyond the means of the State.

Now then, Mr. Chairman, there are a few cranks running at large who have got no more interest in the Mississippi Valley or in the navigation of the Mississippi River than I have in the valley of the Nile, who are telling us that the construction of levees on the banks of the river has a tendency to raise the bed of the river, and that after awhile the river will be running above the surface between artificial walls. I assert, without fear of successful contradiction, that that statement has no foundation either in theory or in fact. The unbroken testimony of the engineers and of residents upon the banks of the river, without exception, is that there is no foundation in fact for such a statement.

On the contrary, it is perfectly evident that the confinement of the river between its banks, or between artificial banks, known as levees, when the river rises above them has a tendency to scour out and deepen the channel; and it is only when the levees give way, and crevasses occur, that the channel becomes obstructed by the formation of bars, which are invariably found a short distance below the crevasses, or other causes which interrupt the flow of the current. This is not a subject of conjecture at all; it is a fact which has been established by official surveys. In 1870 what is known as the Bonnet Carré crevasses occurred just a few miles above New Orleans, and an immense volume of water was discharged through it.

The flow of the water was so great, and it swept out a channel so deep that one of the largest Mississippi steamboats was sucked into it, and got out with a great deal of difficulty. Under the theory that the outlets would relieve the river and carry off the excess of water, that ought to have been the effect of this crevasse, but it had no such effect. It did not affect the river above or below to any appreciable extent, and when the water subsided it was found that the channel had filled up a little below this crevasse some 40 or 50 feet; in other words, that in one season the deposit just below this crevasse, the sediment, had filled up the the river for 40 or 50 feet.

Again in 1890 there was an immense crevasse above New Orleans at the Nita Plantation, which carried out an immense volume of water. Why if the theory had been correct that the outlet would relieve the river and bring it within its banks, that result would have followed then; but it did not do so; a large area of country was overflowed, ruin brought to its inhabitants, and desolation to many homes, but the river brimming full to the tops of the levees flowed on as if no crevasse had occurred. In other words, all this talk about outlets to relieve the river of the water that would go through the main channel rests upon the unsupported statements of people who have no interest in that river, except that they want the job of making some of these outlets. It is repudiated by everybody else. It was repudiated by the Mississippi River Commission, and it has been repudiated by very nearly all scientific men who have investigated and considered this great and once difficult problem.

I say, then, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, that the money which is carried by this bill in aid of the construction of levees, or rather in aid of the improvement of the Mississippi River below Cairo, is the most beneficent appropriation made by this bill or that will be made by this Congress; because, in the first place, it subserves the purpose and object of improving the navigation of that great artery of commerce, which regulates freight rates throughout the West, which gives the West an easy and cheap egress for its products to the markets of the world, and because incidentally it protects from overflow a valley which is 1,000 miles long, and which is the richest and most fertile portion of this Union.

Incidentally, I say, this improvement gives protection to the homes of the rich and the poor, but it is peculiarly beneficent toward the poorer classes of people who cultivate the lands of that great valley, who are dependent upon their daily labor for support, who when inundations cover the valley have been for years forced to become objects of charity to the rest of the country, and to whose relief you have been frequently compelled to come. The beneficent effect of this appropriation is strikingly shown by what has taken place this year.

Here we have a very high stage of water, the country on either side of the river threatened with inundation, but the mud walls are all standing, the fields are smiling, the crops are being cultivated, and if these walls continue to stand the people of that valley will reap the full reward of their labors. But for the money which has been expended in this way we would now be confronted with reports of inundation and disaster, with reports of life and property imperiled or destroyed.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I repeat that there is no question about the propriety of this appropriation. It is the unanimous expression of those who have been intrusted with this great work that the construction of levees directly aids and in most cases is absolutely essential to the proper improvement of the Mississippi and to the obtaining of such a channel as will render that great river navigable at all times. This being the case, I sincerely trust that no gentleman will be prompted by any sentiment of false economy to vote to reduce the appropriations made by this bill, or to vote against the appropriation for the Mississippi River. [Applause.]

[Mr. CLARKE of Alabama withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLARKE] has expired; the time fixed for general debate has also expired. The Clerk will now read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. ENOCHS. I ask to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that leave will be extended generally.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make that request?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir, for those who have spoken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana supplements the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ENOCHS] by asking unanimous consent for general leave to extend remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. For those gentlemen only who have spoken.

Mr. BUTLER. To whom will this leave extend, if granted?

The CHAIRMAN. Only to those gentlemen who have spoken.

Mr. HOLMAN. Some gentlemen request that general leave be granted. I hope there will be no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. To gentlemen who have spoken or to those also who shall speak hereafter.

Mr. HOLMAN. Generally.

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from Indiana is that general leave be granted to print remarks in the RECORD on the pending bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. I object to that, but I am perfectly willing that gentlemen who have spoken may extend their remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ENOCHS] that he be allowed to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the same privilege.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the privilege be extended to all who have spoken in the general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine make that request?

Mr. DINGLEY. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine requests that all gentlemen who have addressed the committee on the pending bill be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no objection to consent being granted except that the Committee of the Whole can not make any order concerning the RECORD. I think it proper to make this remark.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by paragraphs.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Mooseabec Bar, Maine: Continuing improvement, $15,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to this paragraph just read, lines 1 and 2, "for the improvement of Mooseabec Bar, Maine." I would like some one who knows the place to tell us where it is, what it is, to give us some explanation of it. I can not find it on any map, and have searched Johnson's Encyclopedia in vain. I am unable to find such a place as Mooseabec Bar.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman move an amendment?

Mr. BUTLER. I move to strike it out, unless some explanation is given.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will state to the gentleman that this is a point on the coast of Maine in the course of the great coastwise commerce—

Mr. BUTLER. Near what bay or harbor?

Mr. DINGLEY. It is a point near Passamaquoddy Bay.

Mr. REED. Beyond Frenchman's Bay.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is an important point, as there is a great deal of shipping on that coast.

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor of refuge at Little Harbor, N. H.: Continuing improvement, $30,000.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to have an explanation of this item. Where is this harbor of refuge at Little Harbor; near what point? I do not desire to make a motion to strike it out if I can have some explanation of where it is and what it is.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will inform the gentleman that the harbor of refuge at Little Harbor, N. H., is near the city of Portsmouth, on the New England coast. It is a project that has been under way for some years past. Repeated appropriations have been made for improving this harbor. In 1890, $40,000 was appropriated for it, and we recommend in this bill for the continuation of the work there, the sum of $30,000. It is needed to accommodate the shipping on that part of the New England coast, in times of storm. It is a worthy and meritorious project.

Mr. BUTLER. How much has been appropriated for this in the past?

Mr. BLANCHARD. There has been appropriated in the past $70,000 for this harbor of refuge and the engineer reports that it will cost to complete it $165,000 more.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Boston, Mass.: Continuing improvement $145,000, of which $10,000 may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be used in further prosecution of the work in Nantasket Beach Channel.

Mr. BLANCHARD. On behalf of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, I offer an amendment to this part.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 20, after the word "channel," add the following: "And $25,000 in extending main ship channel from its termination at the southeast corner of Grand Junction wharf eastwardly towards Jeffreys Point."

Mr. BLANCHARD. This does not increase the appropriation. It merely directs that $25,000 out of the $145,000 shall be expended at a particular locality in the harbor of Boston.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Lynn, Mass.: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to that clause. It does not affect the appropriation and has the assent of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 22, page 2:

"Provided, That the whole or any portion of this appropriation may be expended on the western channel, in the discretion of the Secretary of War."

Mr. BLANCHARD. There is no objection to that amendment. The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Westport, Mass.: Completing improvement, $1,000.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to ask the gentleman where Westport is, and what is the necessity for this improvement?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman offer an amendment?

Mr. BUTLER. If there is an explanation that is all I desire. If not, I move to strike it out.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANDALL] in whose district this town is located.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Iowa desires to know where the town of Westport is for which this appropriation is recommended.

Mr. BUTLER. What kind of a town, how much there is of it, and the necessity for this work.

Mr. RANDALL. It is a town in my district in the southwestern part of the State of Massachusetts near the dividing line between Massachusetts and Rhode Island. There is a river leading up to this town, which has a population of some two or three thousand inhabitants during the winter months, and which is largely increased in the town and suburbs, in summer. This appropriation is designed to keep open the mouth of the harbor, which fills up in winter, and which requires this outlet deepened to make it navigable for the yachts and other vessels entering and bringing in freight and other things in the summer time.

Mr. BUTLER. What is the traffic on the river?

Mr. RANDALL. Small vessels are there fitted for the whaling business, also the product of the surrounding farms, and large quantities of fish are carried out by vessels to meet the steamers from Providence and Newport to take them to the New York market.

Mr. BLANCHARD. In addition to that I will state that this $1,000 completes a project that was begun two or three years ago, and that it is a place of sufficient importance to justify the expenditure of the $1,000 incorporated in the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not ask for a vote on the amendment, but I withdraw it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Newport, R. I.: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

Mr. PAGE of Rhode Island. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

By Mr. PAGE of Rhode Island:

"On page 4, line 12, after the words 'Rhode Island,' insert the words 'including the removal of the spit at the south end of Goat Island.'"

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman has submitted his amendment to me and there is no objection to it. It does not increase the appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Constructing harbor of refuge at Point Judith, Rhode Island: Continuing construction, $100,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the present project of improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may, from time to time, be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,075,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, there are ten of these appropriations in the bill, involving the contract system, and I suggest that for the purposes of consideration they be taken together to save time; and I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] and to the committee that they consent that these items be considered together, and that a vote be taken upon the whole ten combined—

Mr. BLANCHARD. In the House?

Mr. HOLMAN. In the House.

Mr. CATCHINGS. One vote on all ten.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, we will accommodate the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the request of the gentleman from Indiana? If he will repeat his proposition the Chair will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are ten of these items altogether involving this general project of authorizing contracts to the amount of $36,000,000. I ask that the subject be referred to the House, with the understanding that a vote shall be taken on all of them together in the House.

Mr. BLANCHARD. On all of them at one time. I agree to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. And it is well to agree in advance that the vote shall be by yeas and nays.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have no objection to that either.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first state the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the ten provisions of the bill, known as the contract sections, may be passed over with the understanding that a vote shall be taken upon these sections in the House. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. And that the yeas and nays be considered as ordered in the House.

Mr. BLANCHARD. We agree to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. BUTLER. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask a question in regard to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUTLER. I would be willing to agree to that, if it were simply the question whether we are to have a contract system or not. That is the only thing that is alike in the ten different sections.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. If that is the only thing to be voted upon, and we can contest in the committee here the question as to whether any particular work is a valuable one or not, I would be willing to agree to it; but I would like to ask something about this particular improvement. I am not questioning the advisability of a contract system if we are to do the work at all. I do not wish to yield to this request, and by that be shut out from the consideration of the particular questions involved in each item.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, this harbor of refuge at Point Judith, R. I., is intended to accommodate or to furnish a place of refuge for the very large number of vessels that sail along that dangerous coast. It was adopted in the river and harbor act of 1890, upon the petition of shippers and others in the State of New York and along the New England coast. It was a matter in which the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] took especial interest, representing the shipping interest of New York.

There is, perhaps, no thoroughfare in the United States where as many vessels pass backward and forward as along that particular point of the New England coast, and a harbor of refuge there would result in the saving of millions of dollars of property and in hundreds and perhaps thousands of lives which are endangered by storms that beset that coast. It is in the interest of humanity that this harbor of refuge is being constructed there.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I am aware of the benefits that arise from harbors of refuge; but I find in the very next paragraph an improvement to the entrance of Point Judith Pond. Now, just a short distance from the point there is a pond or cove, and the question that arises in my mind is why it is necessary at that point to build a breakwater or harbor of refuge when within half a dozen miles there is a cove or pond which could be made a harbor of refuge by enlarging the mouth and deepening the entrance at a cost of less than $1,200,000; yes, less than half of that amount.

Why should not the cove be improved and made a harbor of refuge rather than make it at this point, where it is now intended to make it, when it could be made at the other place at so much less cost? I would like that explained so as to make it clear to me.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. PAGE of Rhode Island. I would like to say to the gentleman—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS].

Mr. CATCHINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island. I did not know he was present. It is his work.

Mr. PAGE of Rhode Island. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say in reply to the gentleman from Iowa, in regard to this matter, that Point Judith Pond, where we seek to have the improvement made by this bill, is not of sufficient capacity to accommodate all the shipping that passes along this coast from New York running along the southern and eastern shores of New England; and there is a double purpose for the improvement at this place, which is not merely on account of making a harbor of refuge for vessels, but to improve a very large business interest also.

Here is a petition brought before the committee at this session of Congress signed by several hundred people, business people, of that community asking for this improvement which would accommodate a very large number of people, 24,000 in number, and an area of 292 square miles, with $6,500,000 of value of domestic imports, $3,400,000 of exports in this place, and it would increase the employment of from 300 to 400 men; there are several villages within the territory which would be benefited by this improvement, and forty-three post-offices.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question.

Mr. PAGE of Rhode Island. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no doubt that every one of these improvements is a benefit to the locality, so that there is no argument needed on that point; but the question I wish to ask is this: Is it necessary to improve a harbor of refuge at a point where it is going to benefit some business interests? Is it not wiser to make the harbor of refuge at the very cheapest place where it can be safely and effectively made; and as to this pond, which is not deep enough, will not the $1,250,000, which is to be used at the point provided for in this bill, make the pond deep enough to accommodate the vessels just as well as the expenditure would at the other place? That is the point upon which I desire information.

Mr. PAGE of Rhode Island. No, sir; the breakwater will not. If the improvement were made at that place, it will not in any way benefit the business interests of the community; and the most important matter in this connection is the competition which will be raised between the commerce carried on by vessels and that carried on the railroad. They have to pay almost double and triple freight now to get their merchandise, lumber, and coal to this manufacturing place which can be accommodated by this harbor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this discussion is by unanimous consent. The question before the committee is not debatable. It is the proposition made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], which the Chair will again state to the committee. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the clause which has just been read, and several other clauses, probably ten in number to be designated by the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, shall be passed over informally, with the understanding that a vote shall be taken in the House in gross upon these sections, and a ye-and-nay vote agreed to. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I did not understand the gentleman from Indiana to ask that these various projects coming under the contract system, as they are termed, shall be passed over informally in the committee, but merely that a vote shall be taken upon them together in the House, and a ye-and-nay vote, at that, on that proposition. I do not agree to pass them over in committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair simply meant by passing them over informally that they were passed with the consent of the committee, and with the agreement added to that expressed by the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana. Is there objection?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask whether the agreement was that all ten of them are to be voted on in one ye-and-nay vote?

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from Indiana is that the vote shall be taken in gross upon this contract clause.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Is there no way by which those of us who may be in favor of most of these improvements, but whose judgment might be against one, may have an opportunity to vote that way?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] will agree that if any gentleman desires a separate vote upon any one of these projects that he will have an opportunity to get that vote.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. There may be gentlemen of the committee who have no objection to the contract system, of which I am one, but who might think it would not be well to apply the contract system to all of these propositions.

Some of them may be items that we would gladly vote for, and others may be items that we would not like to vote for.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to agree to the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. If gentlemen desire to object to it, it is their privilege. I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asks again, is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. CAMINETTI. I object, unless consent is given to have a separate vote on each contract.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving entrance to Point Judith Pond, west of Point Judith, R. I., $7,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a motion in reference to the preceding paragraph.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will rise informally for the purpose of swearing in a new member.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair,

Mr. McCREARY said: Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that the Hon. Joseph M. Kendall has been regularly and duly elected a Representative in Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of Kentucky to fill the unexpired term of the Hon. John W. Kendall, deceased. I have here the certificate of election, which, I believe, is in regular form; Mr. Kendall, the member-elect, is here present, and I ask that the oath of office be now administered to him.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the credentials.

The credentials were read at length.

Mr. KENDALL then appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the gentleman from California [Mr. CAMINETTI] will withdraw his objection to my proposition.

Mr. CAMINETTI. I withdraw the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there further objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. DINGLEY. What was the request, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again state it. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asked unanimous consent that the paragraph in relation to the harbor of refuge at Point Judith and the subsequent paragraphs, known as the contract paragraphs, to be designated by the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors [Mr. BLANCHARD], shall be passed with the understanding that a vote shall be taken in the House upon those paragraphs in gross and that a yea-and-nay vote shall be had. Is there objection?

Mr. FITCH objected, but immediately withdrew the objection.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, I think we are wasting time in this way.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there further objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. I object.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving entrance to Point Judith Pond, west of Point Judith, Rhode Island, $7,500.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, in that paragraph there is a clerical error, to correct which I send up the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 4, line 24, strike out "thousand," where it appears the second time, and insert "hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a motion in reference to the paragraph in relation to the Point Judith harbor of refuge. In the confusion I did not have an opportunity to make the motion until the paragraph was passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana for that purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I move to strike out the proviso beginning with and including the word "Provided," in line 16, down to and including line 22. I ask that the portion of the paragraph to which the motion to strike out applies be read again, so that it may be distinctly understood.

The Clerk read the amendment as follows:

Page 4, line 16, after the word "Provided" strike out all down to and including line 22, as follows:

"Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the present project of improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may, from time to time, be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate, $1,075,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated."

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] if he desires to speak to his amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I did not have an opportunity to say anything when the committee was engaged in general debate on this bill, and, as this is the first item in the bill into which the contract system enters, I desire to make a very few remarks at this time.

When it was proposed in the last Congress that we should adopt this system of allowing the Secretary of War to enter into these contracts for the more important works of the country, it was very thoroughly discussed. It was insisted by the Chief of Engineers that if he could have this power conferred upon him it would result in very great saving to the country in the continuation of these public improvements. After full consultation in the committee of conference (I may perhaps say this with propriety) the proposition was finally adopted and submitted to the House. I remember that my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] then told me he thought this a very dangerous power. The actual facts, as has been stated, show that instead of its being a dangerous power it has resulted in very great economy in the expenditure of public money on these great works of improvement.

Last July I visited that great work at Sault Ste. Marie, a work now being constructed at an expense of several million dollars; and while I was there Gen. Poe informed myself and others who were present that the power to make these contracts for the purchase of material for the construction of that lock would result in a saving to the Government of probably about $900,000. I did not know until recently that the saving on the Delaware River at Philadelphia in the great improvement now being made there would be so great; but it seems that even better results will be had there than at the Sault Ste. Marie.

The great trouble in regard to our system of improving our rivers and harbors has grown out of the inadequate appropriations which have been made from year to year. The wastefulness of the system heretofore pursued has been commented upon with very great justice. Some say it is inevitable. I am sorry to see that my friend from Indiana is disposed still to continue without improvement the old system of going on and making appropriations in small amounts. In England I am told whenever they undertake a public work they appropriate the full amount necessary to construct it. And I submit that that would be the true policy for any government to pursue. Not only would it be economical with reference to the expenditure of money, but it would also promote the public interest by giving the public the use of the improvement at a much earlier day.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Perhaps the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] would like more time.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I would like to proceed a few moments longer.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, in this matter we are to consider not only the saving growing out of the contract which we authorize the Secretary of War to enter into, but also the advantage to the country in securing increased facilities at so much earlier a day.

Now, under this system we get the benefit, to some extent, of an annual appropriation. Heretofore we have only been able to pass river and harbor bills every two years; hence, the appropriations being but a small percentage of the estimates of the engineers, have generally been wholly insufficient. In this way, to the disgrace of the country, important works have failed to be properly carried on. Beyond all doubt, there will be under this new system a large saving in the annual expenditure of money on such great works as the St. Marys Canal lock, the improvement of the Hay Lake Channel, and the improvement of the Delaware River at Philadelphia, and, if you please, the improvements at the harbors of Galveston, Charleston, Savannah, and Mobile.

Now, what is the objection to this system? It does not commit the Government to anything but what the Government is already fairly committed to. Does anybody believe that if this contract system were rejected the Government would not go on under the old system and make appropriations every two years for the works at Savannah, Mobile, and other important works now embraced under the contract system? By this policy the Government is not committed to the expenditure of an additional dollar. All these works are important works; all of them have been entered upon by the Government. The Government is already fairly committed to their construction. Therefore it seems to me the better policy to say that we will go on and complete them at the earliest day practicable.

There is a limit to these expenditures. I do not believe that my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], if he were called upon to-day to make these appropriations, would be unwilling to appropriate as much as the engineers or the Secretary of War really require for the purpose of going on with these works. I do not see any danger in this system. It appears to me, as I have remarked, to be in the interest of economy, in the interest of the commerce of the country, and in the interest of the people.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] stands squarely by his own bantling; and he does it well.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I remind the gentleman that it was not my "bantling." I might be proud of it if it were.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think my friend is entitled to claim some honor indeed, especially if the scheme is a good one, although the provision now under discussion was put in the bill of last Congress by the conference committee or by the Senate.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. It was put in in the Senate, not in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, my friend carried it through the House. My friend from Illinois, while standing by this policy, which originated in the last Congress, overlooks the fact that up to this time there has been no opportunity to tell whether it will produce a saving or not. His visit to the Sault Ste. Marie, where a very important work is in progress, certainly furnished no evidence as to the value of the system or its benefits or defects, because he was there, I presume, but a short time.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. If the gentleman will allow me; can he say that, when the engineer in charge of the work there tells me that it will result in a saving of nearly $1,000,000?

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, my friend's judgment on that point is just as valuable as the engineer's. It is a question of the capacity of the public Treasury to bear the drafts to be made upon it by such a system, as well as of the public necessity for the work.

Under that provision, gentlemen, you simply transfer the legislative power of appropriating the public money over to the Chief of Engineers and to the Secretary of War, and for any other purpose connected with the War Department than this the Constitution would come in which forbids Congress to appropriate money for war purposes beyond two years. Then Congress can not abdicate its power of appropriation for a longer period than two years. But here you put your public funds, if you have any in the Treasury, absolutely at the mercy of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War to make such contracts as they please.

There will be another Congress before this $26,000,000 will have been all expended. Do you gentlemen propose to bind that next Congress, when elected and fresh from the people? Do you propose to say, as in the case of the bounty on sugar and the subsidies to shipowners, that your successors shall be bound by contracts they did not authorize and that they can not evade, and that the public judgment shall be put at the mercy of this Congress to the extent of contracts you authorize and which may operate for years perhaps to come? Is that Democratic legislation, is it wise legislation, an abdication of your legislative powers and duties to control appropriations binding your successors; binding the people?

Why, Mr. Chairman, we have charged all over the country that it was almost cowardly to pass the bounty measure on sugar in the form in which it was passed—a permanent appropriation for a term of years—because it seemed to be and was an admission on the part of the Fifty-first Congress that they were not willing to trust the people, and abide by the determination of the people, in the succeeding elections of members to the House of Representatives. And yet you are here adopting the same principle, a principle which had never been adopted until the last Congress, a system which binds our successors and puts the public Treasury at the mercy of contracts made by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers. Why, they may make contracts covering but one year, or for many years, and then the succeeding Congresses must meet the burden no matter what the drain on the public Treasury. Are you willing to do that?

Congress appropriates money for given improvements with reference to the condition of the Treasury, and the resources of the Government, as well as the public necessities. We virtually abdicate that power of controlling these amounts and put it under the control of a subordinate officer of the Government. I do not think that such a policy is either Republican or Democratic. It is anti-American. It is in some degree in conflict with the spirit of the Constitution, because each successive House of Representatives as the immediate representatives of the people has, and ought to have, the guardianship over the public Treasury and should not be bound by oppressive contracts authorized by their predecessors.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Does my friend desire a longer time?

Mr. HOLMAN. I should be glad to have a few minutes more.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. There may be, and I have no doubt that there would be, some saving in some instances if contracts were permitted which would run through a series of years, but in fact it will be an extravagant system.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Before the gentleman proceeds I want to ask him a question in connection with what he is saying. In what way does Congress abandon its right? In the first place the engineer goes to work and makes the survey of the proposed improvement, and he is required to submit it, with an explanation of the work, and Congress takes that report and acts upon it, determining whether it will or will not make the improvement. Congress has exercised this power on all occasions, and all we say is that the Chief of Engineers, or the Secretary of War, may in the mean time make a contract which shall be provided for afterwards if Congress sees proper so to do. That is all there is of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The report of the engineer and his estimates bind no one. This very paragraph answers the question thoroughly and illustrates the spirit of legislation heretofore on these measures of public improvement:

Constructing harbor of refuge at Point Judith, Rhode Island: Continuing construction, $100,000.

There is a large appropriation out of the public Treasury. It is made not only with a view to the work to be performed, or the necessity of the service, but in regard to the condition of the public Treasury. You legislate here with all the facts before you, and make the appropriation direct; this of itself forces economy as the appropriation is made at the time.

But you go a step further here, and are proposing to go in debt and bind your successors, by permitting the Secretary of War to take contracts which will bind them, and contracts which shall continue during a time over which you have no control; the amount named in the law, and that only creating a limit on the Secretary of War. If that is not an abdication of the legislative power, and a deliberate effort to bind your successors, I do not know the meaning of language. Do you know what the condition of your Treasury is to be a year hence? Do you know what necessity or propriety may exist for pressing the construction of several of these works a year or two hence?

Has experience demonstrated to you what the exact cost will be? Do you know whether your Treasury can bear the burden of the contracts, involving many millions of dollars, years hence, while the works are in progress? Yet these contracts will meet your successors face to face and will demand fulfillment. There are at least three of these works as to which you can not tell, without further experience, whether further appropriations should be made or not, and yet you authorize a contract which will be binding upon your successors and from which they can not escape, and you do it in a manner that you would condemn if it had been attempted by your predecessors.

Does any gentleman on this side of the House doubt that Congress should have retained the power to have appropriated annually whatever it might deem necessary as a bounty for the sugar industry, or to the owners of ships, or to have wholly refused to make any appropriation? Do you approve of the policy that binds you and will bind your successors? And yet you are extending the rule of that extraordinary legislation here, so that when this bill becomes a law, if it becomes a law, you will have imposed a mortgage on your Treasury, binding your successors, of nearly $37,000,000 under the last Congress, and this without any reference to the future condition of your Treasury, without any reference to the future need of the public service.

You have the right to appropriate public money; but I think you have no moral right to bind your successors and compel them to appropriate public money. You have no moral right to bind them, even if you have the constitutional power, and say that although a given appropriation may be in conflict with their judgment and in conflict with the judgment of all the people, yet that they shall appropriate, year after year, money to fulfill your contracts.

This Democratic House has never had the question before them before. You approach it now for the first time. The responsibility for the first time is upon you, to determine whether this is the proper kind of legislation to bind your successors or not.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would be glad to, but my time has expired.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I simply wish to ask one question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired, and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] is recognized.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, if the putting of certain works of river and harbor improvements under the contract system be violative of the spirit of the Constitution, if it be un-Democratic and un-American, and so utterly outrageous as claimed by the gentleman from Indiana, it is remarkable that he himself and his Committee on Appropriations, at this very session of Congress, have been guilty of this un-American conduct, this violation of the Constitution, this attempt to bind our successors in Congress, as he puts it. I hold in my hand his report on the sundry civil bill, and in it I find a contract, copied evidently word for word from the phraseology used in the river and harbor bill, for the contracts put in that measure. Under the head of appropriation for the Library building, in the sundry civil appropriation bill, I find the following:

That contracts may be entered into for the ironwork of stairs, roofs, and dome, and marble finish for the halls, corridors, and rotunda, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law.

If that is not exactly on all fours with the very proposition that the gentleman has moved to strike out from this bill, then I do not know what language means.

Again, I hold in my hand the report made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] on the fortifications appropriation bill, and in that bill I find a contract almost word for word the same as the one which the gentleman has moved to strike out. He says in his report:

In addition to the whole sum, $2,412,376, appropriated by the bill for fortification construction, throughout authority is given to make contracts for certain works involving a further expenditure of $1,376,600, to meet which appropriations will have to be made during the fiscal year 1894 and subsequent years.

And I am told by a member of that committee that that proposition was put in the fortifications bill at the instance of the gentleman from Indiana himself.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no. [Laughter.] Who told you that?

Mr. BLANCHARD. A member of the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think not. I think my friend is certainly mistaken about that.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Does the gentleman from Indiana say that that contract in the fortifications bill was not put there with his assent and concurrence?

Mr. HOLMAN. It was not put there with my consent or concurrence either. I am not in favor of that provision.

Mr. BLANCHARD. How about this one in the sundry civil appropriation bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. As to that, I expect the appropriations will be made by this Congress.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I trust when the contract clauses in the two bills I have referred to are reached in the consideration of those bills the gentleman from Indiana will at least have the consistency to move to strike them out, the same as he has done in the bill now before the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would not find it necessary to strike out any provision which I expect to see carried out during the present session of Congress.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I do not yield for a speech. This report from the Committee on Appropriations, which I have just read from, distinctly states that appropriations to meet the payments under the contracts authorized are to be made during the fiscal year 1894 and subsequent years.

And in the one in the sundry civil appropriation bill it says:

Payments under the contract are to be made as appropriations are made from time to time by law.

Now, is that not binding upon our successors as much as the similar provisions embodied in the river and harbor bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. It ought undoubtedly to bind this Congress.

Mr. BLANCHARD. It will bind every Congress until that work is completed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I expect that contract is to be completed by this very Congress—

Mr. BLANCHARD. I might make the same argument that perhaps this harbor of refuge at Point Judith may be completed during this Congress also. So there is no force in the reasoning.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman from Louisiana yield to me for a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield for a question.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desired to ask as to the construction of this item. Suppose that—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman's time will be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Louisiana be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLOUNT. Suppose in the fiscal year 1894 no appropriation should be made by Congress, would this carry any obligation on the part of the Government? Does not each Congress have to appropriate the money needed under the contracts for the fiscal year for which it legislates?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Each Congress will undoubtedly have to appropriate the money needed to meet the payments under the contracts.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then, as I understand the gentleman, while a contract may be entered into, the amount expended is merely the amount which may be appropriated at each Congress.

Mr. BLANCHARD. This is not taking the matter out of the hands of future Congresses. It simply authorizes the Secretary of War to do that which economy and business sense directs every man to do when he undertakes the erection of a house. He makes a contract with a contractor to erect the house for him, the payments on that contract to be made from time to time as may be agreed upon in the instrument witnessing the contract.

Congress two years ago committed the Government to the construction of a harbor of refuge at Point Judith by making an appropriation based upon a plan and estimates submitted by the engineers. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the point made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON], that that was a commitment of the Government to the project, is entirely correct; and if put under the contract system now, it is merely carrying out the commitment then made. Congress now declares that "in the interest of economy and of sound business method we authorize the Secretary of War to make a contract to build this work," upon which the Government has already entered.

The gentleman from Indiana declares we are mortgaging the future; that we are pledging our successors of the Fifty-third, the Fifty-fourth, Fifty-fifth, and Fifty-sixth Congresses, as the case may be. Well, Mr. Chairman, we are authorizing the Secretary of War to make this contract, leaving to our successors the duty of appropriating the money that may be needed to meet the payments under the contract. The Government was committed to it when the plan was adopted and the appropriation made in 1890.

And, Mr. Chairman, so satisfactory has been this system of continuing work, known as the contract system, in river and harbor matters, that the great committee presided over by the gentleman himself following in the line, and agreeing to the very principle, the business and economical principle involved in the "continuing work" system.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the present amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to amend his amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, in opening my remarks in regard to this measure and the principle involved, a short time ago I stated the fact that Congress had authorized the Chief of Engineers to make a contract in advance for the outer walls of the Congressional Library building, and also for the erection of the Post-Office building now being constructed in this city, and that it was proposed the present year to confer upon the Chief of Engineers the power to make a contract for the construction of certain inner works in the public library.

I took occasion to say all that in advance of what my friend has called attention to, except as to the fortification bill, and on that his information was not correct. In the case of a public building it is a matter of public policy, for the reason that the erection of the building is a fixed fact, the amount involved not great, and there is no pretense of a contingency when the work would be abandoned, or that the state of the Treasury would not justify making a fair appropriation for them. There is no pretense of that kind. There are two questions here, involving the question of the mortgaging of your revenues in advance, and then as to the policy of such a procedure and of conferring such extraordinary power on a subordinate of your Government. There are two questions, and I wish to call the attention of gentlemen to both of them. You have the power to make appropriations in advance, but have you the moral right to compel your successors to make such appropriation.

By the adoption of this you will change your entire policy, and certainly not in the interest of economy. You will have an appropriation bill every year appropriating money to carry out these contracts, the sundry civil bill, and every other year your river and harbor bill. Will this lead to economy? Will your public officers invested with the enormous power of making these contracts likely retain the frugal views heretofore entertained? Will you hope for continued purity in the public service with these vast contracts growing in number and magnitude every year? All the evils of carrying great public enterprises on borrowed capital are involved in this policy. Money which Congress would not dare to appropriate outright will be readily pledged for the future.

These contracts will engender and hide extravagance. Appropriations for them are transferred at once, when made, to the Committee on Appropriations, and the estimates are made and sent to that committee, so that every successive year—not every two years, as heretofore, but every successive year—you will have on your sundry civil bill river and harbor appropriations, and this will not diminish your river and harbor bill proper. The transfer of $814,000 to the sundry civil bill this year has not diminished the bill of my friend from Louisiana at all; on the contrary his bill goes up, so that you will have two committees at work, the one authorizing contracts and piling up obligations against your Treasury, and the other appropriating money to meet them.

Mr. HERMANN. Would not the people far prefer that the appropriations should be made annually under the contract system rather than that the old wasteful system should continue? In illustration of that—

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not yield for a speech. The gentleman has asked me a question and I want to answer it fairly. I say, in reply to the gentleman, that as to economy you could not possibly adopt a system which would so run riot with the public money as the contract system, as experience up to this time shows, although this is only the second bill of the kind.

You can not adopt any system which will so rapidly squander the money in your Treasury as this contract system, piling up obligations to be met in the future; because upon that system your expenditures do not appear upon the face of your bill or the state of your Treasury, but appear only in the contracts that are made.

Mr. HERMANN. Take the case of Philadelphia Harbor, where the estimated cost was $4,800,000 and the saving is $3,600,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not yield. I do not want my friend to take up my time. I understand very well all about that, and the facts will soon appear, but will not sustain my friend's views. That the engineers favor this system is very natural. I know that they want to have control of these matters. All public officers have that ambition. I do not blame the engineers, but I do blame Congress for transferring to them a power which it ought to retain in its own hands.

Mr. BUSHNELL. Mr. Chairman, I observe by this bill, and by the discussion which has been had, that the construction of this harbor of refuge was begun two years ago, and that the last Congress was the one which instituted this contract system. Now, it seems to me that there must have been some reason why the last Congress did not apply the contract system to this particular improvement, and I would like to have the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, or some other gentleman familiar with the subject, state why the contract system was not applied, and whether the reasons that were sufficient then for refusing to apply that system to this improvement have lost their force.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will state to my friend from Wisconsin that the last bill took five of the larger works only and placed them under the contract system—the Sault St. Marie lock and dam, the Hay Lake channel, and the harbors of Philadelphia, Baltimore and Galveston. That was the beginning of this contract system, and in beginning it Congress did not see proper to go beyond the five projects mentioned. I may add that the provisions for contracts in the last bill for the localities I have mentioned were Senate amendments to the House bill, agreed to in conference and adopted by both Houses.

Mr. BUSHNELL. I supposed there must have been some reason why the system was not applied. That explanation seems to me satisfactory. I understand further, with reference to the construction of this harbor of refuge, that the work has been surveyed and a careful estimate made, and that the appropriation is within the engineer's estimate.

Mr. BLANCHARD. A careful survey was made and the matter was reported as not only a worthy object, but a work of great necessity. A plan was submitted, we sat in judgment upon the plan and estimates submitted, and we adopted it; Congress ratified that action and made an appropriation to begin the work, and now this is merely authorizing the Secretary of War to complete the work, the expenditure being limited to the amount that the engineer says in his estimate will be sufficient for the purpose.

Mr. BUSHNELL. The principal point I desired to get information about was why the contract system had not been entered into by the last Congress in connection with this work.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana to strike out the clause which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the following, on page 4:
"Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the present project of improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may, from time to time, be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate, $1,075,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated."

Mr. HOLMAN. That leaves in the $100,000.
The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk proceeded to read the paragraph providing for improving Bridgeport Harbor, Connecticut.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk has omitted one paragraph, lines 23 and 24.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that paragraph was read and an amendment adopted.

Mr. BUTLER. And when it was read and after that amendment was made I rose and had an amendment to propose, but we went back to the paragraph providing for the harbor of refuge.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa. The Clerk will read the paragraph to which the gentleman refers.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving entrance to Point Judith Pond, west of Point Judith, Rhode Island, seven thousand five thousand dollars.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to strike out lines 23 and 24. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to take up much time on this bill. I think I can find the temper of this House here as well as anywhere; and when the vote on this question is taken, if it shows a determined purpose to carry through everything, I am going to keep still on this bill from now on. So gentlemen need not worry at what I do on this particular paragraph. [Laughter.]

In the discussion which arose on the previous paragraph the fact was brought out that the harbor of refuge proposed was regarded as very necessary, because Point Judith Pond, just west of there, could not be so improved as to admit any but the smaller craft. That was admitted in the debate. Now, I hold there is no necessity for improving a harbor or a pond when it is admitted at the outset that even at great expense it can not be made of sufficient depth to admit any but the smaller craft. This being the case, the improvement at Point Judith itself, which is to amount to one and a quarter million dollars in the aggregate, ought to be sufficient for that particular locality.

I understand, of course, that this pond borders upon a place where a great many people go in the summer; it is a very nice place on which to sail a little sailboat or to row a skiff. But I do not believe it to be the business of the Government to make improvements of this kind with any such view. I believe this appropriation to be absolutely unnecessary and not in harmony with the duties of this Government in regard to water improvements. Therefore I have moved to strike it out.

Mr. PAGE of Rhode Island. Mr. Chairman, if anything in this bill is necessary for the commercial interests of this country, this appropriation is equally necessary with any other; I except none. It is not for a harbor of refuge; it is not to accommodate the larger vessels. The State of Rhode Island receives no benefit from the great harbor of refuge at Point Judith. This appropriation is for the advancement of the commercial interests of the country.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BUTLER, there were, on a division (called for by Mr. BUTLER)—ayes 24, noes 117.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I am not going to make the point of "no quorum;" I would rather get through with this business and go to something else. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Oswego, N. Y.; continuing improvement $30,000.

Mr. PAYNE. I move to amend so as to make this appropriation $50,000 instead of $30,000. I think the Committee on Rivers and Harbors must have overlooked the importance of the harbor of Oswego or must have made some mistake in estimating the amount that should be appropriated for it. This is the most important harbor on Lake Ontario; and the engineer reports that for the repair of the piers, the light-house pier especially, he needs $25,000, to be expended at once. In addition to that, a storm on the lake three or four years ago made a break in the breakwater and pier. After consideration the engineer has concluded that it is best to leave that break, but that it is necessary to protect the ends of the pier adjoining the break; and there is needed for this purpose at least $50,000 that should be appropriated at once. More than this, the engineer needs for the general repair of these piers (because being constructed of wood they last only about fifteen years) $25,000.

I understand that the amount of the appropriation in the bill, $30,000, was arrived at largely from the consideration of the fact that two years ago the bill carried but $30,000 for Oswego. At that time, however, there was an unexpended balance of $60,000, the engineer in charge of the improvement having been absent for nearly a year on sick leave. Now another engineer has come there; he has expended that balance in continuing the harbor improvement, so that there is but $9,000 available, the report showing $18,000 available at the time the report was made.

This is a very important harbor, not alone on account of the revenue received but by reason of the large amount of coal shipped from this port. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors or the committee itself will make no opposition to the very moderate increase asked on this item.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment ought not to be adopted. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors considered very carefully the demands of Oswego. One of the gentleman's colleagues is a member of the committee. We appropriated $30,000 on an estimate of $100,000—being about 33 per cent of the estimate—a much larger appropriation in proportion than many other places get.

It is as large an appropriation as was given in the bill which last became a law, though that bill was some $4,000,000 greater in amount than the present bill. We have recommended a substantial appropriation for Oswego, and the same argument that the gentleman uses now, if it is sufficient to justify an increase of appropriation in this instance, would be sufficient to justify an increase in one hundred other places in the bill; and if that be done, Mr. Chairman, this bill would be $35,000,000 instead of $21,000,000.

I submit, therefore, that we have done fairly by Oswego Harbor within the limits of a twenty-one-million-dollar bill. We have taken as good care of it in proportion to the commerce there and the necessity of the work as any other places in the bill, and I hope the committee will reject the amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of submitting another observation on this point.

I notice that the item immediately preceding this in the bill for the harbor of Ogdensburg, is $40,000, which the committee have appropriated. The estimate for this work at Ogdensburg was only $80,000, so that they have made an appropriation in this case of 50 per cent of the estimates. No emergency exists there such as I have pointed out at Oswego. The committee, however, can not adopt a cast-iron rule with percentages in these cases, but must take into consideration existing circumstances and facts, and when the engineer reports an emergency such as I have stated in this case—and I ought to have asked $100,000 instead of $50,000, and would have done so but for my extreme modesty—certainly the committee ought to allow the $50,000 that the amendment proposes. It only adds $20,000 to the bill, instead of twenty-five millions, as the chairman of the committee suggests, and I hope the amendment will prevail.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. PAYNE, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Charleston, including Sullivan Island and Mount Pleasant Shore, South Carolina: Continuing improvement, $300,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the present project of improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,878,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I again ask the attention of the gentleman from Louisiana, and submit a request for unanimous consent that this paragraph and the succeeding paragraphs, eight in number, which authorize these contracts to be made, may be regarded as portions of the bill without further reading, and that in the House there shall be a vote upon them as a unit, and that it shall be taken by yeas and nays. It is an important question, and I should be very glad to determine it in this form.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent—

Mr. GEARY. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to submit the request to the committee? The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the paragraph just read, and the succeeding paragraphs, authorizing contracts, may be considered as parts of the bill without further reading, with the understanding that a vote shall be taken in the House upon them in gross by yeas and nays. Is there objection?

Mr. GEARY. I object.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next paragraph of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Conneaut Harbor, Ohio: For relocation of channel and construction of new piers (Scheme B, of Engineer's report) $25,000.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 7, 8, and 9 on page 14 of the bill, the paragraphs just read.

I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors what trade or commerce there is at Conneaut, Ohio. If there has ever been more than 3 feet of water there, if anything ever went in larger than a fishing boat, I never heard of it after twenty-three years of experience on the lakes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. May I ask the gentleman from Kansas when he was there last?

Mr. SIMPSON. I have not been there for a number of years. That was the reason I asked this information.

Mr. BLANCHARD. A good many changes have taken place since you were there. A railroad has been constructed to Conneaut from the coal fields in the interior of Pennsylvania, and a vast business is just beginning to be developed there. I may state from the investigation made of this harbor, and we took it under careful consideration, that it is going to be a rival, in the development of the commerce, to the adjacent ports of Fairport and Ashtabula, and when I tell you that Ashtabula is perhaps the second port upon Lake Erie, certainly third in the volume of commerce done, you will have some idea of the importance attaching to the harbor of Conneaut.

My colleague on the committee, Mr. STONE of Pennsylvania, is more familiar with the development of business and commerce at that point than I am, and I refer the gentleman from Kansas to him for any additional information which he may seek on the subject.

Mr. SIMPSON. I am informed, Mr. Chairman, that there is no real business there at all, and that there is not likely to be. There are some gentlemen who have bought real estate there, which they would like to raise in value by a Government appropriation. It is natural, I suppose, that these men should want that money appropriated and distributed there in order to raise the value of their real estate; but I am satisfied that there is no necessity for spending any public money to build a harbor at Conneaut. As the chairman of the committee has said, Ashtabula is one of the great shipping ports on Lake Erie. It is not far from Conneaut, and it supplies the wants of that part of the State of Ohio. I am satisfied that this appropriation should be cut out of this bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, Conneaut Harbor is an old harbor, and for some years it has been neglected very much. There has been no appropriation for it for years, but it is a natural harbor. Recently a party of gentlemen have purchased—

Mr. SIMPSON. Will the gentleman please tell me how much water there is in that harbor?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Not enough to accommodate the gentlemen who wish to ship their coal there.

Mr. SIMPSON. Is there 4 feet of water over the bar?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. There will be, as soon as this money is expended on it. It is because of the need for more water that the committee have recommended this appropriation.

Mr. SIMPSON. I know this to have been a harbor for at least thirty years, and they have never considered it worth while to expend any money on it. If that is so, how is it, after some gentlemen have bought some real estate there, that they suddenly discover it is a great harbor?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The real estate that has been purchased there is very insignificant. It is the coal fields lying immediately east of the harbor that have been purchased, and the fact that a railroad has been constructed to the harbor, that make the matter of importance.

Mr. SIMPSON. Does not the gentleman know that there is an outlet at Ashtabula and Cleveland from all the coal fields?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Not a natural outlet.

Mr. SIMPSON. Railroads already constructed?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. And besides, at Ashtabula and Fairport the land is so controlled by the corporations already there that the gentlemen who own this coal can not get it to the water. Now, in order to utilize this coal and market it it has got to go to Conneaut Harbor. The railroad is already constructed, and unless this money is appropriated the ships can not go to the harbor and can not get the coal. It is absolutely necessary, in order to afford commercial facilities to that section of country, that this appropriation should be made. That is a natural harbor, and with a little money appropriated there it will become one of the best harbors on the lakes.

The motion of Mr. SIMPSON was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Grant Haven, Mich.: Continuing improvement, $40,000.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I find in line 15, page 15, there is a typographical error which ought to be corrected. It should be "Grand Haven" instead of "Grant Haven."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at White River, Michigan: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, in lines 8 and 9, page 17, I wish to offer an amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 17, line 8, strike out "River" and insert "Lake."

Mr. BLANCHARD. The only change is to make the paragraph read:

Improving harbor at White Lake, Michigan—

Instead of—

Improving harbor at White River, Michigan.

The change is made pursuant to a letter which I hold in my hand from Maj. Ludlow, the United States engineer in charge, who suggests the change.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor at Manitowoc, Wis.: Continuing improvement and maintenance, $18,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I am instructed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to move in the House to amend the appropriation for Manitowoc, Wis., by increasing the amount from $18,000 to $28,000, an increase of $10,000. The committee based their action in recommending this increase upon certain letters from the Secretary of War and from Maj. Davis, the engineer in charge. I therefore move that "eighteen" be stricken out and "twenty-eight" inserted in lieu thereof.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman from Louisiana yield to me for a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. I desire to ask whether an increase of this appropriation to 50 per cent would not make a further increase in the bill of $10,000,000; and whether that is not a very dangerous precedent? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANCHARD. The adoption of the amendment would increase the amount carried in this bill by $10,000. It is based upon these letters of the engineer, which I will send up and have read. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] It is a peculiar case, I will state to the committee, and because it is such, the committee make the recommendation.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Louisiana need not have them read on my account. I presume it is necessary to have this increased appropriation of $10,000. I only asked the question whether it would not increase the appropriation carried by the bill, and whether that was a dangerous precedent? Being satisfied that it is not a dangerous precedent, I withdraw any further objection. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BLANCHARD. Without taking time to read these letters, I will ask to have them printed in the RECORD, as a justification of this increase.

There was no objection.

The letters are as follows:

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 29, 1892.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following report upon the letter of Hon. G. H. BRICKNER, of April 28, 1892, addressed to the honorable the Secretary of War and referred to me by indorsement of the Chief of Engineers, dated April 29, 1892. (2322 E. D., 1892.)

In my opinion it would not be good policy to expend the $10,000 available for the breakwater for the reason stated in my annual report and quoted by Mr. BRICKNER "as a partially completed breakwater, without superstructure and lights, would be a dangerous obstruction," but I can see no reason why such $10,000, being made available, could not be held until more money is appropriated for the same purpose in some future river and harbor bill.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. E. L. B. DAVIS,
Major, Corps of Engineers.

Brig. Gen. THOMAS L. CASEY,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army, Washington, D. C.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, April 30, 1892.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 28th instant, referring to the appropriation in the river and harbor act for the improvement of Manitowoc Harbor, Wisconsin, and requesting to be advised whether in the opinion of this Department the sum available for this work, $10,000, could be profitably expended upon it, in view of the recommendation of the engineer officer in charge of the improvement as contained in the report of the Chief of Engineers for 1891, volume 2, part 4, page 2546, Appendix LL, I have the honor to invite your attention to the inclosed copy of a report, dated the 29th instant, submitted through the Chief of Engineers from Maj. C. E. L. B. Davis, Corps of Engineers, upon the subject.

Very respectfully,

L. A. GRANT, Acting Secretary of War.

Hon. G. H. BRICKNER,
Chairman Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department,
House of Representatives.

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
601 EIGHTEENTH STREET N. W.,
Washington, D. C., May 3, 1892.

SIR: With regard to the improvement of Manitowoc Harbor, Wisconsin, a recommendation was made by me in my last annual report, that $48,000 could be profitably expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, of which amount $8,000 was for repairs and $40,000 for the construction of an exterior breakwater.

The recommendation was made that, as a partially completed breakwater would be in the nature of an obstruction, the entire $40,000 should be available at once so that the breakwater might be completed in one season. Should but $30,000 be appropriated, however, I think the superstructure for the entire 400 feet might be built, and the superstructure completed afterwards, when more money should be available. A light could be maintained on a tripod on the end of the structure.

I think this arrangement would be better than building a portion of the breakwater—say 300 feet—up to the full height, as it will require the full 400 feet in order to afford any protection to the harbor from northeast storms.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. E. L. B. DAVIS,
Major, Corps of Engineers.

Hon. GEORGE H. BRICKNER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
The Clerk read as follows:

Improving harbor and bay at Humboldt, Cal.: Continuing Improvement, $200,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the present project of improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,515,115, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

Mr. CAMINETTI. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 13 to 21 inclusive, page 21, and insert:

Improving harbor and bay at Humboldt, Cal.: Continuing Improvement $200,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to carry on present project of improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $765,015, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

Mr. CAMINETTI. Mr. Chairman, if California is to be awarded a contract under this bill, in my judgment, according to the report of the engineers, and the great business and commercial interests of that State, it should be given to the rivers which afford transportation facilities to the great valleys of California, which yield two-thirds of the agricultural products thereof, and make San Francisco the fourth city in exports in this country.

I do not like to make an objection to an item for the purpose of making improvements in my State; but I believe it is due to the people of that State, it is due to the great farming interests of the Sacramento and San Joaquin Valleys, that I should make an effort for their consideration in this matter. My proposition, therefore, is that we divide the contract, giving one-half to Humboldt and the other half to these two great valleys in order that justice may be done to the interests that I in part represent; and it is for that purpose that I have introduced my amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from California allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CAMINETTI. Certainly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Does the gentleman's amendment go to the extent of taking the other half and putting it at the place indicated?

Mr. CAMINETTI. That can not be done at this time. My intention is, if this amendment is adopted, at the proper time, when the San Joaquin and Sacramento Rivers are reached, to offer an amendment providing that the $750,000 be awarded for their improvement under the contract system.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Then, I understand the effect of the amendment is not to take anything out of this bill that is given to California, but to scatter it a little more justly, as you think?

Mr. CAMINETTI. To divide it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. And does the California delegation agree with the gentleman?

Mr. CAMINETTI. This part of the delegation does. [Laughter.]

Mr. GEARY. Mr. Chairman, I am only sorry for California to say that it is told of us that whenever one Californian is to get anything another one is always ready to take a knife to cut his throat with. That has been the experience with the delegation in the past. It seems to be the feeling of the delegation now. It seems a misfortune in this matter that my friend does not seem to understand the contract system. The contract system provides that the work shall be completed, and that the necessary contract to complete it may be entered into by the engineers up to the limit of cost deemed by them necessary.

Now, the gentleman knows that $750,000 will not complete this work, but in his anxiety to try and get a contract for himself he is willing, not only to destroy Humboldt Harbor, but to destroy a harbor that he does not represent, and which I do represent, but to destroy the Sacramento River also. I have as much interest in the Sacramento River as any other member in this House, but I do not want the appropriation divided, because it would not only cut down one of the public improvements of California, but cut them all down; and therefore I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. CAMINETTI. Mr. Chairman, I have not taken up much of the time of the House during this session, and I hope I will be listened to for a few moments.

If the gentleman from California, or anyone else had suggested that any contract system was to be given to California and there had been an opportunity for consideration of it on the part of the delegation, then there might be something in the point the gentleman makes that the delegation is not a unit upon this question; but this is the first time I have had an opportunity to even consider the question. The subject was not presented by bill nor any suggestion from any quarter. So far as I know no member of the delegation, except the gentleman, had any notice of it until this bill was reported to the House.

I contend that in the matter of river and harbor improvements, or even in the matter of these contracts, if we are to award them to any particular section, we should award them to that locality where they will do the greatest good to the greatest number. The position which the gentleman has taken that I do not represent the Sacramento River is only in part correct, but that only shows all the more my disinterestedness in this matter. [Laughter.]

I am not here to represent the Sacramento River or any other river merely because it may be in my district. I contend that if you are going to give contracts to California you should give them to that section which represents the greatest commercial interests. I merely ask now that this contract be divided. It can be divided; so much can be spent upon the one and so much upon the other; and when this expenditure is concluded, if the public interest demands it, the work may be continued. I think I am making a reasonable and equitable request when I ask that $750,000 of this money shall be expended upon the San Joaquin and the Sacramento Rivers. I hope this amendment will be agreed to.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. CAMINETTI, and the Chairman declared that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. CAMINETTI. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 54, yeas 82.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Harrasackett River, Maine: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in the second line, on page 22, by striking out "ten" and substituting "sixteen," so that the appropriation will read: "$16,000." I offer this amendment with the consent of the committee. There has been already an appropriation of $10,000 for the improvement of that river, but in the opinion of the engineer it can not be used advantageously until a sufficient amount is added to it to complete the work, and it is thought that, with some modifications of the plan, the work can be completed for a total of $26,000. Under ordinary circumstances I should think that my people ought to wait, but I happen to know that the condition of affairs in the town is such that at this particular time the appropriation will be very much more valuable than it can be at any time later. There is now a great deal of enterprise among the people and a disposition to make improvements which will be commensurate with the improvements made on the part of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Shrewsbury River, New Jersey: Continuing improvement, 10,000, one-half of which shall be expended on the South Branch.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 25, lines 8 and 9, strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 8, down to and including the word "Branch," in line 9.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The effect of this amendment, Mr. Chairman, is merely to strike out the provision requiring that one-half of this appropriation shall be expended on the south branch of the river. The amendment is offered upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers and of the local engineer in charge of the improvement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Great Kanawha River, West Virginia: continuing improvement, $300,000.

Mr. CAPEHART. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 6, page 29, insert:

"Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the system of locks and dams now under construction, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $400,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated."

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. Chairman, the Government began this work on the Great Kanawha River in 1875. Eight out of eleven in this system of locks and dams have been completed or are in process of construction at a cost of about one million and a half of dollars. The locks and dams already completed are practically useless until the completion of the remaining three. The estimate of the Engineer's Department for the completion of this work is $600,000. Few, if any, of the improvements undertaken by the Government are of greater importance than this. It makes cheap coal—the cheapest in the United States—to 1,800 miles of country in the Ohio and Mississippi valleys. Coal is carried from Charleston on the Kanawha River to Cincinnati, at a cost of 25 cents per ton for freight; to Louisville for about 37½ to 40 cents per ton; to New Orleans, a distance of 1,800 miles, for $1.25 per ton.

It is proposed, by this system of locks and dams, to make in the Kanawha River a permanent depth of water of 6 feet; and by reaching the mouth of the Kanawha, coal can be shipped down the Ohio more speedily by one hundred and thirty-five days, after these three additional locks and dams are completed, than can be done at present. The amendment I offer is similar to one which has been adopted with reference to ten or twelve other improvements. I hope the committee will see fit to agree to it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Will the gentleman state how much money has already been expended by the Government on the Kanawha River?

Mr. CAPEHART. About a million and a half.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. How much is that per mile?

Mr. CAPEHART. I have not made any calculation as to that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Somewhere about $20,000 to $22,000 a mile.

Mr. CAPEHART. Perhaps so.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. About as much as it would cost to build a railroad.

Mr. CAPEHART. Yes, but this improvement, when completed, will be worth forty railroads. As an illustration of the benefits of the improvement, I would remind the gentleman that while his town of Lexington, Ky., is about the same distance from the mines on the Kanawha River as Cincinnati, yet the price of coal in Lexington, to which point it is carried by rail, is nearly always double the price in Cincinnati to which it is carried by water.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. We get our coal at about the same price as the people in Cincinnati.

Mr. CAPEHART. Oh, no; I think you are mistaken.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Very nearly the same.

Mr. CAPEHART. That does not agree with my information. I was in a coal dealer's office in Lexington within a few months—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. Well, as my friend was a "stranger" in Lexington, it is possible the coal dealer was "taking him in." [Laughter.]

Mr. CAPEHART. I will only say that unless this expenditure be made for the purpose of completing this important improvement, the money already spent will be practically wasted.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, one of the great works of river and harbor improvement now going on, and which has been going on for some years, is that on the Great Kanawha River. More than ten years ago the Government of the United States commenced there the system of lock and dam construction in order to secure, the year round, slack-water navigation. About a million and a half of dollars has been expended by the Government on that river; and the expenditure has been productive of the most remarkable results in the development of the river as a highway of commerce.

In 1881, about the time when this system of lock and dam construction began, the coal and coke shipped upon the Great Kanawha River aggregated only 385,148 tons. Ten years later, in 1891, it had increased to 1,030,000 tons, showing an increase of 150 per cent in the commerce of the river in a period of ten years. This increase was brought about in the main by reason of the improvements made by the Government on the river. There is no more meritorious work of river improvement now going on than this. But it is approaching completion; $670,000 will complete the work, and of that sum the bill appropriates $200,000.

Now, that is sufficient, or nearly so, for the construction of one of the locks and dams. There is much of merit in the amendment which my friend from West Virginia offers, and the contract system upon this river can certainly be justified by the development of the commerce upon it; but the Committee on Rivers and Harbors did not see its way clearly to the incorporation of more than ten contracts for continuing work in the bill. We had to stop off just about where the Great Kanawha River would have come in had we put a larger number of projects under the contract system.

In view of the amount of money already expended on the river, and in view of the facilities which the river now possesses for the commerce which seeks it, I do not think, and the committee did not think, that there was any great necessity for including this particular project under that system. I therefore hope that the committee will reject the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. ENOCHS. Mr. Chairman, I am quite familiar with this part of the Kanawha River sought to be improved, and I undertake to say that the money which has been already appropriated for the improvement of the navigation of that river has been of more benefit, or certainly of as much benefit, as any appropriation for improvements of rivers ever made by Congress. In fact, I may say that it has succeeded in developing a new country and one of the greatest coal countries in the world. As I understand the amendment of my friend from West Virginia, it will complete this improvement up to what is known as the Pools, or the Kanawha Falls. This is a mountainous region and, as I have said, there is in that region a wonderfully rich coal development.

It seems to me that one of the most appropriate things for Congress to do would be to put that upper part of the river under the contract system, and complete the entire work up to the Pools. It is but a short distance, and each one of these dams when completed creates a harbor for the storage of coal boats and barges. The commerce of the river has increased wonderfully in the last few years, and I hope the House will adopt the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from West Virginia. The question was taken, and the Chairman decided that the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CAPEHART. I ask a division.

Mr. BUTLER. Let the amendment be reported.

The amendment was again read.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 11, noes 82.

Mr. PARRETT. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. PARRETT and Mr. BLANCHARD were appointed tellers.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I hope the gentleman will not insist on the point of a quorum.

Mr. PARRETT. I withdraw the point of order.

So no further count being demanded, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Chattahoochee River, Georgia and Alabama: Continuing improvement, $25,000, of which $5,000 may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be used on that portion of the river between West Point and Franklin.

Mr. LESTER of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to this paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out in the seventh and eighth lines the words "in the discretion of the Secretary of War;" and in line 7 strike out the word "may," and insert "are to be" so that it will read:
"Of which $5,000 are to be used on that portion of the river between West Point and Franklin."

Mr. BLANCHARD. There is no objection to that amendment; it is merely a verbal change.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Apalachicola River, Florida: Continuing improvement, $5,000. Mr. MALLORY. I offer an amendment to this paragraph of the bill, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 33, line 18, after the word "Florida," insert:
"Including Lee Slough and its connection with Chipola River, and from said connection to the mouth of the Chipola River."

Mr. MALLORY. I will say to the chairman of the committee that this is the amendment which I submitted to him, which he authorized me to offer. It is to give the benefit of this $5,000 to Lee Slough.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman mention the lines which he proposes to amend?

Mr. MALLORY. Line 18, page 33, after the word "Florida," to insert an amendment which makes that appropriation of $5,000 apply to Lee Slough as well as to the Apalachicola River.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Is that slough tributary to the Apalachicola River?

Mr. MALLORY. It is really the main river; and if it were cleaned out the steamboats would all go down into the Chipola River and back into the Apalachicola River. The people all want it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Tallahatchee River, Mississippi: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to line 15, page 36. It is an amendment to provide that $2,000 shall be used in the improvement of said river between the bridge at Panola, Miss., and the mouth of the Coldwater River, at the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have no objection to the amendment. It is a verbal one and does not increase the amount. I would prefer to have the word "shall" stricken out and the word "may" inserted.

Mr. KYLE. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 15, after the word "dollars," insert: "of which amount $2,000 may be used in the improvement of said river between the bridge at Panola, Miss., and the mouth of the Coldwater River, at the discretion of the Secretary of War."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Bayou Lafourche, Louisiana: Continuing improvement, $50,000.

Mr. PRICE. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "improvement," in line 6, page 39, insert "and removing obstructions."

Mr. BLANCHARD. This is merely a verbal amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Cumberland River, Tennessee and Kentucky: Continuing improvement above Nashville, $250,000, of which $5,000 may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, in the improvement of the river above the town of Burnside.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. I have an amendment which I wish to offer to line 9, page 41.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend, after line 9, on page 41:

"Ten thousand dollars of this appropriation may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, in repairs on and clearing channel of the river between the Tennessee and Kentucky line and Burksville, Ky."

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation provides that on the Cumberland River in Tennessee and Kentucky, for continuing improvements, $250,000 may be expended. I apprehend that will all be expended upon works already in process of construction, and I believe that is the language of the bill—"continuing improvements." That is a long river. This bill provides for improvements upon that river in Tennessee and Kentucky. With the slight exception that $5,000 of that fund may be expended upon the works above Burnside, no amount of it would or could be expended in Kentucky. I understand from parties interested in that navigation, that by the expenditure of a small amount of money in removing snags and in dredging the river from the Tennessee and Kentucky boundary up to Burksville in Kentucky, small craft might be run, so as to give a large amount of transportation; but if they are compelled to wait for the building of this dam and the slack water to extend to Burksville, Ky., they will probably wait a hundred years; and for that reason I offer this amendment, providing that in the discretion of the Secretary of War $10,000 may be appropriated to remove snags and do some dredging. This is out of the sum appropriated, and does not increase the amount of the bill.

The majority of the committee, I think, would accede to this proposition; but the chairman, who is moved by good considerations I know, sees fit not to agree to it. I ask, however, that it be agreed to by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this amendment ought to be agreed to. It was never authorized in the committee. The Cumberland River, from the city of Nashville up, is a river that the Government is endeavoring to improve by a system of slack-water navigation.

This $250,000 is needed for the construction of one of the locks and dams needed on the river, and no part of it ought to be diverted to improving the river at the point suggested by my friend from Kentucky. The committee did authorize, and there was written into the bill authority to use $5,000, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, for the improvement of the river above the town of Burnside; but I do not think that a sufficient showing has been made to justify the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Lock and dam construction can not proceed satisfactorily unless enough money is given to complete at least one lock at a time. Now, if we divert $10,000 of this $250,000 to that part of the river mentioned in the amendment of the gentleman, we just cripple to that extent the lock and dam construction upon the river. Now, in view—

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Louisiana what good there can be in expending $5,000 above the town of Burnside when it is absolutely impossible to get to Burnside? Now, the expenditure is one which may be comprised in the $250,000 to be used below Burnside, so that it may be a proper charge if the Secretary of War sees fit, that they may be able to get to Burnside and use the $5,000.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Now, the answer to that is very simple. Small boats can now go to that part of the river.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Yes, probably three months in the year.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Well, the gentleman's colleague [Mr. WILSON]—I do not know whether he is on the floor or not—at whose instance that $5,000 to be expended above the town of Burnside was placed in there, made the statement that small boats could navigate the Upper Cumberland River, and that by an expenditure of $5,000 in the removal of certain rock ledges in the river, they could go above the town of Burnside; it was put in by the committee upon that showing made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILSON].

That part of the river where the gentleman proposes to divert the $10,000 of this appropriation and expend it is covered in the general language used in connection with this appropriation:

Improving of Cumberland River, Tennessee and Kentucky: Continuing improvement above Nashville, $250,000.

Now, I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the Engineer Department under this general and broad language can use a portion of this $250,000 if there be a public necessity for it on that part of the river covered by his amendment.

The objection to this amendment is, that it fetters the engineer. You tell him to expend that money there. There may be, in his judgment, no necessity for the expenditure. If there be any such necessity then the amendment is superfluous, because the engineer would, under the language of the appropriation, have discretion to expend it there.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Did the gentleman notice the language of the amendment, which says: "If in his discretion;" it is not obligatory.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Well, Mr. Chairman, if there be one thing we have learned more than another in the River and Harbor Committee, it is that generally when we use the language employed by the gentleman, "May, in his discretion," expend money, the engineer construes it in the sense of meaning that it must be expended.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Oh, my!

Mr. BLANCHARD. Well, the gentleman may shake his head; but I know that that construction is generally put upon it.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. I will leave it to your colleague on the committee.

Mr. BLANCHARD. My colleague is mistaken, like my friend from Kentucky. It is not desirable to adopt the amendment. The committee never authorized it, it never agreed to it, and I can not accept it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 67.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, in view of the desire of gentlemen that the committee rise, and in view of the further fact that the point of no quorum is made, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker (having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7820) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 6923) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and had agreed to the conference asked for by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. STEWART, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BLACKBURN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

It also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 328) to establish lineal promotion throughout the several lines of artillery, cavalry, and infantry of the Army, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and had agreed to the conference asked for by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. MANDERSON, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

It also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 250) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at De Witt, Carroll County, Mo., and to establish it as a post road; in which concurrence was requested.

It also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 8503) making appropriations for expenses that may be incurred under the treaties with Great Britain concluded at Washington, February 29 and April 18, 1892;

A bill (H. R. 6788) to establish a subport of entry and delivery at Superior, Wis., and at Ashland, Wis., in the Superior collection district of Michigan and Wisconsin; and

A bill (H. R. 5108) to establish a military post at or near the city of Helena, in Lewis and Clarke County, in the State of Montana.

It also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. 716) for the relief of the owners of the Schillinger patents;

A bill (S. 2599) releasing the right, title, and interest of the United States to the piece or parcel of land known as the cuartel lot to the city of Monterey, Cal.;

A bill (S. 2465) for the relief of D. D. T. Farnsworth, of Upshur County, W. Va.;

A bill (S. 2334) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North, at Quincy, N. Dak.;

A bill (S. 1916) to provide for the erection of a public building at Washington, Pa.;

A bill (S. 1915) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at McKeesport, in the State of Pennsylvania;

A bill (S. 1708) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah J. Waggoner;

A bill (S. 1696) to further provide for the disposition of certain public lands in the State of Alabama;

A bill (S. 1356) granting a pension to Abigail L. Fumey;

A bill (S. 2140) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the State of Kansas the use and control of certain lands therein for the purpose of a soldiers' home for old soldiers and their families;

A bill (S. 878) granting an additional land district in the State of Montana;

A bill (S. 817) granting a pension to Maria S. Whitney;

A bill (S. 795) to provide for the erection of a public building at Charlottesville, Va.;

A bill (S. 261) for the relief of the legal representatives and devisees of James W. Schaumburg; and

A bill (S. 234) for the relief of the National New Haven Bank, of the State of Connecticut.

It also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution; in which concurrence was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there be reprinted 5,000 copies of House Executive Document No. 51, first session Forty-ninth Congress, on cattle and dairy farming, of which number 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 3,000 copies for the use of the House.

It also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution; in which concurrence was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That there be printed for distribution by the Bureau of Navigation of the Treasury Department 2,000 copies of the twenty-third annual list of merchant vessels of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1890, as prepared by the Commissioner of Navigation.

It also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1379) to provide for a pension to Obe Sutherland, late a teamster in the Quartermaster's Department of the United States volunteer army, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. VEST, and Mr. SHOUP as conferees on the part of the Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The following reports of committees were handed in at the Clerk's desk and referred to their appropriate Calendars as indicated below:

PITWORTH, BRIGHTWOOD AND TACOMA RAILWAY COMPANY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back, in the nature of a substitute for House bill 8196, the bill (H. R. 8579) to incorporate the Petworth, Brightwood and Tacoma Railway Company, of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. OATES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely joint resolution (H. Res. 46), amending the Constitution of the United States, and providing for uniform laws on the subject of marriage and divorce; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the majority and minority reports ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely joint resolution (H. Res. 23), to amend the Constitution of the United States of America, empowering the Congress to pass uniform laws regulating marriage and divorce; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO PENSION LAW.

Mr. JOLLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2137) to amend an act entitled "An act amending the pension law so as to remove the disability of those who having participated in the rebellion have since its termination enlisted in the Army of the United States and become disabled," approved March 3, 1877; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

OIL PAINTINGS FOR EXECUTIVE MANSION.

Mr. CUMMINGS, from the Committee on the Library, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 8477) authorizing the purchase of oil paintings for the Executive Mansion; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RESTORATION OF BOOKS OF THE BEAUFORT LIBRARY.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 6, 1892.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, in response to a resolution of the 11th ultimo, directing him to transmit certain information relative to proposals for the construction of naval vessels on the shores of the Great Lakes; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, submitting a draft of a bill authorizing the issue of patents to the Swan Creek and Black River Chippewas and the Munsee or Christian Indians, of Kansas, and for the sale of their respective reservations in Kansas, and for other purposes; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it stand adjourned to meet on Monday next.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope that motion will be deferred until a little later in the day.

Mr. BUTLER. If we defer it until after 2 o'clock the motion can not be made.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can only call for the yeas and nays on it at present. Perhaps I would not do so later on.

Mr. BUTLER. I make the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from South Carolina, that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. SHERMAN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTLER. I merely desire to state that after 2 o'clock the motion can not be made.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MILLS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. KENNA (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT]; but I have assumed that this is a vote on which he would not care to have the pair observed, and so I voted "yea." I will withdraw my vote if his colleague thinks I ought not to vote.

Mr. TELLER. I have no idea how my colleague would vote on this question.

Mr. KENNA. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], and therefore I did not vote; but as I presume he would vote "nay" if present, I will take the liberty of voting. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 27; as follows:

MONUMENT TO HEROES OF REVOLUTIONARY WAR.

Mr. GORMAN. I present a petition signed by Gen. Horace Porter, president, and Gen. James C. Cresap, secretary-general, of the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, held in the city of New York during the past month, representing, I understand, the descendants of those who took part in the American Revolution from thirty States in the Union. It is a short petition, stating facts, and praying Congress to aid in the construction of a monument in the city of Baltimore to the heroes of the Revolutionary war, 20,000 of whom were enlisted and served in the Army from Maryland alone. Much as I am opposed, as a rule, to having petitions or memorials printed in the RECORD, I ask that this petition may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. Where is the petition from?

Mr. GORMAN. It is from the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, of which Gen. Horace Porter is president.

Mr. HARRIS. On what subject?

Mr. GORMAN. It prays Congress to appropriate a sum of money for the erection of a monument in Baltimore.

There being no objection, the petition was read, and referred to the Committee on the Library, as follows:

PETITION.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, Washington City, D. C.:

Whereas the Maryland Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, organized April 20, 1889, and duly incorporated under the laws of the State of Maryland, are engaged at the present time in the laudable effort to erect in the State of Maryland a monument to all patriots of the said State who aided during the Revolutionary war to establish the independence of the said State and of these United States of America; and

Whereas Maryland furnished over 20,000 soldiers fully equipped and perfect in discipline to the Revolutionary army, troops that were distinguished for great bravery in the field, as shown:

First. At Fricks Mill Pond, Long Island, where 400 of the Maryland Regiment, under Maj. Gist, with fixed bayonets charged six different times Cornwallis's brigade of Regulars, and by their great gallantry saved the American Army, and caused Washington to exclaim, "Good God! what brave fellows I must this day lose."

Second. As shown when acting as rear guard in the defense of the retreat of the American Army from Long Island and from New York.

Third. As shown at Harlem Heights, when the First Regiment, Col. Griffith, and the Fourth Regiment, Col. Richardson. Regulars of the "Flying Camp," charged and carried with fixed bayonets the intrenchments of the British Regulars and drove them until recalled by Gen. Washington.

Fourth. As shown at Fort Washington, when Col. Moses Rawling's Regiment of Rifles, but 274 strong, resisted the six different charges of a body of 5,000 Hessians, killing and wounding over 600 of the enemy, and only retired from their post after the rest of the American Army had retreated from the field.

Fifth. As shown at Monmouth, where Lieut. Col. Ramsey's Maryland battalion and Col. Stewart's Regiment of Regulars saved the American Army.

Sixth. As shown at Cowpens, where the gallant Capt. John Eager Howard and his Maryland company saved a retreating army and turned defeat into a glorious victory.

Seventh. As shown at Germantown, Trenton, Eutaw Springs, and other battlefields of the Revolutionary war; and

Whereas the United States Government has made a number of liberal appropriations to Revolutionary monuments in other States, or else erected at its own cost the said monuments; and

Whereas nearly all of the over 20,000 heroes of Maryland rest in unknown and unmarked graves, and it is proper and right that their patriotism and great deeds be handed down to future generations, as the patriotism of the people is the safety of the state; and

Whereas the State of Maryland after the said war did by its firm stand against the claims made by the State of Virginia to sole ownership of the Western territory, preserve to the General Government the said territory now largely developed into great States of this National Confederacy, and did also cede for the purposes of the General Government the present District of Columbia, and did advance to aid in erection of proper buildings for the said General Government the sum of $93,000, which money came in a very large measure from the same families that furnished their fathers and sons to the Revolutionary war; and

Whereas the said Maryland Society of the Sons of the American Revolution intend to apply to the Congress of the United States for the sum of $40,000 to aid in the erection of the said Revolutionary monument; Therefore,

Be it resolved, First, that this national congress of the Sons of the American Revolution, composed of delegates from the different State organizations, do most heartily indorse the erection of the said monument by the Maryland Society, and ask that the active aid and influence of each and every member of the society throughout the United States be given to the enterprise.

Second, that this congress, by the signatures of its general officers hereto attached, petitions the Congress of the United States that the said appropriation of $40,000 be granted the Maryland Society of the Sons of the American Revolution to aid in the erection of the said monument to all Maryland patriots of the Revolutionary war.

HORACE PORTER,
President-General,
JAMES C. CRESAP,
Lieutenant, U. S. Navy, Secretary-General,

CITY HALL, NEW YORK, April 30, 1892.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 3,000 extra copies of Executive Document No. 31, first session Fifty-second Congress, being report made by the Hampton Institute regarding its returned Indian students.

POWDER BOATS IN NEW YORK HARBOR.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], which will be read.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to remove at once all powder boats used for the storage of powder now lying in the harbor of New York; and that hereafter no boats of this description shall be allowed in said harbor, except boats in transit or those engaged in transferring army and navy supplies of powder.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

Mr. CHANDLER. Since yesterday I have investigated this subject. I find that there are no army or navy boats in the harbor used for the storage of powder. The only boats that come within the province of the resolution—

Mr. DAWES. Let me inquire how the resolution comes before the Senate?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I can not hear the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. I waited for the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. I understood that there was an arrangement for the order of business this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution comes over from a previous day.

Mr. DAWES. Is it part of the morning business?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair laid the resolution before the Senate under the rule.

Mr. DAWES. Is it part of the morning business?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is morning business.

Mr. CHANDLER. There are no boats which would come within the purview of this resolution except mercantile powder boats. There are such boats moored in the harbor, and I suppose perhaps that is the safest place in which to keep powder in the vicinity of New York City. I think there is some reason to doubt whether it would be wise to prevent the storing of mercantile powder in those boats in that harbor, but I make no objection to the resolution if the Senator desires its passage, because before it passes the other House the owners of those harbor boats will have an opportunity to make themselves heard.

I desire to call the attention of the Senator, however, to the fact that this should be not a concurrent resolution but a joint resolution, because it is an act of legislation. It is an act directing the Secretary of the Treasury to remove the powder boats, and I do not suppose that that act of legislation can be performed by the two Houses by concurrent resolution; but if the Senator will change the resolution to a joint resolution, which will go to the President in the ordinary method, I will make no further objection.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Very well; I have no objection to changing the form of the resolution.

Mr. HISCOCK. What is the resolution?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution.

Mr. HISCOCK. I should like to have the resolution go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has already gone over one day.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The resolution came over from yesterday.

Mr. HISCOCK. This is the first I have heard of the resolution, and I should like to ascertain something of the facts.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The facts are simply these: There has been complaint made to the Department by the boards of trade and commerce of Jersey City in the past few years with respect to the nearness of the powder boats that are moored in the harbor of New York and often in and about Bedloes Island and Ellis Island. Before Ellis Island was taken as an immigrant station it was used for the storage of powder; and when the Government took possession of that island the powder which had been stored there for the use of the Army and Navy and also for commercial purposes was stored upon boats in the harbor. At any hour of the day or night anybody who is familiar with that locality will see a hundred powder boats, both foreign and engaged in domestic trade, moored in and about the harbor. It was confessed by the Navy Department and the War Department that there had been hundreds of tons of powder stored on those boats. The people of Jersey City are very much afraid of it; and although the Ordnance Bureau of the Navy Department assured the people of Jersey City that two or three hundred tons of powder blown up in the harbor of New York would not injure anybody that does not satisfy their fears.

There are a great many places where the powder boats could be moored, up the Hudson River, if you please, somewhere along the shore, or down below the harbor in the Kills, or anywhere far removed from these populations.

I have repeatedly asked the Department to make a change. Last year we proposed an appropriation of money, one was offered here, for the purpose of providing a powder magazine for the Navy Department, and they have established themselves in the interior of New Jersey, something like 40 miles from the coast. They have purchased property alongside of the army magazine, which is somewhere up in the mountains of New Jersey, and there they manufacture and store their powder. There is train communication twenty times a day between the powder station and the coast, and powder can be transported on cars if it is to go on board a naval ship, or if it is to be used by the Army it can be put on board a boat and transferred immediately to the ship.

There is no necessity for storing powder in and about the harbor of New York. It is a menace all the time, and if some foreign ship, a merchant ship, if you please, or a naval ship, should come into the harbor and moor alongside a powder boat and by some accident there should be a collision, or a shock upon the boat should explode the powder, the effect would be serious: it would blow all the lot of craft out of the water. It is in close proximity to Bedloes Island, where the Statue of Liberty is erected, and it is a case of the most extreme negligence and carelessness of which I have any knowledge. It is the duty of Congress to simply say that some other place must be provided for storing these immense quantities of powder.

Mr. HISCOCK. Am I interrupting the Senator?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Not at all.

Mr. CHANDLER. If I may be allowed a moment, I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey whether he understood my statement that there is no army or navy powder in the harbor; that these boats are all private boats for the storage of commercial powder? I have ascertained that fact since yesterday; so that it is not a case as against the army or navy powder boats, but only as against the few boats that are kept there for the storage of powder by private parties for commercial sale.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Then I want to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if that should be permitted? Why should not commercial powder be transported through the harbor in like manner as is the powder to be used for the Army and the Navy?

Mr. CHANDLER. That is a question—

Mr. MCPHERSON. It was confessed here about a year or a year and a half ago that the Navy did store powder on boats in the harbor and so did also the Army, but the occasion for doing that has now been entirely avoided by reason of the close proximity of the powder magazine in the State of New Jersey, some 30 or 40 miles from the coast, with direct rail communication. If the commercial boats in which the commercial powder is stored are moored in the harbor of New York the Secretary of the Treasury, having control of the police department of that harbor under the revenue system, is perfectly qualified to see that they are removed.

Mr. HISCOCK. This resolution may be all right. I do not know whether it is or not. The condition of things depicted by the Senator from New Jersey has existed for years. The resolution, if it should pass, would not be effective, as it would be simply the direction of the Senate and not a law.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The Senator, then, is not aware of the fact that I have consented to change the form of the resolution and make it a joint resolution for that purpose?

Mr. HISCOCK. What I propose is that in any case, whether in this resolution or a joint resolution, it is always unusual, so unusual that there is scarcely a precedent for it, to pass a measure of this kind unless it has been acted upon and reported by a committee of the Senate. I do not care how speedy action is taken in investigating this question, the sooner a committee may report the better, but in my judgment it should go to a committee; and therefore I move its reference to the Committee on Commerce. I believe the Senator is a member of that committee. Let them report the facts and report a joint resolution. If this action should be justified or desirable, if a half of what the Senator has stated as justifying it is true, it certainly will meet no objection at my hands; but I think, as it interferes with the commerce of a great city and a great harbor, there should be a report upon the question. Therefore I move its reference to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, a single word, if you please. If the Senator from New York had watched the reading of the resolution he would have found that I make no interference in the resolution with the operations of commerce. The resolution itself proceeds against the storing of powder in boats in the harbor of New York and using them for storage purposes. I have no objection to the resolution going to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HISCOCK. All right; let it go there.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I hope the committee will report it back at an early day.

Mr. HISCOCK. The sooner the better. I do not intend any obstruction of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Commerce. It is so referred.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4636) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WHEELER of Alabama, Mr. NEWBERRY, and Mr. HULL managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 1379) to provide for a pension for Obe Sutherland, late a teamster in the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army, disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MARTIN, Mr. SNOW, and Mr. CURTIS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 250) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at DeWitt, Carroll County, Mo., and to establish it as a post road.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the conferees on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7818) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriation for the service of the Government for the fiscal year 1882, and for other purposes, be, and they are hereby, authorized to consider, and, if they deem the same to be necessary, to embrace in their agreement an appropriation for fees of witnesses in United States courts.

CHEYENNE AND ARAPAHOE RESERVATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business which was assigned for this hour, being the resolution submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] relative to President's message upon the appropriation of March 3, 1891, for payment to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations for their interests in the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Reservation. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I voted for this resolution in committee, and as I propose to vote for it in the Senate, I desire to state very briefly the reasons which control my vote. Those reasons will not lead me to follow either the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] or the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] over the large field which they so elaborately and ably traversed in opposition to this resolution. The reasons which govern my vote are not affected by the conclusions, whether sound or unsound, at which those Senators arrived.

When this matter was originally before the Senate for its action I opposed the legislation then proposed with what ability I had. Under the same circumstances I should oppose it again; but I then distinctly stated that I believed in the equity of the claim. I stated it in these words in answer to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], who had charge of the measure:

The Senator from Arkansas knows that I admit the equity of this claim just as broad as he does, but I will state the difficulty standing in the way of putting it on here. The equity arises out of the fact that it was an implied promise on our part that we would take these lands and use them for friendly Indians, and now they say we are going to use them for white people, and the equity is the claim they have for that.

On two or three occasions during the debate I stated in different words my belief in the equity of this claim. The grounds upon which I based my belief about that equity itself further on in the debate I also stated. I am of that same opinion still. I did not think it wise to put that provision upon that bill, and I am of that opinion still; but the matter was otherwise decided by the Senate. It was enacted into a law that we should pay the Choctaws and Chickasaws this sum of money. The President of the United States, for reasons satisfactory to himself, and which, in my opinion, are not open to criticism, was prompted by what I believe was his duty with what evidence he had before him, saw fit to arrest the execution of this law, and to communicate to Congress the information which had come to him which led him to this action. I dispose of that in a single word, and that is that he was obliged, according to his sense of duty, to do as he did. He made no recommendation in this communication. He expressed but a suggestion upon two or three points which I shall consider in order by and by. That message was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. It was of such a character that it was impossible for the committee to make any other report than that they did except a report to repeal the law.

Under what conditions is the repeal of such a law justifiable? It is a law, not one that affects the principles of government in the administration of public affairs, but it is a law providing for the payment of a claim, a law passed under the circumstances to which I have alluded. It is not an ordinary question whether the execution of such a law shall be arrested by the Executive, and the next Congress repeal it. In my opinion, unusual conditions must exist to justify such a proceeding. In my service here and in the other House I have known but a single instance of the repeal of such a law. The senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER] will recollect it, for he and I had something to do with the matter of that repeal.

In the last hours of a Congress a joint resolution was passed authorizing the reopening of accounts of a claimant for services which had already been adjusted and settled in the Department. It was understood at the time to be solely for the purpose of correcting a comparatively unimportant error of a few thousand dollars. It was passed without debate in either branch.

At the opening of the next session of Congress it came to the knowledge of members of the House that under that resolution there was about to be paid in that Department the sum of $444,000; that an official of high standing in the Department itself had resigned his position there to accept the place of attorney for the prosecution of this claim in that Department, under what was understood to be an agreement that he should have for that service 33½ per cent of the amount allowed. Under those conditions the executive department was requested to suspend that payment. The matter was referred to the committee in each branch of Congress, and the report of those committees to repeal that law passed both Houses of Congress, I believe, unanimously. That is the only instance that I can call to mind of any proceeding analogous to that which we should be called upon to transact here if we proposed to repeal this law.

There are none of the conditions attending that transaction in this. This was passed, as I have said, after long debate. It had been referred previously to the Committees on Indian Affairs in both Houses of Congress; it had been reported upon favorably by the committee of the other branch; it had been pending in the Committee on Indian Affairs of this branch for some time, and able and high-minded counsel, who are above reproach in this country, appeared before that committee in behalf of the Chickasaws and argued the merits of the question. The Committee on Indian Affairs came to no conclusion upon the bill then pending, but recommended an amendment to the appropriation bill, which was brought into the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It was there examined, and, though the Committee on Appropriations—I will not say by how large a majority—declined to put it upon the appropriation bill, it was offered as an amendment here in open Senate. As I said to a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, though I believed there was equity at the bottom of this claim, I opposed putting it upon the appropriation bill both in the Committee on Appropriations and here.

Every particle of evidence produced here on this question of repealing that appropriation was before each branch of Congress then; it was discussed at length and as long as anyone desired. There was difference of opinion in this body as to what was the force and effect of the evidence, just as there is here to-day; and yet this body and the other House by large majorities enacted that law. If anything can be regarded as res adjudicata, that ought to be. There are only in reference to such a claim, in my opinion, two elements which would justify a reversal in a subsequent Congress. One is the discovery and presentation of such new and uncontroverted evidence as shows the claim to be baseless. The other is that its enactment was procured by fraud. When a controversy has been once settled upon the evidence fairly, without fraud, and there is no new evidence to present, I submit that it is not proper for one Congress to try again the effect upon different minds of the same evidence and to reopen and retry such a case.

That is one reason why I was led to vote in committee that there was not sufficient reason, in the opinion of that committee, to interfere with the full execution of this law. What would justify it? Because my friend from Iowa or my friend from Connecticut believing, as they do, that there is no foundation for this, desire to reargue the same thing and see if they can not convince a new court which they failed and I failed to convince, does not seem to me to be sufficient.

Who brings the charge to the door of this claim that any fraud was practiced upon Congress? Who has said here in this debate that the conditions upon which this claim rests are any different to-day from what they were when Congress decided it? In the absence, therefore, of any other considerations, I should not deem it wise for this Congress to undertake to undo in this respect what was done by the last Congress.

I stated, as I have read, that I believed this claim rested in equity. I was unable, among other things, to say at that time what was a just and fair compensation in discharge of the equitable obligations incurred by the United States in the matter of taking this land and appropriating it to a use never thought of between the parties when they made their conveyance. Therefore I do not care to rest the vote I give solely upon what I believe to be sound ground, namely, that no one has presented any reason here for a reversal of the judgment which was not presented at the time it was in hearing.

The equity arises—

I stated at that time—

out of the fact that it was an implied promise on our part that we would take these lands and use them for friendly Indians, and now they say we are going to use them for white people, and the equity is the claim they have for that.

I stated then, Mr. President, that it was an implied promise, and the Senator from Connecticut claimed, while we held an absolute deed from these people, there was an implied promise that we would use these lands solely for the purpose of placing friendly Indians upon them. I then stated that the title was complete notwithstanding this implied promise and implied trust, and that it was in the power of the grantee to convey to a third person that title, and the grantor's only remedy was as between him and the grantee:

My argument with the Senator from Colorado, if I may dignify what I have said in that way, was this: The Senator intimated that they had a legal title, and therefore wherever we put this land they could rest it, holding the legal title. My claim is that we can dispose of this land as we please, but our equities with these Chickasaws and Choctaws remain just the same. We are bound in equity to indemnify them, whatever we do with the land.

I have stated over and over again that this is an equity between us and these Indians. The Senator says it follows the land. I say it does not follow the land for this reason: The Indians did not put it into their deed, but they gave us an absolute deed. Now, Mr. President, when they gave us an absolute deed our transactions with them were such that it placed us under an equitable obligation to them; but they can not attach that to the land, and whatever we do with the land the equitable obligation remains unimpaired.

Mr. President, it is precisely this case: My neighbor comes to me and says, "I want to buy that lot adjoining your house to put a church on." My neighbor and I have perfect confidence in each other, and I say "I will sell you that lot if you want it for that purpose; go and make the deed yourself." My neighbor goes and makes an absolute deed, honestly intending to hold that land for the purpose of erecting a church. Times change, however, and instead of erecting a church upon that land, he sells it to A. B., who erects a slaughterhouse upon it. There can be no question but what A. B. had the perfect title to that land and could erect a slaughterhouse upon it, but I have a claim in equity upon my neighbor to whom I sold it under the understanding between him and me that it was to be used for a church—a claim in equity upon him and not upon the land. Therefore it seems altogether unnecessary, if I may say so, for the learned Senator from Connecticut to spend the long time he did yesterday in a learned and elaborate argument to show that this absolute deed did not convey a trust. I was surprised that the learned Senator failed to point out the difference between an express trust and an implied one. An express trust, carried in the deed over to the grantee, follows the land, and can be enforced not only against the grantee but against the land itself.

Now, Mr. President, I admit, as I did a year ago, what the Senator says, that that was an absolute deed carrying no express trust in it; but does the argument stop there? Does the Senator not know that an implied trust, a trust resting upon the promises or understandings of the grantor and grantee, is just as much an obligation in equity as an express trust? The difference between the two is the difference between the man who has given his bond and the man who has given his word.

I let the Senator from Connecticut stand on his argument that there is no trust in this deed. I have never thought this claim rested upon any such ground as that. The question is not whether, because the Choctaws have not got our bond, they have no claim. The question is a higher one in the forum of good morals and equity, have they got our promise? If they have our promise, while we are at perfect liberty, having a complete grant of the lands, to dispose of them to white people if we choose, the question is whether we had any understanding with these Indians when they gave us that deed that we would not use the land for that purpose, but would use it for another. If we had no such understanding with the Indians, this claim has no foundation. If we did have such an understanding with them, this claim rests upon that obligation which exists between man and man, whether we have the bond or not to fulfill our engagements as they were understood between us at the time.

I put this claim upon that ground and no other. I am aware that the phraseology of the bill in its ordinary acceptance carries another item:

For all the right—

This is an appropriation—

For all the right, title, interest, and claim which said nations of Indians may have in and to certain lands now occupied by the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians under executive order; said lands lying south of the Canadian River, etc.

Said lands having been ceded in trust by article 3 of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians.

Mr. President, if that phraseology had been this: "Said land was ceded under an implied trust by article 3 of the treaty," everything would have been cleared away in the disposition of this case, except what would be considered as a fair sum in compensation for the breach of that implied trust. Those who drew this clause very naturally fell into this language, because this language is found in all of the documents in the Interior Department from the beginning of this transaction down to the present time. There was no occasion in those documents to draw the line between an implied trust and an express trust, and the phrase was used indiscriminately. So when this amendment to the appropriation bill was drawn it followed that language. Properly it should have said "on account of that cession" or "under an implied trust."

If that strict legal requirement of language had been used there could have been no argument made here by the Senator from Connecticut, which evinced so much learning, in defense of the position with which he concluded that there was not a dollar due these Indians, clinging to and all the time shutting out from view this idea of the possibility of an implied trust, carrying with it, as between grantor and grantee, an equitable obligation binding as between them. The Senator argued as if he believed that the case fell when he satisfied the Senate that the United States had taken a deed absolute in form. If he is right then I ought not to argue here that there is any basis for this claim. But, Mr. President, I prefer—

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. When the Senator gets through with that part of his argument which relates to the trust existing at the time of the treaty of 1866, I ask him at that point in his argument to allow me to interrupt him a moment or two?

Mr. DAWES. I shall be very glad to be interrupted.

Mr. President, I would have conceded in the outset, if it would not have deprived the Senate of the learned argument of the Senator from Connecticut, that it was an absolute deed. There is no question about it. This is the language of it, as plain as any deed ever drawn in Massachusetts or Connecticut:

The Choctaws and Chickasaws, in consideration of the sum of $300,000, hereby cede to the United States the territory west of the ninety-eighth meridian of west longitude, known as the leased district.

There is no limitation upon those words. It is an absolute grant, and it was unnecessary to show what followed from an absolute grant, that we had the power to appropriate it to any use we pleased.

Now, sir, what evidence exists that there was an implied trust? What evidence is there that the understanding between these parties was that we acquired that title for the purpose of putting friendly Indians on the land? If there is no satisfactory evidence that there did exist an implied trust, then this claim falls to the ground, for it can not rest on an express trust; and if there is no evidence of an implied trust, then it has no foundation.

The first evidence which I shall call to the attention of the Senate is the statement of the Senator from Connecticut himself. I summon the Senator from Connecticut himself to the stand to bear testimony that it was the understanding and belief of both parties when this deed was made, that this land was to be purchased for the purpose of placing friendly Indians upon it.

Mr. PLATT.—

On the first day of this debate—

Mr. PLATT. If the Senator will permit me, I will state just what I think was the condition under which this last conveyance or cession was made. I think both parties supposed that that land would always be used for an Indian government, but I do not think that the United States made any stipulation with the Indians that it would so use it. I think that was in contemplation of the parties.

So whatever language was used to obtain whatever was obtained from the Choctaw Indians at that time, it was obtained with the understanding of both parties—

Mr. PLATT. I beg the Senator's pardon. If he quotes me or summons me as his witness, he should use the exact words which I used—a supposition, not an understanding. They supposed, perhaps, that that was the fact. I think I did not use the word "understanding."

Mr. DAWES. That is a difference that should be located in Philadelphia. [Laughter.] "They supposed"—that is to say, they had it in their minds. What does the Senator think is the difference between "supposition" and "understanding?"

Mr. PLATT. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator. I shall, however, if he desires me to.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator thinks we are trying the merits of this case between the United States and a band of Indians as we try a little trespass case in a justice's court in Massachusetts, either he or I have mistaken our duty here as legislators, and it is probably I—

Mr. PLATT. Shall I interrupt the Senator now?

Mr. DAWES. Not now. I read the Senator's words, and the Senator has put in his explanation.

The next evidence which I propose to call up in support of the idea that there was this implied trust, will be found on the eighteenth page of the report made to the House of Representatives in the last Congress. It is from the report of the Indian Commissioner of the year previous to the entering into this undertaking, and it is in these words:

After extolling area and fertility of Indian Territory, and suggesting as to the Cherokees, Creeks, Choctaws, and Chickasaws "that they should be required to receive within the limits of their country other tribes with whom they are on friendly terms," etc., the honorable Commissioner remarks:

"Under these circumstances I feel that I can not too strongly urge the importance of preserving the 'Indian country' for the use of Indians alone, and in all treaties or other arrangements which may hereinafter be made with its former owners, insisting upon, and, if need be, enforcing such terms as will secure ample homes within that country for all such tribes as from time to time it may be found practicable and expedient to remove thereto."

That was the plan of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, communicated to the Executive the summer before he himself was appointed chairman of a commission to go down into that Territory and carry out these views. One would infer from that statement that he thought it would be a good deal of a concession to obtain from these Indians of the Indian Territory the right to settle other Indians there. There is nothing in it indicating that he had an idea that he could ever get from those Indians a concession to settle white people there. His end and purpose was to obtain from those Indians the large concession of permitting friendly Indians to rest there, and with that view proclaimed the Executive appointed him at the head of a commission and gave that commission these instructions. These instructions are the next evidence which I summon up here in support of the supposition which my distinguished friend from Connecticut says everybody then entertained.

These Indians had been in rebellion; they had broken their treaties, and this Commissioner thought it was a favorable opportunity when we made new treaties with them to get this concession, and he was put at the head of a commission to go down there and try it, carrying with him these instructions:

First. Each tribe must enter into a treaty for permanent peace and amity with themselves, each nation and tribe, and the United States.

Third. The institution of slavery—

I need not read it all—shall be abolished.

Fourth. A stipulation in the treaties that slavery * * * shall never exist in the tribe. * * *

Fifth. A portion of the lands hitherto owned and occupied by you must be set apart for the friendly tribes now in Kansas and elsewhere, on such terms as may be agreed upon by the parties and approved by the Government, or such as may be fixed by the Government.

That is one of the large concessions which you are instructed to demand in your negotiations.

Sixth. It is the policy of the Government, unless other arrangements be made, that all the said nations and tribes in the Indian Territory be formed into one consolidated government—

Wherever they may exist in that Territory, whether within what we now call the "Five Nations" or elsewhere, all the nations and tribes shall be gathered under one consolidated government—after the plan proposed by the Senate of the United States in a bill for organizing—

What?—

the Indian Territory.

Seventh. No white person, except officers, agents, and employés of the Government, or of any internal improvement company authorized by the Government, will be permitted to reside in the Territory, unless formally incorporated with some tribe according to the usages of the band.

Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut thinks this does not mean anything. The sixth provision reads:

It is the policy of the Government, unless other arrangements be made, that all the said nations and tribes in the Indian Territory be formed into one consolidated government.

The Senator says that refers only to the Indians and not to the lands. That is so; but what follows? Is it not as clear as daylight that the object was to appropriate the Indian Territory to Indians under one government? They say so.

I did not interrupt the Senator, but I wanted to ask him what he supposed would have become of this negotiation if there had been an intimation that white people might be put on any of these lands whenever the United States chose? The Choctaws even objected to this seventh proposition because it was not strong enough. The seventh proposition is:

No white person, except officers, agents, and employés of the Government, or of any internal improvement company authorized by the Government, will be permitted to reside in the Territory, unless formally incorporated with some tribe according to the usages of the band.

On September 11, 1865, in a letter addressed to the commissioners of the United States, the Choctaw delegates said:

"In answer, therefore, to your propositions to the several tribes of Indians, we say that the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth articles meet our approval."

We will consent that the Indian Territory may, with all the tribes in it, be gathered under one consolidated government—and submitted in lieu of the seventh proposition a proposition which provided—

Just what they provided is in these words:—

that "No white person, except officers, agents, employés of the Government, or of any internal improvement company authorized by the Government of the United States; also, no person of African descent except our former slaves, or free persons of color who are now or have been residents of the Territory, will be permitted to reside in the Territory unless formally incorporated with some tribe according to the usages of the band."

The Indians wanted to carry it further and keep out the blacks. Suppose the commissioners had said, "We calculate to get this in such phraseology that we can put white people there; that is our intention;" the Senator from Connecticut would not contend for a moment that the Indians would have treated an hour after that.

But the Senator from Connecticut says that that has reference solely to the home territory, and he says that it is evident that it is because the Choctaws, when they came to make their treaty, went on, not only ceding this land, but they went on and incorporated, at great length and in great detail, into that treaty the idea of a government among themselves. In that provision for that local government so particular were they that no white man should come in there, even under their government, that they put it into the treaty there in that local government. The Senator from Connecticut shakes his head. Am I mistaken?

Mr. PLATT. I think so.

Mr. DAWES. They commence their provision for their local government in the thirty-first article and go into all the details, and then we come to the forty-third article. They made in this treaty the United States promise:

The United States promise and agree that no white person except officers, agents, and employés of the Government, and of any internal improvement company, or persons traveling through, or temporarily sojourning in, the said nations, or either of them, shall be permitted to go into said territory unless formally incorporated, etc.

And the Senator says that having put that provision in there shows that that is all was meant in the instructions given to the commissioners when they went to negotiate with those tribes as to all their territory, and he finds some strength in the fact that in the books from which he read the word "territory" was printed with a little "t," showing that it had no reference to the Indian Territory, but to that part of the Territory which is the home government. Now, I am sorry to disturb the Senator, but the book I have, printed by the authority of Congress, has it printed with a big "T." The Senator has a book printed by authority of Congress which prints it with a little "t," and I have a book printed by authority of Congress in which it is printed with a big "T," and it is a pretty big thing anyway. If we turn to the instructions which the Senator says can not mean anything but the home government because territory is printed with a little "t," he will find that "Territory" in the instructions is printed with a big "T." Do not let us decide this question between these Indians and ourselves by such arguments.

These are not the only witnesses of what the understanding or supposition was when this deed was made. Mr. Secretary Schurz was called upon for an opinion in reference to this matter, and on the nineteenth page of this report he says:

By article 4 of the Creek treaty, etc.

He recites all those treaties.

By these treaties title was guaranteed to the several tribes, and it was provided that the lands should never be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory, but should remain subject to the intercourse laws, which laws have, as before stated, continued in force in all parts of the Territory to the present time.

The title acquired by the Government by the treaties of 1866 was secured in pursuance and furtherance of the same purpose of Indian settlement which was the foundation of the original scheme.

That purpose was the removal of Indian tribes from the limits of the political States and Territorial organizations, and their present permanent location upon other lands sufficient for the needs of each tribe. These lands being ample in the area for the purpose, it has become a settled policy to locate other tribes thereon as fast as arrangements can be made, and provisions have been constantly made by treaties, agreements, and acts of Congress to effect these objects.

That purpose is expressly declared in the said treaties. The cessions of the Creeks and Seminoles are stated to have been made "in compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon." These words must be held to create a trust equivalent to what would have been imposed had the language been "for the purpose of locating Indians and freedmen thereon."

The land ceded by the Choctaws and Chickasaws were, by article 9 of the treaty of June 22, 1865, "leased—leased to the United States * * * for the permanent settlement of the Wichita and such other tribes or bands of Indians as the Government may desire to locate therein."

That is a misdate.

The treaty of 1866 substituted a direct purchase for the lease, but did not extinguish or alter the trust. In 1867 the Kiowas, Comanches, and Apaches were settled upon these lands by treaty. In 1869 the Cheyennes and Arapahoes were located by Executive order, the Wichitas being already upon a portion of the same prior to the purchase.

The Senator makes this broad and conclusive answer to this statement of Mr. Schurz, that he was not a lawyer, and that he would not have made that statement in that form if he had been a lawyer. Perhaps that is true. The Senator would not have made it, and I should not have made it in that form. The purchase did not extinguish the trust, because the trust was not created by the purchase. The trust existed and was implied, and, therefore, if Mr. Schurz had simply said that the implied trust remained the same notwithstanding this purchase he would have stated it with almost as much legal accuracy as the most learned Senator who has argued this case in the Senate Chamber. That was the true method of stating it. As a lawyer would state it, the trust implied accompanying this positive absolute conveyance was not changed by the conveyance.

Mr. President, I shall not be able, I regret to say, to conclude my remarks before the time arrives for the execution of the order of the Senate for to-day, and therefore, if the Senate does not object, I shall postpone until Monday what I may have occasion to say further upon this subject.

DEATH OF SENATOR EPHRAIM K. WILSON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Senate will proceed to consider the special order, unanimously agreed to be taken up at this hour, on which the Chair recognizes the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions will be read. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Ephraim K. Wilson, late a Senator from the State of Maryland.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay proper tribute of regard to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions offered by the Senator from Maryland.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, another of those solemn occasions which have so often of late painfully checked the proceedings of the Senate and turned our thoughts from the affairs of public life and the strifes of ambition to the serious future, brings us to-day in the presence of the grave, and makes it our duty to offer tributes of respect to the memory of a former associate, who for nearly six years enjoyed the unbroken confidence and esteem of this body.

My late colleague and friend, Ephraim King Wilson, was born at Snow Hill, Md., December 22, 1821, and died in this city February 24, 1891. He had thus almost completed the period allotted by the Psalmist as the limit of human life, when called to the dread account.

Like most public men who have attained national distinction, he had to struggle against adverse fortune, and to depend mainly on self-exertion for support and advancement. His father, an eminent lawyer, died when this son was a child, bequeathing to him a good name as his only inheritance. He attended school at his birthplace until the age of 15, and then moved to Philadelphia in the hope of pursuing his studies there and of permanently improving his condition.

Without means to attain the first object, he sought employment in a store and remained in that service for a year. The friendly aid of relatives induced him to return home, where he resumed the plan of education originally formed, at the local academies. In 1841, when 20 years old, he graduated with excellent repute at Jefferson College, Pennsylvania.

He taught school for six years in the academies where he had been a prominent pupil, and where his sterling qualities were greatly valued by the faculties of those institutions. During this time of struggling self-support he studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1848. But in the previous year, the people, who knew the worth of his character and the measure of his intellectual reach, elected him to represent them in the house of delegates as a starting step to his predicted eminence.

For twenty years he practiced law with success in a locality where the professional business was not large, and its rewards were limited as compared with that of the great cities. He served as an elector in 1852 on the Pierce and King ticket, when the Democrats achieved a notable victory over the Whigs of that day.

In 1869 he was chosen school examiner and treasurer of Worcester County, and in 1872 he was elected to the House of Representatives in the Forty-second Congress. Subsequently he became judge of the first judicial district of Maryland, and, for six years he won golden opinions for the manner and ability with which that high trust was administered.

On retiring from the bench he was elected to the Senate in 1884, and was reelected in 1890, but died a week before his second term would have begun.

In these different positions, held from early manhood to the close of a long and honorable career he always attracted the fullest trust of the people whom he served. Those who knew him best loved him most for the virtues which, early in life, had enlisted their sympathy and won their affection.

He made no claim to be a brilliant orator nor a showy statesman. On the contrary, he shrank from public parade of any kind; was of a retiring nature, and belonged to that valuable order of public men who, in Parliament and in Congress, do so much to shape legislation by wise counsel and temperate action. He was therefore strong in the committee room where measures are primarily considered, and where his investigations, judgment, and advice were always treated with deserved deference. His speeches before the Senate were arguments, clear, strong, and convincing, and never failed to give high evidence both of the manly sincerity of his convictions and the excellence of his intellectual ability.

Duty was the guide of his life, as conscience was his mentor. His convictions were strong because they rested on principles that rarely relaxed, and, if at all, only on changed conditions justifying the exception. No Senator was more profoundly impressed than he with the perils involved in the "force bill," nor was any more grateful for the patriotic and generous support from the other side which averted that threatened evil. He would have made any personal sacrifice to recognize their aid on that occasion.

His speech on that bill, treating the subject in its constitutional, legal, and political aspects, was a masterly exposition of every point, and placed him in the front of a debate which will pass into history as among the most memorable and important that ever engaged the best minds of the Senate.

His moral courage was of the highest purity and strength. An incurable malady had long warned him that the sword of the destroyer hung suspended by a hair over his head, and might fall at any unexpected moment. With the firm faith of a true Christian he accepted the doom without a murmur, trusting to the mercy of God, and pursued his paths in private and public life calmly, as if no warning had been given.

My personal acquaintance with Mr. Wilson began twenty years ago, when he became a member of the Forty-second Congress. Residing in different parts of the State, our intercourse was limited until he entered the Senate in 1885. From that time forward, until he was summoned at the bar of Divine Justice, our relations were intimate and cordial, marked by a perfect reciprocal confidence, and without a jar to disturb an earnest friendship, which will always be preserved among my most cherished recollections.

An exemplary life of stern integrity, of sterling honor, and of sincere devotion to the cause of justice, under all conditions, furnish the noblest epitaph to embalm his memory.

When, in the order of Providence, our time comes to close these earthly scenes and to prepare for the everlasting future, as we all should strive to do, let us indulge the cheering hope of being welcomed, as he deserved to be, with "Well done, good and faithful servant."

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, my personal acquaintance with Ephraim King Wilson is limited to the few years of his membership of this body. During that comparatively brief period I came to know him well. Our association was of such character as gave me definite knowledge of the man, and I found him one—

Who many a noble gift from Heaven possessed.

He was a good man. Can I say more of and for him than these few words express? They embrace all of duty, of conscience, of effort, of mindfulness of others, which evolve that character of human life which stamps with its approval those lines of Longfellow wherein he says:

There is no death! what seems so is transition:
This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the life elysian,
Whose portal we call death.

As we now look upon the portal through which our honored and respected associate has gone from us, and recall the characteristics of the life which he passed in the field of mortal activities, we will not doubt that he now participates in joys which abound in the "life elysian."

He served his State and the nation in various public positions. At the early age of 26 years he was elected a member of the Maryland house of delegates. This fact bears testimony of the high esteem in which the community of which he was a member held him. Nor did his official conduct detract from the character and volume of that esteem. He served his State in both the legislative and judicial departments of its government. He also served the State and the nation in both branches of Congress. And the members of this body know that he was faithful to his trust and competent to discharge its duties. Conscience and duty were his constant companions. Hand in hand they walked with him. This was as he desired it should be, and their presence rounded out the perfection of the quiet contentment and peaceful satisfaction of his useful life.

This dominant trait in the character of Senator Wilson was not confined to the sphere of his public service. As a member of the community in which his home was situated it was ever present with him. Hence while his standard of personal and private conduct was of a high and exacting order, it was not void of a recognition of the element of weakness so often found in men. He recognized that men whose lives were not wholly in harmony with the standard which measured his own might still have done some deeds and effected some results which would make himself and all others of right tendencies their debtors. In such cases I feel quite sure that he would have been willing to apply the words of Whittier, in respect of Burns, and have said:

Let those who never erred forget
His worth, in vain bewailings;
Sweet soul of song!—I own my debt
Uncanceled by his failings!

Nor would this have lowered the high character of the standard which he had erected for the regulation of his own conduct. The more probable effect would have been to have drawn the attention of the erring ones to that better rule of life and of action presented by his standard, at the base of which Justice and Mercy joined hands. Many incidents in the life and experiences of our departed associate illustrative of the suggestion I have expressed might be cited, but I will let them rest where he planted them and with an assurance that I may with truth repeat in his case the words of another:

Man's works shall follow him.

In other lines of life than those I have indicated our departed brother gave abundant evidence that he was what I have called him—a good man. His domestic life presents a picture of beauty, love, tranquillity, and happiness upon which we may look and in very truth exclaim: "There is no place like home."

These descriptive words are few in number, but in comprehensive reach they are without limit in respect of all facts and tendencies which carry us towards a realization of the best conditions of society. If they could truthfully be applied to all of the shelters of domestic life in this land, the necessity for the enactment of regulative laws by the nation and the States would be greatly reduced. That this is not so is not the fault of the man to whose name we do honor to-day. He did his part. In his own case he succeeded. His example and efforts aided many others. He was not selfish. He wished well to all. He worked for what he deemed the good of all. While in some respects his judgment may have failed in its efforts to reach right conclusions it did not do so in respect of those domestic conditions which constitute home life. It would never have been deemed inappropriate by his neighbors for them to hear his domestic circle singing that soul-pleasing song, Sweet Home. And it may be truthfully said when that song and the conditions of the home in which it may be sung are in harmony peace and joy therein abound.

It may be said that such homes are effects, and that causes lie behind them. I will not dispute the correctness of this proposition. I prefer to admit that it is true, for the admission opens the door to an inquiry the results of which will support every assertion I have made concerning the life and ways of Senator Wilson. Why was he the kind of man I have described? Trace his life back to the home in which he was born and spent his childhood, and with which his youth and early manhood were connected, and there is found a chain of evidence of unbroken links connecting his sturdy excellence of character as we knew him with surroundings and influences ever present in the home of his parents. They were members of the Presbyterian Church, and religious thoughts, methods, and incentives to right action were always active in evolving the correct and admirable traits of character which we know Senator Wilson possessed, and which assured to him the respect and confidence of every member of this body who served with him during the years of his membership here.

The influences which I have named as ever present in the home of his parents failed not in their action upon him. Day by day he felt their ever-present force, and as the passing years moved him on to that period of life when he could appreciate the lesson which they evolved, he appropriated it unto himself as a rule of action, and obeyed it to the close of his life. He came to realize that—

The great Creator to revere
Must sure become the creature.

He took to himself the lesson which the conditions of the parental home life taught him with firm resolve:

Not for to hide it in a hedge,
Nor for a train attendant;
But for the glorious privilege
Of being independent.

To the practicalities and daily routine of his life he applied that lesson, and through all the years and experiences of his temporal journey it assured to him an independence of action which belongs only to those whose motives, actions, and lives are open books for all to read and understand. Such independence always gives happiness to its possessor, who is never weighted down by any secret which he fears may come to the knowledge of others. This character of independence accompanied Senator Wilson from the home of his childhood, where the religious teachings and influences of his parents prepared him for that journey of life which closed in the home of his own family, where like conditions were ever present. All along the journey of his life this element of strength accompanied him. In early home, in school, in private occupations, in the domestic circle, in public station, and in the presence of that messenger who summoned him to enter upon the life elysian this element of strength was ever with him. This proves that by him its presence was ever welcome; that his heart and mind were ever open to it.

Mr. President, we do but perform a duty by according formal recognition to the admirable traits of character ever present in the life of Senator Wilson. Let not our remembrances of him end with this day. We owe it to ourselves as well as to him that this shall not be. The lines of the years which measured his life do also encircle a field of reminiscences where we may gather facts, test principles, study motives, and learn how surely moral forces and religious influences tend to promote the best interests of the individual, the home, the family, and the community. We may do all of this and not sever contact with the actual facts of his personal experiences in life. And this but proves that all that I have said in respect of the high standard of his character, the facts, methods, influences, and motives which developed and established it, and the results which came to himself and others therefrom constitute but a true story of his life. This being the case, I feel free to earnestly repeat the injunction I have heretofore uttered—let not remembrances of him end with this day. The lessons embraced in the lines of his life may be helpful to all who remain on Time's side of the portal through which he has passed from us to the life elysian. He has gone from us, but the lessons remain with us, and if studied and rightly used will give strength to all who advance towards the portal through which he has passed.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, when I came here in March, 1885, I met for the first time Hon. E. K. Wilson, who had a few days before taken his seat in this body as a Senator from the State of Maryland. He was then past the meridian of life, had served in the other House of Congress, and for many years as judge of the court in his State, and was in full possession of strong, vigorous, and well-cultivated intellectual powers. From that time until his death in February, 1891, I sat near him in this Chamber, and learned to know him intimately and well.

I know from the character of the man and from conversations had with him that the idea would have been peculiarly and especially disagreeable to him if he had thought that any Senator here would after his death overstate, embellish, or exaggerate in any way his abilities, his virtues, or his good qualities. I would not willingly disregard his wishes in this behalf, and yet it is difficult to speak of him as he was without seeming to exaggerate to those who did not know him well. Judge Wilson was peculiarly and in a marked degree a modest man, and I think in his own mind habitually, undervalued, and underestimated his powers and his abilities. He was a man of studious habits, and with strangers retiring in his disposition. He had read and thought much. He knew the history of his own and other countries well. He was an accurate and profound lawyer, and had made a special study of the Constitution of the United States.

He was thoroughly familiar with all of its clauses and sections, with the reasons given by its framers for their adoption, together with the rulings and decisions of the Supreme Court bearing upon each. And the speeches made by him here as to the powers and duties of Congress under the Constitution entitle him to rank with the ablest lawyers of the Senate. There is running through all of these speeches a purity of thought and purpose, a devotion to duty, a love of country, and an earnest desire for the happiness and prosperity of the people that show him to have been a patriot and a true man.

Judge Wilson was not a great leader of men, nor did he desire to be; he was too modest and unassuming for that; he did not possess that aggressiveness, that self-assertion, that inborn desire to control and direct the actions of others that is necessary to successful leadership. And yet the knowledge of men and their conduct, the quick perception of justice, of right and wrong, and firmness in adhering to principle were qualities that he possessed to an unusual degree. I have never known a more thoroughly honest man or a purer man in each and all of his acts, both public and private.

During the six years that I was associated with him I never knew him to do an act that a gentleman ought not to do, or that could justly be the subject of criticism; and when his mind and conscience were convinced that he was right, no persuasion and no influence could swerve or change him from his course. I distinctly remember a conversation I had with him shortly before his death. It was in regard to a bill pending here to which we were both strongly opposed. I asked him, in case it became necessary to defeat it, if he thought we would be justified in withholding our votes for the purpose of breaking a quorum, and he answered me in substance that he regarded the bill as a very bad one; that it would work great injury to the people of the country, and especially to the people of the Southern States; that he was bound to those people by many ties, and especially by the fact that his favorite brother had fallen in battle a soldier in the Southern army, and that there was no personal sacrifice that he would not make to serve them, or to prevent injury to the country in which they lived; but the Constitution required him as a Senator to vote if present, that he had sworn to obey it, and that he dared not violate his oath.

And this, Mr. President, was in keeping with his whole life and the principle upon which he acted in every case. Without any pretence and without parade of superior virtue he did the right as he saw the right. Judge Wilson lived for years in the constant expectation of sudden death; he knew that the disease from which he was suffering was liable to cause his death at any moment; he often spoke of it, not lightly or irreverently, nor in any gloomy or desponding way, but calmly and courageously, as a brave man would speak of something that could not be avoided, and that he was ready to meet without fear of the future, but that he hoped might be postponed for the sake of his wife and daughters, who were dependent upon him and to whom he was devotedly attached. Judge Wilson believed in the Christian religion with all the faith and confidence of a little child, or as he once said that he had no more doubt of its truth than he had that sooner or later death would come to us all.

Such is a simple statement of the life and character of the deceased Senator as it was impressed upon me. He was the highest and best type of the old-time Southern gentleman—brave, generous, open, direct, and unsuspicious, despising fraud, false pretense and double dealing of every character, full of charity for the faults and mistakes of others, always respectful and deferential to all womanhood, thoughtful and considerate of the feelings of all with whom he came in contact, devoted to his country, his home, and his family, he lived and died the true gentleman and the true man. As I stood by his deathbed in the presence of his weeping wife and daughter, I could but feel that it was impossible for any man to have been intimately associated with him, without having a higher and better opinion of his fellow-man, and without feeling also that for one who had done his duty so faithfully and well here, it could not be otherwise than well with him hereafter.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, an exacting and somewhat impatient public is disposed at times to criticize the Senate because on occasions when one of our members has deceased we pause for an hour and lay aside the intense work of Senatorial life to recall his virtues and to pay our tribute of respect to his memory. I think the Senate does well to pause. I think it is well at times to forget the intense, practical, utilitarian life which we live, and turn our thoughts to other features of life.

"Life" and "death" are the two most momentous words in our language. Their correspondents are the most momentous words in every language. Each is equally a mystery.

Life is a thing of daily experience. From the time when we first know that we live till we pass off the stage we are daily conscious of living. We enjoy life and cling to it. Death is not a matter of human experience. No man has experienced death. We only know that we shrink from it. It seems to me sometimes that these matters of life and death and their issues are of such transcendent importance, are of so much more consequence than the affairs of state, important as they are, that we do not think half enough of them.

I believe, then, it is well for the Senate to pause at times—to let a calm as of the holy Sabbath stillness steal over this room, where there is so much of contention and strife and struggle, that we may think upon what we are and what we are to be.

I cannot speak of the deceased Senator from the standpoint of an intimate personal friendship. Indeed, the associations of Senators here seldom result in close and intimate friendships. We all come to the Senate somewhat late in life; the Constitution prevents very young men from entering the Senate, and the ties of close personal friendship are not often formed after the years when men usually enter this body. And yet there is something growing out of our relations, something growing out of daily association in this Chamber, even if we do not see one another in the home, which I think leads us to appreciate a fellow Senator perhaps as much as in the case of intimate personal friendship outside of the Senate Chamber. We come intuitively, as it were, to know each other; and I think in no body in the world does a man pass for what he really is and in no other body is a man so well known by his associates and comrades as here in the Senate.

So I feel to-day that I have a right to speak a word in memory of the deceased; that I have a right to lay my tribute upon his grave; that I have a right to mingle my voice with the voices of those who were his more intimate personal friends.

He impressed me as being eminently a statesman, a gentleman of the olden time, a gentleman of the universal type, in the best sense of that word—a gentleman, one whose train of thought and expression reminded us of the times past, when this Government was in its infancy, and, sitting here to-day, I have thought that his appearance in the Senate Chamber was very much what we might expect if Samuel Chase and Charles Carroll of Carrollton, who signed the Declaration of Independence, or Luther Martin, who was so conspicuous in the Constitutional Convention, were permitted to come and take their seats in this Chamber.

He was a surviving representative and type of that class of men. He was simple, affable, courteous, dignified in his bearing, as he was faithful, earnest, and patriotic in his character. He was more than that—he was a Christian gentleman; and in these days, when men struggle for fame and position and for what are supposed to be the honors of this earthly life, it is well to remember that there is no honor higher than that of a Christian gentleman. He acted well his part, and we are told that "there all the honor lies."

He has gone from us, and I am sorry to say that when an associate departs from among us or from the walks of life we are apt to ask two questions about the deceased: Was he rich? As the world measures riches, I do not know and I do not care. I know, whether he had pecuniary means and wealth or not, that he was rich in all those qualities of mind and heart which ennoble human nature; and that in that sense he was rich. Was he great? I do not know, because I do not know what constitutes greatness. I do not know by what standard we are to judge men when we call them great. I know that no man can be honored by a State like Maryland with a seat in this body and be reflected with unanimity who is not able and strong, and who has not earned in some way the confidence of the people whom he represents.

It is enough for me to know this about him. And I know, too, that it may well satisfy human ambition to be able to represent a State in this Chamber, and to so possess the confidence of one's constituents as to be thus reflected.

Greatness is often factitious, deceptive; it is often wrought out for men by various means. I know that the deceased Senator never struggled to be esteemed great. I know that he would never make use of any means to parade himself in his State or in the nation as a great man. I know that he had no desire for what is called a national reputation; that he was content if he were known and appreciated within the borders of the State where he was born and where, I have no doubt, he looked forward with pleasure, if one can be pleased with such prospect, to sleeping in its soil. Senators who knew him most fully have said to-day, in our hearing, that he was a good man, a pure man, an honest man. Are not these qualities after all the real essentials of true greatness?

He has left us. One Saturday afternoon, in the busiest and most intense period of our legislation, he left his seat, apparently as well as usual, and apparently with no notice that he was to be summoned away, and on the Tuesday following he was gone.

Has that life which so impressed itself upon us—for his life has impressed itself upon ours—ended? It is said that no man lives for himself, no true man lives entirely in himself, but also in the lives of others with whom he associates and upon whom he impresses his own character. Has that life ended? Hope says no. Faith adds its negative; reason convinces us that it is not ended. So we hope, we believe, and in the light of revelation we know, that the mortal life which was so developed and rounded out here has now begun its period of immortal development and growth, and that if we are true, as he was true, we may yet meet him, who has but gone away, in that other world where all strife and struggle shall cease, except the strife as to who may best perform the will of the Infinite Master.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I came into this body on the same day with Judge Wilson, and though I had long known him by reputation, I had never met him before. Our acquaintance then begun ripened into a friendship which grew stronger with each succeeding year, and continued unbroken until that sad night when I stood beside his dying bed and witnessed through my tears the last expiring sigh which released his chafing spirit and marked the close of his honored and useful life.

It is not for me to dwell at length upon his character as developed in the State in which he lived and in the atmosphere of home and neighborly surroundings; but it is pleasant for me now to recall that my own State and the eastern shore of Maryland, where Judge Wilson passed his life, are essentially one community. The lower peninsula of Delaware and of the Eastern Shore counties of Maryland and Virginia is geographically unique. Its isolation before the days of modern transportation compelled a business and social intercourse which threw its people upon their own resources and produced a homogeneity of population, interests, and feeling that is largely observable down to the present day. Its people are the descendants of the original English settlers, with little or no foreign admixture since the war of the Revolution; and the sturdy virtues of the original stock have been preserved and strengthened under the opportunities presented by a fertile soil, abundant room, and free institutions.

Nowhere have the best traditions and instincts of the Anglo-Saxon race taken deeper root than in this region or more conspicuously borne their natural fruit of individual liberty protected by law, and of that developed capacity for self-government which has made possible the distinctive American commonwealth, and which remains the surest safeguard of its perpetuity.

Born of the best of this stock, Judge Wilson, by the inherited tendency of an honorable lineage, molded by such an environment, developed that beautiful and well-rounded character that it is our pride to speak of as typically American.

No truer representative of an intelligent, honest, and noble people ever held commission on this floor. With no alloy of selfishness or self-seeking to mar the fair proportions of his character, he seemed to avoid rather than seek the distinction of public office, and the State that delighted to honor him, whether in high judicial station or as one of its representatives in one branch and the other of the Federal Congress, honored itself in so choosing him. High individual character must always be the most valued product of a free State, and on the other hand no contribution can be made by the citizen to the upbuilding of his State and the well-being of its society more valuable and enduring than the high character himself achieves by the practice of private and civic virtues. This contribution Judge Wilson made in full measure to his State and to the nation.

His was a rare combination of intellectual and moral strength. His opinions on public questions were not hastily formed, but were the result of careful and painstaking investigation, by a well-disciplined mind, and were vitalized by an earnest moral nature. Judge Wilson thought and reasoned honestly, and a certain intellectual integrity characterized his mental processes and gave an almost religious strength and fervor to his convictions. These he could not compromise, much less surrender.

It is not surprising that such a man should impress himself strongly on those with whom he came in contact. But Judge Wilson had a natural reserve, and was so free from anything like self-exploitation, that only those who became well acquainted with him and were honored with his friendship could fully appreciate the value of his counsel, and the wisdom that characterized his thoughtful utterances. His judgment on public questions was often sought by his party associates, and was freely and fearlessly though withal modestly given. His speeches were always carefully prepared, and were characterized by clearness of thought, logical presentation of the matter in hand, and a sincerity of conviction that was itself persuasive. He never failed to secure respectful attention from the members of this body, as well from those who differed as from those who agreed with him politically.

These speeches as they are preserved in the record of our debates will be an enduring monument to his broad statesmanship, and a valuable contribution to the political thought of our time. But their present effect was due to the high, sincere character that was behind them. Such a character is stronger always than speech. The latter is only one mode of expression of the former; but there are a hundred other ways, often unseen, in which character exerts its potent influence on the thoughts and actions of men. We all felt stronger and safer for Judge Wilson's presence among us. Low or unworthy conceptions of public duty could not assert themselves or thrive in the moral atmosphere that surrounded Judge Wilson. He was—

The still strong man in a blatant land—

So beautifully described in "In Memoriam."

If time permitted it would be pleasant to dwell upon those tender graces of his character which so endeared him to his friends and made friends of so many. The quiet, genial smile with which he greeted you, and the genuine courtesy of his manner, were the outward expression of an inward grace; with an unobtrusive consideration for others, and an unaffected suppression of self; with an unvaunted, but always present, though quiet courage, he filled the ideal of a Christian gentleman. Clear in his high office, conscientious in the discharge of every duty, with unclouded mind and unabated Christian fortitude, he calmly awaited the inevitable end that sooner or later must come to all. As we stood by his open grave in the old churchyard at Snow Hill, where we laid him to rest, in the soil of the State he loved so well and served so faithfully, the prayer of the Psalmist almost involuntarily rose to our lips, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I respond with pleasure but in sorrow to the request of the friends of our late colleague to add a word of tribute to his memory.

When Ephraim K. Wilson, late a Senator from the State of Maryland, responded to the call of the Great Master, a good man in the broadest sense of that term, an able, efficient, and faithful Senator, passed to his rest.

It is perhaps a custom, which would doubtless be "more honored in the breach than the observance" to indulge in exaggerated eulogium on occasions like the present. While desiring to avoid subjecting myself to this criticism, I feel constrained to say it has never been my good fortune to become associated, either in public or private life, with a man more justly entitled to universal esteem, or more lovable in all respects, than was the late Senator Wilson. For six years I had the honor of being associated with him in the performance of the arduous duties of two important committees of the Senate—Claims and Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The intimate official and personal association which this service together of necessity created, afforded ample opportunity to become thoroughly acquainted with our late colleague in the several capacities of lawyer, judge, legislator, and private gentleman; and thus knowing him, no words of mine can appropriately or adequately express the high esteem with which I came to regard him long ere he was called to pay that greatest of all debts which nature and nature's God exact sooner or later of every individual of the human race.

Senator Wilson was in many respects, yes, I may say in all respects, a model man. Modest and retiring in disposition, courteous and kind in demeanor, he at all times, on all occasions, from all with whom he came in contact, compelled the very highest order of esteem and won universal respect. Firm in his convictions, deliberate in action, conscientious in the discharge of every duty, earnest and able in the advocacy of the right as he understood it, unsparing and even caustic in his denunciation of that which he believed to be wrong, he stood in all these respects a peer among the very best of his associates both within and without the Senate.

Judge Wilson was an able lawyer. There was nothing erratic in his mental make-up. He possessed that rare faculty of quickly noticing and accurately marking legal distinctions. He had a judicial mind. He readily comprehended and was quick to grasp the nature and scope of a legal proposition, and he seldom failed in accurately defining its boundaries, or in making correct application of the principle involved to the facts of the case in hand. He approached the investigation of a case with the utmost care, with scrupulous exactness, always bringing to bear upon it the most thorough research, and not until he had completely mastered every detail of both fact and law involved was he willing to define his position and rest his judgment. In the performance of official duty, industry, conscientiousness, and thoroughness were with him marked characteristics.

He was not an orator. His speeches in the Senate, while characterized by faultless diction and good literary taste, were not eloquent in phrase, but consisted rather of plain and accurate statement of facts and principles, followed by logical deductions and forceful arguments. His speeches were well calculated to carry conviction by reason of his faultless premises and correct reasoning. They were free, however, from any attempt at embellishment—to please the fancy or excite the imagination with the flowers of rhetoric.

He was a plain man of the older and better type. While in his daily life he was genial, companionable, and unostentatious, he was nevertheless always dignified in bearing, and in his intercourse with his fellow-men all the characteristics of the true Southern gentleman were always manifest. Well grounded in the current literature of the day, he was wholly free from the arts of the pedant.

He was an able and safe committeeman, a wise counsellor, an upright judge. As a member of the Committee on Claims, so great was the confidence reposed in him by his associates, both in respect of his legal ability to analyze and develop the real merits of a claim, and of his absolute impartiality as between claimant and the Government, that when he stated his conclusion it was, as a rule, accepted nem. con. And to-day if in the investigation of a case in that committee the statement is made that such case had at some prior time been examined and reported upon by the late Senator Wilson of Maryland, his report is immediately procured and his conclusions almost invariably adopted without further debate.

The State he has served so faithfully in the capacity of judge and legislator may in its past history have produced more eminent, more brilliant men, but in those great qualities of moral worth, integrity of purpose, and unflinching fidelity to every public and private trust, no one of them, however eminent, however brilliant, however good or great in all respects, is justly entitled to any more honorable mention or any more prominent place in the history of the State or nation. The captivating eloquence of a Winter Davis, the magic logic and surpassing power of argument of a Reverdy Johnson, may through the pages of history linger with matchless inspiration on the ears of future generations, to charm the fancy and incite the imagination of men; yet from those same historic pages is reflected the record of the genial, modest, noble life of our deceased colleague, which will live in history as one well worthy of imitation—a lesson to instruct, when the mere eloquence of words and the masterly logic of a great mind have lost their potentiality and wasted their power to charm.

In the death of the late Senator Wilson I confess having experienced a personal loss, and in sorrow I submit this brief but imperfect tribute to his memory. What a blessed satisfaction it must be to those who stood in closer relationship, bound to him by tender kindred ties, that the life that has gone out was so completely faultless, so free from all blemish, so pure, so exceptionally good! It is indeed with saddened hearts, moistened eyes, and inexpressible sorrow we take final earthly leave of a loved one as he stands on the brink of that dark and silent river; and when the phantom boat with its muffled oars and unseen sails moves noiselessly out across its measureless waters, bearing such loved one to the hidden shore of that "undiscovered country, from whose bourne no traveler returns," the heart grows weary and life seems to us worse than death, and to us to die seems better than to live. But then it is when encompassed by this whirlwind of sorrow that the knowledge of the fact, if fortunately the fact it be, that the record of the life obscured is such an one as marks the career, both public and private, of our late colleague, comes to the rescue, the sun breaks through the rifted clouds and again we think it good to live.

An able lawyer, a faithful, practical, efficient legislator, an upright judge, a modest, unassuming, dignified private gentleman has preceded us in the journey to the tomb. But he has left a monument to his name and fame more enduring than marble shaft and imperishable as the stars—a monument builded by himself. It is the proud, the spotless record of a pure, active, unostentatious, and useful public and private life. Peace to the ashes of the distinguished dead! His life was gentle as a mother's love and pure as the mountain stream. His name will be revered and his virtues treasured in the minds and hearts of his countrymen, but by none with greater devotion and fidelity than those who knew him best.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, during the closing hours of the Fifty-first Congress two of our distinguished colleagues departed this life; one, after suffering for months from a lingering and painful disease, which had made his seat long vacant before the final summons came, the other, after a brief illness, previous to which he had been engaged with his usual assiduity in the daily discharge of his duties in this Chamber. They were both near the border line of the allotted time of man; Senator Hearst had passed over itsome six months before, and Senator Wilson would have crossed it before the completion of the year upon which he had entered. The exacting demands of public business so near the close of the session did not permit their surviving colleagues to notice these sad events immediately after their occurrence in the manner established and sanctioned by the time-honored practice of this body, and it has been deferred to the present session to pay the usual tributes to the memories of those whose terms were thus prematurely closed.

My intimacy and association with Senator Wilson during the few years I have been honored with a seat in the Senate justify me in taking a personal part in the exercises of this day, which has been set apart to pay fitting tributes to his memory, and my admiration and regard for him make it a pleasant privilege to speak of his excellent qualities, his many virtues, his recognized ability as a lawyer, his faithful devotion to his duties as a public officer.

When I first came here as a member of this body, more than four years ago, I was assigned to a seat that brought me very near to him. I also found myself associated with him upon one of the hard-working committees of the Senate, and in our daily association and the frequent discussions and consultations of the committee room we had excellent opportunities of forming correct opinions of one another, and our acquaintance gradually ripened into a mutual friendship.

He enjoyed the advantages of a liberal education, and after graduating at Jefferson College in Pennsylvania he studied and practiced law and for six years was judge of the circuit in which his home was included. His associates upon the Committee on Claims of this body will all bear testimony to the diligence with which he investigated matters committed to him for examination, the readiness with which he discerned the important points of a case, the clearness with which he stated his conclusions, the strength of argument with which he fortified these conclusions in the committee room, and, when it became necessary, on the floor of the Senate. Although one of the older members of the committee he shrank from no labor, he avoided no responsibility, and was seldom absent from the committee room when the time arrived for holding a meeting. And when important legal questions were discussed upon this floor he not infrequently submitted a prepared argument, which included the results of his study and investigation, and his colleagues, who were interested in the subject under discussion, always found it profitable and instructive to listen to his statement of the question and the conclusions he had reached.

The people of Maryland were fond of doing him honor. In addition to his judicial services he represented his county in the house of delegates, his district in the national House of Representatives, his State in the electoral college, and in 1885 he became a member of this body. He had already been elected to serve a second term when his life of usefulness was closed before the new term commenced. In all these official positions he sustained himself well and discharged his duties earnestly, faithfully, conscientiously, successfully.

In this busy world of Congressional life there are many and various fields of usefulness. Opportunities for distinction are afforded to men whose abilities and acquirements are altogether dissimilar and whose previous opportunities and attainments have been widely different. Some have made legislation their profession and are armed and equipped with a thorough knowledge of all its details. During a long experience in public life, they have assisted in making history and know the inside as well as the outside workings of the principal events which have transpired within their period of observation and action. Some have spent the best years of their lives upon some particular subject until they have really become experts and when matters come before us in which those subjects are involved, these specialists are in a position to render invaluable service to the country.

The large majority of our membership, however, in both Houses come from the ordinary walks of life, and most frequently without any special training for the duties to be discharged here. They come from the different professions, from manufacturing interests, agricultural pursuits, mining industries, banking institutions, and other places of industry and activity. But whatever his previous experience a career is open to each. Some have a fondness and capacity for work that is done directly under the eye of the public and very naturally a higher estimate is put upon their services than upon the services of those whose best work is done in shaping the business of the body in the committee room and in the daily social intercourse of Senators with one another.

The brilliant speech is discussed from one end of the country to the other; but the carefully prepared report, which disposes of some great subject and includes the result of weeks of labor, is quietly filed away in the document room after its results have been accepted and acted upon, and in the vast majority of cases it is never even read publicly before the Senate. But Senators know the great value of work of this sort, and we are better able to appreciate those by whom it is done than those are who only see the results and hear the public debates.

Much of Senator Wilson's work was done in this quiet, unobtrusive way, though he was ever ready to defend his views and opinions publicly when the occasion required. He always thoroughly mastered his subject, and his opponent could never present a phase of it that he had not studied and considered. But his best work was in preparing for his committee meetings and in his consultations with his associates in the committee room. During the six years of his service he examined many cases and subjects of very great importance, and left the results of his investigations among the printed reports of his committee, where they will remain among our permanent records as silent witnesses of his ability and industry. His mind was eminently judicial, and there was no pride of opinion in him to keep him from modifying his decision, even up to the last moment that he had control of a case, if his researches or the light of the conference room developed new facts or clearer views of the law.

It was in this quiet, unostentatious way that he went on in the discharge of his duties here, enjoying the esteem of his associates and the confidence of the people whose interests he represented.

I have stated that death came to him after only a short warning, but the visit was not unexpected. He had been looking for it for many months, and at one time felt so doubtful as to whether he would live to complete his first term that he seriously contemplated whether he should not decline a reelection. Some improvement in his symptoms, however, caused him to dismiss this idea from his mind; but he used to talk of his symptoms and premonitions to his associates calmly and evidently without mental disturbance. He felt at times that he could not be sure of a single day and that he might be stricken down at any moment.

But he was prepared for the change, and death had no terrors for him. His daily walk among us attested the sincerity of the religious faith he professed. There was no ostentation about his religion, but during his long life it bore fruit, which proved it to be genuine. He was truthful, kind-hearted, gentle, forbearing, free from malice and ill-will, generous and just. No one who associated with him could doubt his sincerity. His faith and his works were in entire harmony.

Senator Wilson was born at Snow Hill, on the eastern shore of Maryland. It is the county seat of Worcester County, a quiet little town, apart from the great lines of trade and travel, in the midst of an agricultural country, between the Atlantic and the Chesapeake. Here he grew up, and here his home life was spent among neighbors and family connections, who loved and respected him.

It is in such quiet sections of our country, where there are comparatively few changes in the population, that life is spent most serenely. Men so situated do not hurry through the days of their usefulness in a mad rush for money and power and fame, and decay prematurely, but they grow old gradually, like the ripening grain, and enjoy the autumn of life with its mellowing tints.

I was a member of the committee that accompanied the remains of our departed friend to this peaceful home and saw on every side proofs of the high regard and respect in which he was held by all classes of his people. The coming of the funeral train had been announced by telegraph, and when we reached the section of country where he lived there were groups of people at every little station, white and black, who had collected to hear the particulars of his death and show their respect for "the Judge," as he was familiarly called.

When the burial services were held the morning after we reached Snow Hill, a large part of the population attended the funeral procession to the church where he had worshiped all his days, and the house was filled with an attentive congregation. We saw him laid at rest in the old-fashioned churchyard among the relatives and friends and neighbors who had gone before him to the life beyond.

This was the last of earth to him. But what a grand departure from earth's scenes. What a noble ending of a well-spent life was his. Faithful to every trust, enjoying the love of his family and neighbors, retaining to the last the confidence of the people of Maryland, he laid down life's burdens and cares and entered upon his eternal rest.

Well may the members of his family rejoice rather than sorrow as they contemplate his serene and peaceful and successful life, and his happy departure; well may the great State that gave him birth and honored him in his lifetime delight to do honor to his memory.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, a custom, grateful in observance and appropriate in ceremony, suspends the daily routine of the Senate, while the individual members of this body cease from labor.

This is not alone because an associate has been taken from his place, not alone because of sorrow, for "the air is full of farewells to the dying," but because a part is wanting of the prescribed means and appliances in the Government; because a break is made in the constitutional construction of the Senate. By the incident of death, a great State has been deprived of her constitutional representation here.

This, sir, it is that bids us pause while the tribute paid by the affectionate sorrow of those who here were his associates, to the memory of Ephraim K. Wilson, points to that place once so familiar to him, recalls that figure once so familiar to us, when day by day as health permitted with unobtrusive dignity he met the duties of his office. He was known in his place in the Senate as an unassuming man of strong intellect, sound judgment, scholarly attainment, careful and thorough in investigation. He did not often take part in debate, yet when he did address the Senate he was heard with deference by his colleagues, for all knew that his words were studied, that his sentiments were expressed after mature deliberation, and free from the bias of partisanship. Although he viewed the great questions of national import and administration in the light of his political affiliation, he would not allow his judgment to be perverted by party considerations nor permit his party allegiance to interfere with the continuance of the business of this body for the purpose of accomplishing a party advantage. Steadfast to his official obligations, constant in his service, his patriotism directed his partisanship.

Learned in the law, his knowledge, guided by sound judgment, brought him to conclusions in which his associates were apt to coincide when he had expressed the reasoning which led to his decision. Gifted with great mental power, trained by assiduous study, with rare perception, governed by a strict regard to the dictates of conscience in all things, he endeavored to do exact and equal justice.

His familiar friends knew that he was conscious of an infirmity that some day would loose the silver cord and break the pitcher at the fountain. Full well he knew that in his daily life he must avoid excitement, that he must shun the combat and live apart from strife if he would live out many days.

I first met Mr. Wilson at the beginning of the last Congress; we were assigned upon the same committee. In frequent meetings, the singular, almost feminine gentleness of his character, appealed to me; while, perhaps, disparity in years and strength moved him to tell me of himself, and of the care that he had exercised, made necessary by his ailment—an ever-present and impending shadow.

Others in more fitting diction than I could use have here recalled Mr. Wilson's service to his State and country; have told how willingly the people of his State had honored him; of his career while arbitrating their disputes, as judge, and then bestowed the expression of their highest confidence by elevating him to be their Senator. Not once, for he was just about to enter on a second term of service in the Senate when the shadow rested, and in the moment of its resting a change had come, and Ephraim K. Wilson had "entered into converse with the mighty dead."

Mr. President, it is difficult to say what is the measure of a man. To the possession of great wealth some ascribe success; in the expression of popular applause some see the culmination of desire; the adulation paid to conquering heroes some think the highest aim of human ambition; while others who recall the day when that place—his place that had been—just across this Chamber, was draped with black, while on the outer doorway to this room in heavy folds was hung the emblem of our mourning, the conspicuous tokens that death had entered here, might think that this could measure what he was. But, when the supreme moment comes, and fading sight leaves sightless eyes, we do not measure men by such rude scales.

It is the custom when a member of this body dies, that some of his companions, appointed by the presiding officer, shall represent the Senate at the funeral. With others, I performed that service, and journeyed from the Capitol to Mr. Wilson's home. A company of mourners—for all were mourners—gathered in and round the church where Mr. Wilson in his life had met in worship with his friends. It seemed as if the whole community had gathered there to do him reverence.

Old men were in that company, whose whitened locks and feeble steps betokened that their separation from their friend would not be long; young men were there, and through their tears looked on the face of him who had been from their youth their counselor and friend; and children, too, had come in sorrow; and all were mourners; not because a Senator was dead, not because a leader of the people had passed away, but because their neighbor, their kind, true, noble-hearted friend had passed the "portal we call Death." And when the man of God arose a solemn silence fell upon the congregation, broken only by the preacher's voice as he rehearsed, in part, the story of Mr. Wilson's life, spoke of him as a friend, a neighbor, and a man, and bade the youth to emulate the virtues of the man who was their father's friend and theirs; spoke words of comfort to them, and, quoting from the word of Him who when on earth had said, "I am the resurrection and the life," told them they should not grieve as those who have no hope. Tenderly the friends of earlier years bore their dead friend into the little churchyard, called in ancient Saxon phrase "God's acre," and there committed his ashes to the earth and his spirit unto Him who gave it.

As we turned to leave that new-made grave, that little "chamber that faces toward the sunrise," I looked into the faces of his mourning friends, old men and young, and each one told how good he was, how gentle and how kind; how he had ministered to the wants of those in need, had sympathized with those who were distressed. The whole community had sought his counsel, and in perplexity had gone to him for aid; and as they told the story, into my mind came that old tale about the search for that rare face, cut strong, yet kind, against the sky. The rugged rocks set in the mountain side, so massive and so grand, when viewed from one position, show the form and feature of the human face. So, it seemed to me, I had viewed him. In his place here, the strong and sturdy mind, set in the structure of the Government; and when I viewed him there, that one position gave a new picture, and I beheld the kindest, gentlest phase of his whole character. There his greatness only made his character more gentle, there his fame but made his life more kind; and I saw the measure of that man in the sorrow of his friends.

We eulogize the dead, raise monuments to heroes, embalm the memory of statesmen in the archives of the nation. The eulogy is forgotten, the monument crumbles, the archives of nations are obliterated, but such a life as Mr. Wilson lived is a memorial time can not destroy; for, "each man makes his own stature, builds himself; virtue alone outbuilds the Pyramids; her monuments shall last when Egypt's fall."

Mr. GIBSON of Maryland. Mr. President, while the arrows of death which flew so thick and fast among the ranks of the Fifty-first Congress robbed the councils of our country of many from other States with whom it was our happy fortune to meet, those of us from the State which I have the honor, in part, to represent are called upon to-day to mourn the loss of a personal friend and colleague.

As a friend lamenting his death, and as a Senator of the United States, among the first and the earliest of my duties in this body, I to-day lay my tribute of respect upon the grave of my honored predecessor, the late Senator Ephraim K. Wilson.

Cox, Nutting, and Wilber of New York, Randall, Kelley, and Watson of Pennsylvania, Gay of Louisiana, Laird of Nebraska, Townshend of Illinois, Walker of Missouri, and Phelan of Tennessee, in the House; while Beck, Wilson, and Hearst in the Senate complete the dread list of those who fell victims to the grim reaper death.

As thus conspicuous, Mr. President, as was the Fifty-first Congress in the death of its members, it suffered no more serious loss than in the death of Senator Wilson.

The insatiate archer found no more shining mark than in him. In the city of Washington, at ten minutes past 10, on Tuesday night, February 24, 1891, Senator Wilson died of heart disease. He sank away without pain.

He was conscious almost to the last. When asked if he suffered any pain his lips moved in answer: "No."

He had for some time had a premonition of death. It seems, in talking to an associate—Senator BERRY of Arkansas—shortly before his death, he remarked: "I have heart disease, and fear it will carry me off like a flash some day."

I entered Congress with him in 1885, he having been elected to the Senate by the preceding Legislature, while I had just been elected to my first term in the House. I qualified as a member of the House when Congress first assembled, early in December, but he was unable to take the oath of office as a member of the Senate until the 19th of March following.

His delay in taking his seat in the Senate was due to his desperate illness, from the first attack of what, it seems, he felt himself was to be the fatal malady which would take him off sooner or later.

When he first appeared in the Senate—speaking of himself afterwards with reference to that period—he said: "I have often thought of the startled gesture of surprise my friends made when they first saw me—a pale, thin, haggard man, just arisen from a bed of dangerous and protracted illness! To me small, then, indeed, did the chances appear that I would live to serve in the Senate as long as I have."

That terrible form of heart disease known as angina pectoris had claimed him for its own, and for him there was never more of hope in this world. His friends—myself among the number—did not appreciate this fact; but he knew it, and we now realize that he appreciated it. "He knew that the angel of death had come near him before," and "wondered why he had stayed his dart."

As time drew on he recovered, apparently, his usual good health. His friends felt that the grand climacteric of his life had been reached and successfully passed, and were looking forward for him for a new lease of life of usefulness to his State and country. Alas, how little they knew.

For many weeks and months did he bear with silent solicitude and noble reticence the consciousness of a painful and fatal malady. "The specter of death had been ever with him, the unbidden guest at every feast, and the companion of every waking hour." He walked in the very valley of the shadow of death. And yet all the while he sought to have those about him infer that his eye had not grown dim, and that neither was his natural force abated.

Senator Wilson's life, from his youth up, was passed 'mid the scenes and associations of that beloved section of the State where he was born. He was never far away from "the brooks by which, in early life, he sported." He lived under the trees his fathers had planted, enjoyed their shade, and was nourished by their fruit.

While his life was not one of vicissitudes, it was not an uneventful one. He was born December 21, 1821, at Snow Hill, Worcester County, on the eastern shore of Maryland, a section of his State he was specially called to represent as a Senator of the United States.

After being admitted to the bar, in 1848, he opened a law office in his native town of Snow Hill. His faithfulness to all the duties of life, both public and private, soon brought him clients and a lucrative practice, furnishing him at the same time with passports to universal confidence and esteem.

He practiced law for twenty years, but the altercations of the profession and the excitement of the trial table were not congenial to his tastes, and we find him withdrawing from the bar, and, like Diocletian of old, retiring to the peaceful pursuits of agriculture upon his farm.

Without desiring it, in 1872 he was nominated and elected to Congress, and distinguished himself to an extent rarely attained in one term. Contrary to the practically unanimous demand of his constituents, he declined a renomination, and again retired to the indulgence of his quiet taste in farming and literary pursuits. He was not long, however, permitted to remain in retirement.

In the winter of 1878 he was appointed by the governor of Maryland as associate judge to fill an unexpired term. In the following fall he was elected for a term of fifteen years as one of the associate justices of the first judicial circuit of Maryland.

He was elected to the United States Senate in January, 1884, to succeed Senator James B. Groome. His election to the United States Senate came as unexpectedly to him as did his election to the House of Representatives. But the Senate of the United States was to him, after all, the forum of his efforts, and its honorable commendation was the goal of his ambition. On January 15, 1890, he was elected for the term expiring March 4, 1897. Alas, that when his people commended this chalice of exultant satisfaction to his lips he should not be permitted to enjoy it! He never lived to enter upon his second term.

Judge Wilson was twice married. His first wife was Mary Dickerson, of Worcester County, who left him two children, a daughter, Ella, and a son, W. Sidney Wilson. This son was the "apple of his father's eye," a man of magnificent physique, pleasant address, happy social qualities, and of high position in his chosen profession of the law. He represented with honor and distinction his county in the house of delegates of Maryland, and was subsequently elected to the position of prosecuting attorney for his county, a position which he now holds with distinguished success.

In 1869 Judge Wilson married Miss Julia A. Knox, of Snow Hill. Four children blessed that marriage, two sons and two daughters. The sacred and tender relations of Judge Wilson's domestic life were of the happiest character. In early life he was united to the Presbyterian Church, and he died in the faith of his fathers. Within the sacred precincts of the churchyard of old "Makmie Church," in the restoration of which he took such a leading part, his remains lie buried.

I knew Senator Wilson well. I knew him in all the relations of life—social, professional, and political. In all of these he more than measured up to all the requirements of the positions in which those relations placed him. He was not an aggressive man in any sense. He was not wont to ride forth like a knight full-armed, with couched lance, to strike with pointed steel the shield of his adversary, challenging him to mortal combat, or with mighty mace or battle-axe cleave his way through the ranks of the opposition. He was not "a born leader of men," nor a "fighter" in the sense where blows were to be dealt and felt. He cared not to blaze a path for himself through unbroken forests, but preferred rather to follow where others had led, content to make broader the paths he trod, and smoother and brighter to travel because of his having traveled therein himself.

Yet he was not lacking in force of character. He had strong convictions on all questions of public policy, and had the courage of his convictions. While the tenor of his life was even and noiseless and without the dash and brilliancy that attracts attention, in the Senate of the United States he knew that he would meet with the best minds of his country in his day, and it was his pride not to shrink from contests with such, nor did he fail to measure up to all the requirements of statesmanship that every occasion demanded of him.

He was strong and unswerving in his party faith. As a Democrat, the principles of Jefferson were the rule and guide of his faith and practice, yet he could hardly be called a partisan. His political creed was, "That he serves his party best who serves his country best." As a statesman his views were always elevated and broad-gauged. The ends he aimed at were his God's and his country's.

But it was not in the world of politics that Judge Wilson found a congenial field for the fullest scope of his ability. As a lawyer Judge Wilson ranked high, not perhaps so much as a brilliant advocate as he did as a thorough lawyer. Cautious, painstaking, and laborious in the examination of every question presented to him for his judgment, he was always a safe counsellor and advisor. Yet it can scarcely be said of him that he was fond of his profession; the practice of the law was a business with him, hardly a labor of love.

He accepted public office as a duty, because he felt that his people called him to it, and that they did so because they had confidence in his integrity, intelligence, and industry, and to accept was his duty out of grateful regard for their confidence reposed in him.

It was in his position as a judge on the bench that Judge Wilson found his most congenial surroundings. His was a judicial mind. With a bearing the most dignified, he was always upright and above suspicion. He held the scales of justice with an even hand.

Judge Wilson typified, to an absolute degree, the exalted chivalry of the profession so grandly portrayed by the eloquent Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], then a member of the House of Representatives, in his celebrated speech made in February, 1863, in the House of Representatives:

I belong, sir—

Said the eloquent Senator—

to a profession which is glorious in history. I rejoice that I have spent some of the days of my manhood in the study of a science in the adornment of which Erskine and Curran, Webster and Grimké spent their lives. The legal profession has had much to bear in the hostile criticisms provoked by an unworthy class who inhabit the vestibule of her temple and allure to their meshes the unwary pilgrims who seek her shrine for substantial relief. The artful trickery of ignoble minds has been assigned as an attribute of the profession of the law and its lower walks. That pestilential brood which swarms around the base of the pedestal of honorable fame has, to the casual observer, sanctioned such a view. But this is all unjust. There is an atmosphere near the sun in which the great jurists of twenty generations dwell; they have been the forerunners of legal liberty. They have never hung upon the skirts of governmental progress.

Other professions have formed technical barricades against the advance of popular freedom, and questioned the divinity of the people; but those who have drunk deep of the fountains of that "perfection of reason," English and American law, recognize the voice of the people as the voice of God. It is a matter of record that the legal profession has been the patient, the tolling, the inspired handmaiden of liberty. I pause, however, to inquire whether my brethren of the law have forgotten the examples of the past; whether the exalted chivalry of the profession is dead? Do you stand by power, or do you stand by the oppressed in destitution? Is your motto the scepter of exaggerated and bloated authority, or is it the farmer at the plow handle, in grand though humble demand for his rights as a free man under the Constitution? The mission of the law, as the chosen apostle of freedom, has always been to succor the oppressed, the feeble, the suffering, and the poor, and to minister, in the spirit of the great Master, to those whom Christ blessed upon the Mount of Olives.

It was in this atmosphere near the sun that lived and dwelt the honored subject of these remarks.

Of his distinguished services to his State and nation in the Senate of the United States it is not necessary that I should add to what my colleague has so well and fittingly recounted. Of his personal traits of character it were small worth for me to speak among those in this Chamber who knew him closely. Kind and courteous to all, dignified and unostentatious, slow to take offense and ready to forgive; too learned in those traits which make the gentleman to be otherwise than gentle; with a delicacy of regard for the feelings of others, and as sensitive as instinct, he moved in and out among his fellows as absolutely the impersonation of a gentleman of the old school as it has ever been my good fortune to observe.

He died surrounded by all the gentle ministries that make life worth living. Few men in public life have passed from earth away whose lives after the last page has been written will bear as close a scrutiny and have so little to hide and excuse, so much to commend, reflect upon, and take pattern by.

I saw him die! I watched his last feeble fleeting breath, and as awed I stood in that chamber of death, amid that awful stillness which is like unto nothing save the stillness of the breast when the spirit hath departed, breathing an inward prayer that "Heaven might rest the soul of my deceased friend," I could not fail to add the heartfelt invocation for myself that I might—

So live that when my summons should come to join
The innumerable caravan that moves
To that mysterious realm, where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death;
I might go, not like the quarry slave at night
Scourged to his dungeon, but sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach my grave
Like him who had but wrapped the drapery of his couch
About him and had disposed himself to pleasant dreams.

Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.
The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

The resolution was agreed to unanimously; and (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being until Monday, May 9, 1892, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 6, 1892.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read, and after correction was approved.

EXPENSES OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Attorney-General in relation to the urgent necessity for additional appropriations, to defray the current expenses of the United States courts for the present fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PAYMENT OF JUDGMENTS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Attorney-General in relation to an appropriation for the payment of judgments and awards against the United States on account of damages caused by the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

OTOE AND MISSOURIA INDIAN RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of a bill submitted by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of the remainder of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria Indians, in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes;" which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following Senate concurrent resolutions; which were severally referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be reprinted 5,000 copies of House Document numbered 51, first session Forty-ninth Congress, on Cattle and Dairy Farming; of which number 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 3,000 copies for the use of the House.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed for distribution by the Bureau of Navigation of the Treasury Department, 2,000 copies of the twenty-third annual list of the Merchant Vessels of the United States, for the year ending June 30, 1891, as prepared by the Commissioner of Navigation.

BRIDGE AT DE WITT, MO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House an act (H. R. 250) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at De Witt, Carroll County, Mo., and to establish it as a post route; with amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, that is a bill which was introduced by my colleague [Mr. MANSUR], who is now absent, and I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in. The only material amendments are those extending for one year the time within which the construction may begin, and also extending for one year the time for the completion of the work. The other amendments are merely formal.

The amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection a vote will be taken on the Senate amendments in gross.

There was no objection, and the amendments were concurred in.

OBE SUTHERLAND.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House an act (S. 1379) to provide for a pension for Obe Sutherland, late a teamster in the Quartermaster's Department of the United States.

The SPEAKER. This is a Senate bill which was amended by the House. The Senate has nonconcurred in the House amendment and requests a conference.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask that the House agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the House will insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked.

There was no objection.

ESTATE OF JAMES W. SCHAUMBURG.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 261) for the relief of the legal representatives and devisees of James W. Schaumburg.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be now put on its passage.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. KILGORE. I think the bill ought to go to the appropriate committee, and I object to its present consideration.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. This bill has been favorably reported in the House and Senate a number of times, and it has on different occasions been passed by each House. This claim ought to be paid without further delay.

Mr. KILGORE. I shall have to insist on the bill going to a committee.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be allowed to remain on the Speaker's table.

Mr. KILGORE. As the bill in that position would be liable to be called up at any time, I object.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. KILGORE subsequently withdrew his objection; and there being no further objection, the bill was returned to the Speaker's table.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER. There are on the Speaker's table a number of Senate bills, which, in the absence of objection, will be referred to appropriate committees, their titles being published in the RECORD, without detaining the House with reading them.

There was no objection; and Senate bills of the following titles were respectively read a first and second time, and referred as indicated:

A bill (S. 2599) releasing the right, title and interest of the United States to the piece or parcel of land known as the cuartel lot to the city of Monterey, Cal.—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

A bill (S. 2465) for the relief of D. D. T. Farnsworth, of Upshur County, W. Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (S. 2334) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North, at Quincy, N. Dak.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

A bill (S. 1916) to provide for the erection of a public building at Washington, Pa.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 1915) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at McKeesport, in the State of Pennsylvania—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 1708) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah J. Waggoner—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 1356) granting a pension to Abigail L. Finney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 2140) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the State of Kansas the use and control of certain lands therein for the purpose of a soldiers' home for old soldiers and their families—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 878) granting an additional land district in the State of Montana—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 817) granting a pension to Maria S. Whitney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 795) to provide for the erection of a public building at Charlottesville, Va.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 234) for the relief of the National New Haven Bank of the State of Connecticut—to the Committee on Claims.

MILITARY POST NEAR HELENA, MONT.

The Clerk having read the title of the bill (S. 1881) to establish a military post near the city of Helena, in Lewis and Clarke County, in the State of Montana.

The SPEAKER said: This bill was passed by the Senate some time ago and transmitted to the House. Since then the House has passed a bill for the same object, which the Senate has concurred in. If there be no objection, therefore, this bill of the Senate will be indefinitely postponed.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. PAGE of Maryland, until Tuesday next, on account of a death in his family.

To Mr. DE FOREST, until Monday next, on account of important business.

To Mr. COOLIDGE, for two weeks, on account of important business.

FEES OF WITNESSES IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. SAYERS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the conferees on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7818) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year 1892, and for other purposes, be, and they are hereby, authorized to consider, and if they deem the same to be necessary, to embrace in their agreement an appropriation for fees of witnesses in United States courts.

On motion of Mr. SAYERS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is not the regular order this morning the consideration of private business coming over from last Friday?

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the call of committees for reports; after that private business will be in order unless the House should dispense with it by vote.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. I ask that the call of committees for reports be dispensed with, and that the committees be permitted to file their reports with the Clerk.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Would not the regular order now be the consideration of bills reported to the House last Friday from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. This being Friday, if the gentleman demands the regular order, the Clerk will report such bills as were reported from the Committee of the Whole last Friday.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Kentucky, as I understand, moves that the business on the Private Calendar be now taken up.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. I am simply demanding the regular order.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask whether a motion to lay aside the Private Calendar in order that the House may proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill is not in order?

The SPEAKER. Under the rules, Friday in every week is set apart for the consideration of private business unless otherwise determined by the House. It has been always held, as the Chair understands, that a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar is in order under this rule, and that if the motion be voted down it is understood to be a determination by the House to dispense with private business for the day.

In this case the gentleman from Kentucky, calling up the private business, calls attention to a bill reported last Friday from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, which is now before the House. The Chair submits that perhaps the regular way to test the wish of the House as between public and private business would be to raise the question of consideration on this bill; and if the House should refuse to consider it, that might be understood to be a determination by the House to dispense with private business for the day. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1466) for the relief of the personal representatives and heirs of Henry H. and Charlotte K. Sibley.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Has the previous question been ordered on that bill, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And it is subject to be debated?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then against it, Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to raise the question of consideration in the interest of further proceeding with the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House proceed to consider the bill?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STONE of Kentucky) there were—ayes 24, noes 111.

Mr. MEREDITH. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. TUCKER. I hope my colleague will not insist upon that.

Mr. MEREDITH. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BAILEY. I renew it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I understand that this is simply a question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I withdraw the point of order.

So (no further count being demanded) the House refused to consider the said bill.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman yields to me a moment to make a request of the House.

I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to ask unanimous consent that the Military Academy appropriation bill be taken up, that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate, and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of appropriation bills.

Pending a division on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky said. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois yields to me to make a request.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done now by unanimous consent pending the division.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. I understand that. I wish to ask unanimous consent that to-morrow be set apart for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, and that the previous question be considered as ordered on the bill reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BURROWS. The previous question on what bill?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. On the Sibley bill.

Mr. BURROWS. Oh, no.

Mr. HOLMAN. If it is not to interfere with appropriation bills I shall not object, but the order must be subject to appropriation bills.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. If the river and harbor bill is out of the way—

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

The motion of Mr. BLANCHARD was then agreed to, there being, on a division (called for by Mr. RICHARDSON)—ayes 136, noes 4.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of general appropriation bills, and the Clerk will report the unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7830) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on yesterday afternoon there was a division pending, when no quorum voted, on an amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GOODNIGHT]. The amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend. after line 9, on page 41:

"Ten thousand dollars of this appropriation may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, in repairs on and clearing channel of the river between the Tennessee and Kentucky line and Burkesville, Ky."

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I had made the point yesterday afternoon that a quorum had failed to vote on the amendment offered by myself, and did so without any desire of interfering with the proceedings of the House. I wish now to withdraw the point of no quorum, and ask the gentleman from Louisiana if he will allow the amendment to be again voted upon?

Mr. BLANCHARD. In the committee?

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just read.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Chairman, it occurs to me that the amendment ought to be adopted. It does not increase the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that debate on the amendment was exhausted when the committee rose.

Mr. BOATNER. Then I move to strike out the last word.

I was proceeding to say that I think the amendment should be adopted. It does not increase the appropriation; it does not make the expenditures in this particular part of the river mandatory, but leaves it to the discretion of the Secretary of War, by making a division of the appropriation possible. In all fairness it seems to me that it ought to be adopted.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation contained in the river and harbor bill for the improvement of the Cumberland River has been very carefully considered, and in order to carry out the plan of improvement in the Upper Cumberland, which was adopted and has been in progress since 1882 by the construction of locks and dams, the entire sum which has been given by the committee should remain as appropriated in this bill. To adopt the amendment suggested by my friend from Kentucky [Mr. GOODNIGHT] and divert eight or ten thousand dollars of these funds to the upper end of the river, 325 miles above the point at which the work is now in progress, is absolutely to throw away that much of the money. The old plan of improving the Upper Cumberland was the result of surveys made between 1871 and 1874. That plan was followed until about 1884, and the plan of improvements pursued under those surveys consisted in the construction of wing dams, the building of walls along the shallow places so as to confine the water at those points, and by narrowing the channel to lengthen the period of navigation. It also extended to the removal of snags, overhanging trees, and bowlders.

By contracting the channel at the head of sand bars the current of the river was made sufficient to scour out all movable sand and gravel. The local engineer reports that this class of work has been carried to the limit of its usefulness, and has recommended its discontinuance for the future. The plan of improvement now being carried out is that of constructing a series of locks and dams in the river from Nashville up to Point Burnside, a distance of 325 miles. If this is carried to completion the Cumberland between those points will be converted into a grand canal the full width of the river, ranging in depth from 4 to 40 feet. The whole number of locks required will be about twenty-three, at an estimated cost for each lock and dam of about $250,000.

The River and Harbor Committee has given an amount just sufficient to construct one lock and dam. To some this may seem a small and to others an excessive appropriation. In my judgment, when the amount carried by the whole bill is considered, the Cumberland River has received very fair treatment at the hands of the committee, but the whole sum should stand in the bill as reported to the House. None of it should be diverted from the project of constructing the locks and dams.

To divert any of this money will be to do an injury to the work now in progress, and can not be of any benefit to the people in that locality between Burnside and, say, the Tennessee State line, where it is proposed to expend the money included in the amendment offered by my friend from Kentucky [Mr. GOODNIGHT]. Therefore I hope the Committee of the Whole will indorse the action of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, by whom this appropriation has been thoroughly considered. That committee had all the light before them, all the reports of the engineers, and all the information obtainable. The River and Harbor Committee understands the necessity of the improvement and the mode and manner and place in which this should be expended far better than the House can at this time be made to comprehend the subject in a debate under the five-minute rule on the sections of the bill. I sincerely hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I have the same interest in the improvement of the Cumberland River that my distinguished friend from Kentucky [Mr. GOODNIGHT] has, and it is not improper that I should state very briefly the nature of the improvement. I concur in what my colleague [Mr. WASHINGTON] has just said concerning the appropriation. If it would be more efficient in the improvement of the river to divert this fund as proposed by my friend from Kentucky [Mr. GOODNIGHT] I should favor it, and I think the committee would have favored it. I succeeded years ago in getting a system of improvements of the Upper Cumberland by locks and dams adopted. Therefore, as has been stated by my colleague [Mr. WASHINGTON], the system that has been adopted there and appropriated for, for some years past, provides for a system of locks and dams.

The old system, under which this expenditure would be made, if the amendment of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. GOODNIGHT] should prevail, has been abandoned, and I do not believe that the diversion of this $10,000 from the system that is now in progress to the system that was heretofore in progress would subserve the best interests of the river. That my friend from Kentucky thinks so I doubt not, and that he honestly thinks so, I am equally certain; but that I am equally correct in this statement I have not the shadow of a doubt. Now, the $10,000 could not be used under this amendment in furthering the general scheme. Every dollar that is expended on the new system in the lower river inures to the benefit of all the upper river as well, and every dollar of it tends to give a permanent improvement and one that can be utilized every day in the year.

The difference is between using the money under a system which at best can only give one hundred and twenty or one hundred and fifty days of navigation, and one which, when complete, will give navigation the year round. I do not think, therefore, the amendment should prevail. Further, it is said by the chairman that under the bill as reported any impediments or obstructions to navigation accidentally coming may be removed.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Mr. Chairman, my colleagues from Tennessee seem to be very kindly disposed about this matter. They are perfectly willing to give Kentucky credit for the $250,000 to be expended, provided that Tennessee gets all the money. This appropriation is for expenditures in Tennessee and Kentucky, but all the money is to be spent in Tennessee, and very near Nashville. I am as anxious that the permanent work go on as the gentleman from Tennessee can be, but the upper river should not be neglected. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] says that the point embraced by my amendment is some 300 miles above the improvement contemplated by the bill. That being true, if the people in Kentucky are bound to wait until all these dams are completed in order that they be benefited by slack water, they may live to be a hundred years old and fail to get the benefit of a dollar.

Now, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] says that the old idea has been abandoned, and that the present system of damming has been adopted, and is the better. If that be true, then he need not fear the amendment, because it provides that $10,000 may be expended, not that it must be expended, but that it "may be" expended, and only "may be" if the Secretary of War thinks it advisable. Why, if his argument be true there can be nothing in the amendment that will hurt him, because the Secretary of War, acting under the advice of the engineers, will certainly do what is best, and if he thinks it is not best it will not be done. Hence, I ask that the amendment be adopted.

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment, and the Chairman announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

After the affirmative vote had been taken

Mr. GOODNIGHT said: No further count is demanded. So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the section under consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

That $10,000 may be used between Burkesville and the town of Burnside.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please indicate where the amendment shall come in.

Mr. WILSON of Kentucky. To come in at the close of the section under consideration; at the end of line 9, page 41.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I would like to hear that amendment reported again; there was so much confusion that I could not hear it.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. WILSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation on page 41 for the benefit of the Cumberland River, under the provisions of the bill, will all be spent near the city of Nashville, and not a dollar of it will go to the State of Kentucky for improving the Cumberland River in that State unless the Secretary of War sees fit to use $5,000 above Point Burnside. Burnside is the point where the Cincinnati Southern Railroad, running from Cincinnati to Chattanooga, crosses the Cumberland River, and is the head of navigation.

There are two lines of packets running on the Cumberland River—one from Burnside to Nashville and the other from Burnside to Burkesville. This appropriation is intended to improve the river above Burkesville—between that town and Burnside. It seems to me, from what I know about it, that some provision should be made for improving the river between those two points in order to improve the navigation of the river for these two packet lines. The appropriation, as it appears in the bill, is for the purpose of being expended in Tennessee in making slack-water navigation, and will be expended altogether at one point, unless this amendment be adopted. I have nothing further to say upon this point.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up the time of the committee unnecessarily in discussing this amendment. This is practically the same amendment as that which has just been voted down by the committee. The only difference is that this defines the two points on the Upper Cumberland River between which this $10,000 shall be expended. It is a stretch of river about a hundred miles in length. That part of the Upper Cumberland River is just as navigable now as any other part of the river between Nashville and Burkesville. About this time last year I went up through the gentleman's district upon a tour of inspection on a steamboat, all the way from Nashville to Burnside. When there is a fair tide of water the boats run from Nashville to Point Burnside three or four times a week, which, as the gentleman has stated, is a point about 325 miles above Nashville.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. If the gentleman does not mind, he may show that it is not necessary to have the $250,000 appropriated.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Under existing law and as the bill is now, under the direction of the War Department, the engineer on the Upper Cumberland River has the right to remove snags and boulders and such other obstructions as may impede the navigation of this portion of the river, and to appropriate more money, to give a fixed sum of $10,000 for the improvement of the part of the river the gentleman's amendment applies to, will work a great disadvantage to the locking and damming which has been prosecuted just as rapidly as the money appropriated will permit, and which will eventually give the gentleman and the people of the Upper Cumberland the same advantage it will give to the people along that portion of the river nearer to Nashville.

Mr. WILSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WASHINGTON. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON of Kentucky. How long under your system of improving the Cumberland River will it take to make slack-water navigation between Burkesville and Burnside?

Mr. WASHINGTON. That depends entirely upon the amount of money appropriated by each river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Say, $250,000.

Mr. WILSON of Kentucky. Say this amount every year.

Mr. WASHINGTON. If you get only $250,000 each year, it will be twenty-three years; if you get $250,000 every other year, it will be about forty-six years.

Mr. WILSON of Kentucky. When you and I will both be out of Congress.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Oh, yes, I have no doubt that even so popular a man as the gentleman from Kentucky and I also will be out of Congress long before this improvement is completed, and the places that know us now will know us no more forever, unless we can get the gentleman from Indiana, sitting behind me, and whose desk is bedecked with flowers this morning, to withdraw his objection to the contract system and permit us to have the work done under a contract which will call for a regular annual expenditure. In that case we might be able to let out the work so as to finish it in twelve or fifteen years.

Mr. WILSON of Kentucky. What was the gentleman's object in making that trip up the Cumberland?

Mr. WASHINGTON. My object was to gather information as to the needs of the river, as to the kind of work that had been heretofore done upon it, as to the advantage of continuing the system of locks and dams, and to see for myself with what facility the river was at that time navigable for boats of the size and draft of the one in which we traveled, and to encourage the people along the river to join us in asking a larger appropriation.

Mr. WILSON of Kentucky. Why was the gentleman so solicitous about the matter?

Mr. WASHINGTON. Because I take the same interest in the improvement of the Cumberland River that my friend from Kentucky does, and that, I presume, every gentleman does who lives upon the waters that are tributary to the Cumberland.

Mr. WILSON of Kentucky. Does not my friend know that those two lines of packets of which I have spoken are absolutely necessary to the counties lying upon the river between those two points, and that that is the only way the people and the merchants of that part of the country have of reaching market? Does he not know that even the merchants who buy their goods at Cincinnati have them taken by rail to Point Burnside and shipped from there down the river?

Mr. WASHINGTON. I hope the gentleman's long question will not come out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. It will come out of the time of the gentleman from Tennessee and his time has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to answer the question of my friend from Kentucky as the answer may convey some information to the House. The gentleman's question (which I will not attempt to repeat because of its length) can be answered in this way: I do know that the free navigation of the Upper Cumberland is necessary to give a large population and a rich territory communication with the outside world. There are two separate lines of packets plying on the Upper Cumberland, one running from Nashville, not to Burkesville, but passing Burkesville and going nearly 100 miles beyond, up to Point Burnside, where the Cincinnati Southern Railroad crosses the Cumberland River, a distance from Nashville of 325 miles. Those boats run during six or eight months in the year.

When the dry season begins very early they can not run more than six months, but on a fair stage of water they can run eight months, and sometimes even as long as ten months. There is also another line of steamers running from Point Burnside down stream as far as Burkesville, a distance of about 100 miles, and back. Now, I admit that it is the gentleman's desire to have the river improved as much as possible for the benefit of his upper river boats, more, perhaps, than for the benefit of those that run from Nashville; but the Nashville boatmen are not complaining as to the expenditures heretofore made on that part of the river.

The boats that run from Nashville are larger than those that run from Burnside down, and the Nashville boats run just as many trips in proportion to the distance they travel as the other boats make between Point Burnside and Burkesville. There is no antagonism between the interests of my constituents and the interests of the gentleman's constituents. We all desire to improve this river; but I insist that at present the engineer in charge has ample power to keep open the channel between Burnside and Burkesville, and that is all we can hope to do until Congress can see its way clear to give us enough money to construct one or more of these locks or dams each year, beginning at both ends of the river.

Ever since I have been in this House I have endeavored to get a plan of that kind adopted, so as to give the upper part of the river the same advantages as the lower part, and to construct locks from Burnside down, as fast as from Nashville up, but the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has heretofore been unable to see its way clear to giving us money enough for that purpose, and to push the work that fast. Therefore, it has seemed best that we should commence at one end and build on until we get to the other, making the work continuous. That has been the decision of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors heretofore, and the House has stood by it, and I see no reason for departing from that line of action now. I hope, therefore, that the gentleman's amendment will be voted down for the same reasons that the amendment of his colleague from Kentucky was voted down.

Mr. WILSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I must differ from my colleague from Tennessee in his statement that the Nashville Packet Company is not objecting to the manner of the expenditure of these appropriations. I received a letter from the president of that company, which I filed with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, complaining that there was nothing done by the Engineer Department to improve the navigation above the points that I have spoken of.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Does the gentleman remember the name of the writer of that letter?

Mr. WILSON of Kentucky. No, sir.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I would like to know it.

Mr. WILSON of Kentucky. I am not personally acquainted with the writer; I presume the gentleman does not doubt my statement.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I do not.

Mr. WILSON of Kentucky. I am willing the gentleman should see the letter. I left it with the chairman of the committee.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I am so familiar with the feeling of those men on this subject that I want to know which of them is complaining. None have complained to me.

Mr. WILSON of Kentucky. Perhaps they knew your opinion about these matters.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me very unjust that none of the money appropriated by this bill should be expended in the State of Kentucky. It is not strange, however, that the Representatives from Tennessee should attempt to gobble everything for the special benefit of their particular State, and they undertake to deceive the members of this House by the headlines to this section, "Improving Cumberland River, Tennessee and Kentucky," when not a dollar of the money is to be used in Kentucky.

What we want is that $10,000 be put under the direction of the Secretary of War to be used, if he thinks proper, above Burkesville, between that point and where the Cincinnati Southern Railroad crosses the Cumberland River, in improving the river between those two points. It is just, it is right, that this should be done, and if the House does not do it it will not treat Kentucky fairly.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON] has said that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has acted upon this question, and that its judgment ought to be respected inviolably. I want to say for the members of the Committee of the Whole House that the members of the River and Harbor Committee have agreed in writing that the amendment offered by me yesterday should be adopted by the House, at least all the Democratic members of the committee except the chairman and one other, assented to this agreement in writing; but when I applied to the chairman of the committee, and he declined to agree to it, I absolved the other gentlemen of the committee from that agreement, inasmuch as I did not want to cause any conflict among members of the committee; I did not go to Republican members of the committee for the reason that the chairman had not assented to the agreement. Hence, so far as the members of the committee are concerned, I think I am authorized to say that they have no objection to this proposition except the objection urged by the chairman. Of course I do not impugn his motives. He has his theory about these improvements; and he has, of course, some pride of parentage in regard to this bill. No doubt he dislikes to see its "symmetry" marred; but I have not the slightest doubt that it ought to be greatly changed, and I hope it will be before we are through. I think its symmetry will be greatly improved by very material changes.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move pro forma to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I wish to add a word to what these gentlemen from Kentucky have already said in advocacy of this amendment. As to both of these gentlemen from Tennessee, I will say I have met them at Nashville in river conventions, held there for the purpose of forwarding the improvement of that river; and while we all agree very enthusiastically that it is the greatest river on the continent and drains the greatest valley in the universe, that it needs $7,000,000 to improve it, and that this expenditure must ultimately be made—that the expenditure of $7,000,000 will make this river navigable the year round—I do not agree with those gentlemen from Tennessee that the whole sum of money appropriated to that river should be expended for one particular locality.

Long years ago, when the people generally used to work the roads, as they do now in my district, by "warning in" the hands to do the work, the worst places were worked first, so that the roads might be opened to travel as soon as possible. But this committee, upheld by the gentlemen from Tennessee, who have the same interests in this matter that we have, propose to spend the whole appropriation upon the improvement of the river for a short distance. Now, we believe that by the expenditure of a small portion of this appropriation at this place the navigation can be improved where it is now so difficult—almost impassable by any craft—so that the stream may be navigable for a portion of the year, and this can be done without materially reducing the amount appropriated in the bill upon works already commenced.

I can see no good reason why the House should refuse to adopt this amendment and expend at this place the small sum of money asked by my colleague [Mr. WILSON of Kentucky]. If the worst places in the Cumberland River are allowed to wait until the whole work be completed at places where work is already commenced, then at the rate appropriations are being made—$250,000 a year—it must be a long time before our people will get relief. I hope the Committee of the Whole will adopt the amendment of my colleague and permit this small sum to be expended in the manner proposed. I will only say in conclusion that, while Kentucky and Tennessee have united in the effort to get this appropriation for the improvement of the entire river, we think the committee ought to be kind enough to divide fairly the sum appropriated between the two States.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I hope we will have a vote on this amendment. I think the committee understands it thoroughly.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question will be on the pro forma amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WILSON of Kentucky. I merely wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that my amendment does not make the appropriation larger than the bill provides for; but it prevents Tennessee from getting all of it and gives a little of it to the Kentucky end.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I believe I was recognized, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I wish to answer only a statement of my friend from Kentucky who represents the first district [Mr. STONE] who says that under the system of working the common roads prevailing in Kentucky they warn in the hands and work the worst places on the roads first so as to enable them to be traveled. I will state to him that the same system prevails in Tennessee as well as in Kentucky.

Mr. DICKERSON. It does not prevail in Kentucky now; we have good turnpikes.

Mr. WASHINGTON. And that same system has been pursued by the Government in improving the Cumberland River, an interstate river connecting the States of Kentucky and Tennessee. By reference to the reports of the engineers he will see that a considerable sum has been already expended, as I stated before, in improving the upper part of the Cumberland River under what is known as the system of wing dams. Under that system they took the worst places in the river to begin with. The engineer took the shallows and bars and by narrowing the channel of the river by the construction of wing dams running out into and parallel with the stream, they force the current to scour out the bottom by the increased volume of water, and this system forces the river to clear its own bed; to dig out its own channel. That system has been pursued to the extent of securing the greatest depth of water on the shoals that can be obtained by that process.

By that means the navigation of the Upper Cumberland has been lengthened from two to four months in the year; but the engineers report, as I have said before, that a further expenditure under that system is useless and would be a waste of money. All the engineer needs now, it will be observed, until the system of locks and dams is completed, which will eventually give slack-water navigation all the way from Nashville to Burnside, is the authority or discretion to use such money as may be necessary to take down overhanging trees here and there, to remove snags, and occasionally to take from the channel of the river a bowlder which may have rolled into the stream.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Does not that authority exist now?

Mr. WASHINGTON. Certainly; I say it is implied if not expressed.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. If it is implied what objection is there to making it specific?

Mr. WASHINGTON. The engineer has the authority, and last year used his snag boat in the entire length of the river. He removed obstructions here and there. He put painted buoys on the wing dams at the upper and lower end, so that at high water, when the dam is covered and the water extends from bank to bank, these wooden buoys will be a guide to enable the boatmen to know exactly where to strike the channel between the wing dams.

The engineer has this authority and discretion already under this bill and under existing law, as was stated by the chairman of the committee on yesterday afternoon, and it is not necessary to make a specific appropriation of $10,000, as proposed here, to do what he has already authority to do and which he can perform at a cost of not more than two or three thousand dollars.

My friend from the First district of Kentucky [Mr. STONE] says that we have worked together for the improvement of this river; that we have met in the Nashville river conventions, where we agreed about the magnitude and importance of the Cumberland River, and that we have always worked in harmony for its improvement. That is entirely true, and I hope that we shall continue to do so in the future. My object is to guard the interest of the whole river. I am not selfish in this matter. I have been in the district of the gentleman at the mouth of the river, nearly 200 miles from my district, and examined the improvements going on there last year, not because I wanted to see what was going on in his district or pry into matters that did not concern me. I was and am, as a public servant, deeply interested, and so are my constituents interested, in keeping the mouth of the Cumberland River free of obstruction, as much so as my friend from Kentucky, in whose district the mouth of the river is situated. I went all over the sand bar which had almost closed the access to the Cumberland from the Ohio River. I walked over and examined the immense dike of wooden piles being constructed by the Government for the purpose of narrowing the Cumberland so as to force it to scour its own channel. In the last Congress I consented that the entire fund, except $10,000, given by the committee on the Lower Cumberland—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I ask the indulgence of the committee to finish the sentence.

I say I consented in the last Congress that the entire sum appropriated for the improvement of the Lower Cumberland, except $10,000, should be expended in his district, at the mouth of the river, for I recognized the fact that if the mouth of the river was not kept open the Cumberland River boats could not make their way into the Ohio River, and would be bottled up in the Cumberland.

There is no selfishness in the objection I make to the amendment, but simply an earnest desire for the improvement of the river on a feasible and practicable plan.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, if there is to be further debate on this proposition I shall feel compelled to move that the committee rise to limit debate.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Very well; if the gentleman thinks he can make any time on the bill in that way I have no objection.

I move to strike out the last word.

I wanted simply to refer to one contention of the gentleman from Tennessee, which was also made yesterday by the gentleman from Louisiana, which is, that under the provisions of this bill, as it now stands, the Secretary of War has the implied power to use any of this money, or so much as may be necessary, to clear out the channel of the river, remove the snags and obstructions that are found in it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the Secretary has the implied authority to do that, I would like gentlemen to assign some good reason why they object to giving him the express authority. I belong to that line of Democrats who believe in strict construction as nearly as may be, and not in implied powers.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Do you want your question answered?

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Yes.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Because, if the bill appropriates the money specifically for that purpose and no other, the Secretary of War has no authority to change it, or to use it anywhere else.

Mr. WILSON of Kentucky. It simply says "may be used."

Mr. WASHINGTON (continuing). But of a general appropriation, he has the right, in his discretion, to expend just as much as you gentlemen want expended, and the balance will be used in continuing the construction of locks and dams.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. That shows that the gentleman has misapprehended the amendment from the beginning until now. It does not say that it "shall" be appropriated for that or any other purpose, but it simply provides that the Secretary may do so if he sees fit, and that is the power which you say he has under the bill. Now, Mr. Chairman, having answered these objections, I am willing that the House shall vote on this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw the pro forma amendment?

Mr. GOODNIGHT. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILSON].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. GOODNIGHT) there were—ayes 68, noes 56.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let us have tellers.

Mr. McMILLIN. If the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] will allow me to make a suggestion, I wish to say that if this amendment is to be adopted at all, it ought to be in the form offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GOODNIGHT]. I am fairly familiar with the needs of the river, and of the two propositions his is decidedly the better.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that debate is not in order.

Mr. BLANCHARD. This amendment ought not to be adopted in any form, and I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 83.

So the amendment was rejected.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES.

The committee rose informally; and

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the bill S. 1379, Mr. MARTIN, Mr. SNOW, and Mr. CURTIS; he also announced as conferees on the part of the House on the bill H. R. 4636, Mr. WHEELER of Alabama, Mr. NEWBERRY, and Mr. HULL.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its sitting.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Tennessee River below Chattanooga, Tenn.: Continuing improvement, $500,000, of which $25,000 may be used in continuing the work at Livingston Point, Kentucky.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "improvement," in line 1, page 42, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "eight."

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the Chief Engineer and the Secretary of War recommended for this very important river, now the third in importance in the United States, $2,000,000 as a sum that could with advantage be expended during the year covered by this bill. Since the beginning of this work for the improvement of the Tennessee River a change has taken place in the industrial condition of North Alabama and Southern Tennessee greater than has taken place in any other part of the world.

The consequent demand for cheap communication with the entire world has increased in proportion. Even without any transportation facilities except railroad communication, we have increased our exports of coal from 5,303 tons to more than a million tons; our exports of wood from $2,000,000 to more than $10,000,000, and our exports of iron and steel manufactures from $76,000 to more than a million and a quarter. The prospect of a continued and rapid increase is made manifest by the remarkable condition in which that country is placed by the hand of Divine Providence. The report of the Commissioner of Labor, which has just been published, shows that the controverted question as to where iron can be most cheaply made is virtually settled to be in the State of Alabama.

The investigations show that at many places in the South iron is made for $8.55 a ton, and in some favored localities in Alabama iron can be made as cheap as at any point in England, and by adopting the economies and perfect systems of the old manufacturing countries, there is no doubt but that iron and steel can be made cheaper in Alabama than at any other place, either in England or America. This is the character of country which asks for an outlet for its cheap iron to the entire world. That report, which I have before me, shows that notwithstanding iron can be made so cheaply in Alabama, yet the prices paid for labor in some of its furnaces and other iron industries of that State are, considering all conditions, as great, if not greater, than in any other place on the face of the earth.

I have a list here, taken from the report of the Commissioner of Labor, giving eight States, in which Alabama is reported as paying the highest wages in these industries. And yet the report goes on to say that notwithstanding that the peculiar situation and the peculiar advantages for the manufacture of iron enable the people of North Alabama to make iron more cheaply than it can be made in other localities. The report also says in addition that the labor in furnaces and factories of the South is of a most intelligent character, being almost entirely American, while in Pennsylvania a majority of the labor employed is foreign, German, French, Belgian, English, and Welsh.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think when a country presents such favorable conditions for manufacturing, only requiring, as it does, cheap transportation for its products to the markets of the world, it ought at least to have an appropriation proportionate to that which is given to other important rivers. The imperative necessity of an early completion of this work is manifest. The reports to Congress clearly show that the best interests of the country demand prompt action in this matter. Notwithstanding the importance of this work to the coal and iron industries there are other interests which are equally involved. Every industry and many of the people of all the Southern States and all the States bordering upon the Tennessee, the Ohio, the Mississippi, and the Missouri Rivers will be benefited when this great highway of commerce is opened for continuous navigation. I hope that everybody will vote for this amendment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this amendment, offered by my friend from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER], should prevail. While the Tennessee River is a very important water way, and while the improvement going on there is one of great public necessity, it is progressing already—

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Slowly.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Rapidly under the appropriations made heretofore by Congress, and will progress further under this amount in this bill.

The last river and harbor bill aggregated $25,000,000, and gave $450,000 to this reach of the Tennessee; and in this bill, although appropriating $4,000,000 less money than the last river and harbor appropriation bill, we give an increase of $50,000, or $500,000.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. But double that amount was recommended; and when we consider the great development in North Alabama, mineral, manufacturing, and agricultural, the amount I ask can not be regarded as excessive. The half million proposed by the bill is a great disappointment to the friends of this great work.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And I submit it is quite enough for this stretch of the Tennessee River. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment without making any speech. I ask for $600. I ask the chairman to allow me that, because it is not coming out of the appropriations of any other river. I beg him not to oppose that amendment. It is reasonable and really is quite necessary.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "improvement," in line 1, page 42, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "six."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, here is another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 42, lines 2 and 3, strike out the words "of which $25,000 may be used in continuing the work at Livingston Point, Kentucky."

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, there is no connection between that work and the work on the Tennessee River. That work belongs to the Ohio River, and the appropriation, while it is very necessary, should be taken from the Ohio River appropriation; and I shall move to have that amendment put on in order that the appropriation may be taken from that appropriation. The work at Livingston Point is under the supervision of the officer who has control of the Ohio River. There is no more propriety in that proviso than there would be in making an appropriation for New York Harbor to say "provided a part of it shall be used to improve the harbor at San Francisco."

Now, where there is no connection between the plants on the Tennessee River and Livingston Point and where it is under different officers, I respectfully submit and beg of the House to agree with me in this matter. I beg the House will not insist upon a proviso that part of the appropriation for the Tennessee River shall be used for the Ohio River, which is hundreds of miles from the principle work on the Tennessee River, and, as I stated, is controlled by and is under another officer. I am unwilling to detain the House longer.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of line 3, on page 42, the words:

"Provided, The amount can be spared from the improvement of the Tennessee River without impairing the improvement of that river."

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Now, Mr. Chairman, I trust that with that proviso the committee will agree to that amendment; it seems so manifestly unjust to take from one appropriation a portion of the amount to be put upon another one, which is not connected with it.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. I just wish to say this: The gentleman says there is no connection between the two rivers. Why, how can there be any question of that when the two rivers run together?

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Big Sandy River, near Louisa, Ky.: For movable dam in lieu of fixed dam, according to report and recommendation of Board of Engineers, dated November 10, 1891, and found in House Executive Document numbered 25, Fifty-second Congress, first session, $50,000: Provided, That the balance on hand from former appropriations made for the fixed dam at that point is hereby made available for the movable dam herein provided for.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Amend by inserting between the last word at the end of the second line of page 43 and the first word of the third line, the words as follows, to wit:

"In addition to the said sum."

Mr. BLANCHARD. Read the paragraph as it would appear if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

That "in addition to the said sum" the balance on hand from the former appropriation—

Mr. BLANCHARD. That is enough. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the words "fifty thousand dollars," in the second line, on page 43, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "seventy-six thousand dollars."

[Mr. PAYNTER addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Green River, Kentucky, above the mouth of the Big Barren River: For Lock No. 5, according to report and recommendation of Maj. D. W. Lockwood, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, submitted August 11, 1891, $50,000, a part of which may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, in repairs on existing locks in Green and Barren Rivers.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of the paragraph after the word "dollars," in line 10, page 43.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. That amendment is consented to by the committee, and I suppose there will be no necessity of discussing it.

Mr. BLANCHARD. It does not change the amount, Mr. Chairman, and at the request of the gentleman from Kentucky, I accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 43, at the end of line 10, amend by adding the following: "For rebuilding Lock No. 2 at Rumsey, McLean County, Ky., $65,000."

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, I know the strong inclination of the members of this House to follow the recommendations of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, but I am satisfied that the attention of that committee has not been drawn to the rebuilding of the lock which this amendment proposes shall be reconstructed, and I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee and invite him to state the reasons, if any exist, why this amendment ought not to prevail.

Lock No. 2 on Green River, at Rumsey, Ky., is the very key to the slack-water navigation of Green and Barren and Rough Rivers, for which appropriations are made in this bill. Green River, by far the most important steam that lies wholly within the Commonwealth of Kentucky, was improved more than half a century ago by the State, at a cost of nearly a million of dollars. In 1888 the General Government bought out an unexpired lease which was controlled by a corporation known as the Green and Barren River Navigation Company, and since that time the stream has been under Federal control. It was deemed advisable that the navigation of Green River should be made free, in view of the extensive commerce conducted on it. The engineers have examined and reported upon the condition of the locks and dams upon this river since the Government has controlled it. There are four locks and four dams on Green River and one on Barren. The amendment which I have offered is a proposition to rebuild Lock No. 2, situated at Rumsey, Ky., which is about 50 miles above the mouth of the river.

This amendment is based upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, who has reported that to repair this lock is impracticable. He reports that the lock ought to be rebuilt, and he assigns the reasons. Unless this lock is rebuilt navigation upon those rivers will be suspended. In this bill the committee have recommended an appropriation of $15,000 for Rough River. That river empties into the Green River only 10 miles above where this lock is situated. In this bill an appropriation of $50,000 is recommended for the construction of a lock above the mouth of Barren River, a fifth lock.

Now, I insist, as a plain business proposition, that it is not only folly, but worse than folly to make these appropriations if we propose to allow the lock, which is the very key to that whole system of navigation, to go to ruin. That the House may see precisely the merit of the proposition which I offer, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the report of the Chief of Engineers in reference to this lock.

The Clerk read as follows:

LOCK NO. 2, GREEN RIVER.

The lock walls here are in such condition that it has not been deemed expedient to attempt to repair them. The walls were not properly constructed in the first place. The land wall was made so thin that it commenced bulging out into the pit shortly after it was completed. It was dressed off to retain the normal width of the chamber, and even after the navigation company acquired control of the system the face had to be dressed off again. Finally, the earth was excavated from the rear of the wall, and cribs filled with stone built in behind, to which the wall was anchored back by tie rods and face plates. It is undercut and leaks badly, while the chamber wall is separated from the lower wing wall by a crack several inches wide at the top and extending from top to bottom of wall.

The river wall is also badly cracked, and Capt. Smallhouse, who was connected with the improvement of this river for years while the State had charge of it, and who was afterwards a member of the navigation company, being at one time its president, has told me that the backing was put in dry in the first place without mortar or grout. At the foot of the dam at one time several of the river face stones were knocked out, and he tells me that a large quantity of loose stones came out from the interior of the wall.

When the pit is filled water boils up under the river wall. It would be impossible to operate the lock were it not for the fact that about as much water leaks into the chamber through the land and head walls as goes out under the river wall. The navigation company was unable to pump out the chamber with a 13-inch pump.

I consider that this lock should be rebuilt, or rather that a new lock should be built on the river side of the old one, and I would recommend that the depth of water on the miter sills be increased to 6 or possibly 7 feet, so that the coal can be carried into the first pool and thence into the Ohio, where the water in that stream is sufficiently high. By building the new lock on the river side of the old one navigation need not be suspended, and the length of spill of the dam is great enough to permit this being done.

During the reading of the foregoing extract the time of Mr. ELLIS expired.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague be allowed to proceed with his remarks. There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. ELLIS. Now, Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the committee, you observe that this report of the chief of the engineers states that the repairing of that lock is not only impracticable but impossible. I call your attention now to another fact. The engineer recommends the building of a new lock, and states that this may be built in such a manner as not to check or interfere with the navigation of the stream. And unless an appropriation for this purpose is made, the dam there, according to the report of the engineer, will topple into the river and navigation will be indefinitely suspended.

I apprehend, Mr. Chairman, that these facts were not brought to the attention of the River and Harbor Committee; otherwise they could not have overlooked so important an item. The commerce upon this river is important. It is a river 300 miles in length, with only four locks, furnishing 200 miles of navigation. In 1891 the tonnage upon Green River was over 650,000 tons. Over a million logs were run out of that river, which found a market in the city of Evansville, just below the mouth of the river. Not only that, but it is almost the exclusive highway for a large section of agricultural country which is as fine as any in the Commonwealth of Kentucky. The Government got control of this stream at a comparatively small cost, a mere bagatelle, and now, having taken charge of it, I insist that they shall not allow the very basis upon which the navigation of those streams rests to go to ruin.

Moreover, Mr. Chairman, there is an appropriation recommended in this bill, as I have already suggested, for the Kentucky River of $130,000. That river is not so important as Green River; it is not so long as Green River; it does not run through a country that begins to be comparable to the Green River country, either in the fertility of its soil or the magnificence of its timber and mineral resources. From the point where Green River flows into the Ohio, extending up the stream for 100 miles and on either side of the river, will be found the very finest agricultural lands in the State. The farmers in that region are thrifty and prosperous, and much of the products of their lands find an outlet and a market by means of this stream. Higher up coal, timber, and iron ore abound in supplies inexhaustible, and only await the employment of capital, which is already beginning to develop this section and to increase the commerce on this river throughout its entire length.

I am not complaining that my colleague [Mr. McCREARY] has obtained $130,000 for the Kentucky River. He ought to have it; and in that connection I wish to say that the Green River rises in his district, and I think he ought to stand by Green River.

Mr. McCREARY. I think your amendment is correct. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER (to Mr. ELLIS). How much money do you ask? Mr. ELLIS. Sixty-five thousand dollars. I thank the gentleman for asking that question. The engineer reports that it will take $128,000 to rebuild this lock. I have asked only half the amount estimated by the engineer, upon the idea that the work can go on now, and, as he says in his report, can go on without interfering with navigation. In view of the economical spirit exhibited sometimes on this side of the House, and in which I share, I have thought I would be modest and ask for simply half the amount the engineer says it will take to complete this work.

In this connection, I call the attention of my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to the fact that this river goes into his State; and that this proposition affects Evansville. He is no doubt proud of that city as one of the greatest hardwood lumber markets in the world; and his people are clamorous for this appropriation, and I assume he will vote for it.

Why, Mr. Chairman, my county pays annually into the Federal Treasury more than $500,000 in taxes. We are asking here simply $65,000 to rebuild this lock, which is a source of convenience and profit not only to them, but to the whole adjacent country. I hope the committee will assent to my amendment, and that it will be adopted. It ought, as a plain business proposition, to be accepted by the chairman of the River and Harbors Committee, but whether he accepts it or not, I trust the House will sustain the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chairman, I attended the water-ways convention held at Evansville last fall. This lock on the Green River is 50 miles up from the mouth, the river emptying into the Ohio, as we all know. The condition of this lock was a subject that commanded very largely the attention of the convention at Evansville. From what I learned at that time, I am of opinion that this lock will not last much longer, and that it is much better economy for the Government to construct a new lock there than to attempt the repair of the present one.

Mr. ELLIS. The Chief of Engineers recommends that. Mr. BROWN. As suggested by my friend from Kentucky [Mr. ELLIS], that is the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, who has given the subject very thorough examination.

I do not believe in anything but very careful expenditures of public money; nor do I believe that it is economy to withhold such expenditures where they are intended for a useful purpose. Such a purpose, I think, is the one in hand; and for that reason I shall vote for the amendment offered by my friend from Kentucky.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I have always heard that the State of Kentucky is one of the greatest Commonwealths of the Union—

Mr. DICKERSON. Well, that is correct; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. BLANCHARD. That State has always been noted for its superb horses, for its beautiful women—not to speak of its gallant men; but I never heard until during the sessions of the River and Harbor Committee that there were so many streams in that State, each one of which was far more important than all the others put together, and each of which reaches the most magnificent coal fields in the known world. We were told by my friend from Kentucky, the ex-governor [Mr. McCREARY], that the Kentucky River is by far the most important stream in that State, and that it reaches the finest coal fields in the country.

We were told by my friend from Kentucky who sits over there [Mr. WILSON] and my other friend from Kentucky [Mr. MONTGOMERY] that there is no comparison between the Kentucky River on the one hand and the Green and Barren Rivers on the other, that the latter are far more important and reach coal fields far more extensive than the other. Then comes in the Big Sandy River, and my good-looking friend on my right [Mr. PAYNTER] stated that this is the greatest river in his State, and reaches by far the best portion of the coal fields of the State.

Mr. PAYNTER. I was correct.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And last we come to Licking River, and we were told that this is the greatest river in the State, reaching the most important part of the coal beds.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Government is undertaking to improve all these rivers. All of them need improvement; all of them are worthy of improvement; and I doubt not that more money could be judiciously expended in their improvement than the sum which this bill appropriates for the purpose. But, Mr. Chairman, the same might be said of 200 other rivers in the United States. The estimates confronting the River and Harbor Committee aggregated for old and new projects, $85,000,000. We appreciated that much more than the $21,000,000, which this bill carries could be judiciously expended in river and harbor improvements; but we did not see our way clear to make the bill any larger than it is; and we had to apportion this $21,000,000 on works for which $85,000,000 had been estimated, so as to get as much advantage out of the appropriation as we could.

Now, I might agree with my friend that this matter—that this lock No. 2, on the Green River—should be rebuilt, but it is not an absolute necessity at this time.

Mr. ELLIS. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. ELLIS. The Chief of Engineers states in his report that the lock is in a dangerous condition, and that it will take more to repair it than to build a new one.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The situation, so far as the Green River is concerned, is simply this: In 1888 representations were made by the delegation from Kentucky, headed by my friend on the left—

Mr. ELLIS. I beg pardon, I was not here then.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Well, the gentleman's predecessor, that the locks, four in number, on the Green River and some other locks on the Barren River, a tributary of the Green, owned by the State of Kentucky, or by a corporation chartered under the laws of the State, should be acquired by the Government to relieve the commerce, which used these rivers as highways, from tolls and imposts. In looking into the matter, for I was then a member of the River and Harbor Committee, we found that these locks on the river had been permitted by the State, or the corporation owning them, to run down and were not kept in repair, some needing repair and others rebuilding; and the proposition was made that the Government should take them, not without expense, for we were asked to appropriate a sum which was estimated to be the present value of the works, and Congress heeding that demand made the appropriation, as I now remember, and paid the State of Kentucky, or the corporation, the estimated value of the same.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. The gentleman is in error in that. The Government did not pay the estimated value of the improvements, but simply an estimate of the value of the four or five years' unexpired lease which the corporation still had. They bought out the lease, but the State of Kentucky gave the locks and dams.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I was stating my recollection; but I may not be entirely accurate, and therefore I accept the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky, that instead of buying the locks and dams we bought the lease, amounting to a sum—

Mr. MONTGOMERY. One hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Amounting to $135,000, which the Government expended and got possession of the works on the river and relieved the commerce from the tolls and imposts placed upon it by this corporation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we knew at the time that the day would come when these locks would have to be repaired, possibly rebuilt; but they have been going on using them, repairing some and using all of them, for the commerce which the river accommodates, up to this time; and the committee in considering this matter did not feel that just at this time there was an absolute necessity of rebuilding this Lock No. 2. They believe that it might be used for some time to come, and the report which the gentleman from Kentucky has had read, and which I hold in my hand, shows no such imperative necessity as has been urged upon this committee. I agree with him that the lock will have to be rebuilt after a while, but I believe from statements in the report touching the lock that it can well run for two years or longer without rebuilding.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ELLIS. If the gentleman desires further time, I ask unanimous consent that he may be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The engineer says, Mr. Chairman, this about it:

I consider that this lock should be rebuilt, or rather that a new lock should be built on the river side of the old one, and would recommend that the depth of water on the miter-sill be increased to 6 or possibly 7 feet.

If we had an unlimited amount of money to expend at this time in such improvement, this lock should be rebuilt. But inasmuch as we have not an unlimited amount of money to expend, and inasmuch as the lock can be used as it is for two years longer, and inasmuch as we appropriated in this bill at the earnest request of a portion of the Kentucky delegation a sum of money for a new lock on the Upper Green River, I submit that we have made a fair apportionment within the limits of a $21,000,000 bill for the Green River and its tributary, the Barren River.

For these reasons I do not think the amendment should be adopted. In the next river and harbor bill, which will come two years later, $128,000 can be appropriated to rebuild this lock and dam; but at this time the necessity is not so imperative as to demand its rebuilding in the present condition of the Treasury. They can get along with it; they are using it now, and we have no statement from any source that they may not continue to use it for two years longer.

Mr. PARRETT. I move to strike out the last word.

I want to say to the committee, Mr. Chairman, that I visited this lock in company with Col. Lockwood and the other members of the Engineer Corps last fall, and that upon investigation, which was made thoroughly at that time, in my presence, these gentlemen then expressed the opinion that this lock could not well be repaired, and that it was dangerous to permit it to remain without either something being done or taking it away altogether and constructing a new one. And I want to say further that within the last forty-eight hours I have received information from Col. Lockwood, the engineer in chief, who expressed the opinion unequivocally that the lock at the present moment is in a dangerous condition and absolutely demands that something should be done. He recommends the doing of that which the gentleman from Kentucky seeks to have done by this amendment.

I also state to the committee that within the last five days I have been present at a meeting of the principal business men of the city of Evansville, where the danger is pressing upon them, and where the earnestness with which they ask to have something done in this matter could not well be told. We have there at the city of Evansville eight lines of packets. We have over sixty registered steamboats. We have the greatest hard-wood lumber market in the world, and a great proportion of this lumber must find its way to the mills through this channel. Stop this and you stop an enterprise which to-day is furnishing employment in the city of Evansville to more than fifteen hundred laboring men. And it is the opinion, as expressed within the last five days by Col. Lockwood, that an attempt to repair the old lock would result in a stoppage of the channel completely for at least eighteen months or two years.

I am therefore in full accord with the gentleman from Kentucky. I adopt every word he says, and I assert from personal knowledge that the coal fields of that section of Kentucky, the forests of that section of country, and the commodities of that section are unsurpassed by those of any other territory of the same size; that this river furnishes an outlet 200 miles in length, as aided by the present locks, and that it is one of the most important channels of trade, and that this amendment is one which I think this House ought not to vote down. I am not complaining of other amendments, but I say here in this presence that I have a full belief that there is not an item contained in that bill, from the beginning to the end, of such importance as the rebuilding of this lock at Rumsey.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Mr. Chairman, with my friend from Indiana [Mr. PARRETT] I was at Evansville at the Western Water Ways Convention last fall, and on returning from that convention came by this particular lock No. 2, at Rumsey. In addition to the report of the engineer, I myself know that this lock is in very bad condition, as far as a layman's knowledge can go. The local engineer, Major Seibert, who was at the lock, also concurs entirely with and goes even further than the engineer in chief. That lock is badly broken, split from top to bottom, and there is a constant current under the land wall and out from the river wall, and if the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] will read further in the report of the engineer he will find that the engineer himself says, on page 2440, part No. 4, that—

When the pit is filled water boils up under the river wall. It would be impossible to operate the lock were it not for the fact that about as much water leaks into the chamber through the land and head walls as goes out under the river wall.

That is, if there was not a constant stream running under you could not operate it at all. It seems to me that anybody must know that this makes it very dangerous. Major Lockwood has, within the last week, added a communication as stated by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PARRETT], and I am sure it is true, that the lock is very hazardous, and in this he agrees with the statement of the local engineer, Maj. Seibert, made to me. A few months ago the captain on the boat upon which I was locked through, stated to me that he was in constant dread every time he went through that lock. We went down under the lock as well as we could and saw the water boiling out under the wall in a perfect torrent. It is impossible for anyone to tell when that lock will collapse; and there is no guaranty of safety for any vessel going in or out of it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as to the amount of the appropriation, I think the gentleman has not properly estimated. I do not, of course, reflect upon the committee, but it seems to me the committee has not properly measured the amount that should be appropriated for this river. The gentleman says they have appropriated $50,000 for the river and tributaries. The $50,000 has been for the Green River above the junction with the Barren River. He says they have given $150,000 to Kentucky River—of this I do not complain.

I join with all that my colleague from Kentucky has said, that this ought to have been given; but that was given on the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers for $500,000. That is, they gave 30 per cent. What did they give the Green River? It is a river that carries more trade than the Kentucky by half. Last year the Kentucky carried something over 300,000 tonnage, while the Green River carried over 600,000 tonnage, and the year before carried over 900,000; about double the amount carried by Kentucky River last year, and nearly three times the amount of the year before last. There was a falling off on Green last year, because of the bad condition of the works and on account of excess of year before, on account of scarcity of water for seasons of two years before. The committee has given to Green River less than 10 per cent of the recommendation of the engineers. They recommend $130,000 for the rebuilding of this dam, and I want to impress upon the House that that recommendation was made two years ago.

I went before the River and Harbor Committee then and asked that the appropriation be made, but I was put off until this year. They said: "Wait until next time and you can probably have it then." This time I came before the committee and asked for it, and they say: "Wait until two years from now," when the very foundation of the navigation upon that river is threatened with utter decay at any moment so that no transportation can be had; and we were put off with 10 per cent until two years more, 30 per cent being given to other rivers. As I say, $150,000 is recommended for this dam, and $400,000 recommended for building new works on Green River, making the recommendation of the engineers $530,000, and the committee has given $50,000, or less than 10 per cent of the recommendation.

Mr. ELLIS. I ask unanimous consent that the time of my colleague be extended.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. I will not trespass on the time of the committee.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of making a correction in the statement of the gentleman—

Mr. GOODNIGHT. Will the gentleman allow me just a minute in which to correct a statement made by him. I know he wants to be right. In 1888 this river was not bought, nor its works. The State of Kentucky ceded these works to the nation, and got not one further therefor; but the State had previously leased it to the Green and Barren River Navigation Company. Its lease would have expired in a few years. The Government bought the franchise of about four years, and for this short lease paid $135,000. The State of Kentucky gave, or donated, this work.

These works have cost the State of Kentucky over $1,000,000, and if the Government should undertake to-day to rebuild the five locks and dams in that series it would cost the Government more than $1,000,000. The Government has gotten it, paying the State nothing, paying the navigation company simply for the franchise $135,000. It seems that we could afford to be reasonable, and protect the property by expending $130,000 in rebuilding this lock, so as to perpetuate transportation. One hundred and thirty thousand dollars is not asked for at this time. Sixty-five thousand dollars will probably run it until another appropriation can be made by next Congress; and this House ought to be willing to give the amount asked. Now, sir, I can not see any difference in the continuation of an appropriation where all the work has been done and the expenses incurred by the Government, and where the work has been done by somebody else and given to the Government.

Why should any gentleman claim here that this river ought not to be entitled to aid by these appropriations, just as with other works? Why not give it to these works which have cost the Government nothing, but have been given to it by the State of Kentucky.

I understand from the local engineer, and I have no doubt that the statement is accurate, that there is a series of five dams, which give an extent of slack-water navigation greater than any other in the country. One of these pools is 60 miles long. Take the series of five dams and there are nearly an average of 50 miles in each pool; and there is no other series of works in the whole United States equal to it. Now, shall we allow that whole system to decay for the paltry sum of $65,000, or shall we make this appropriation and save the system, and continue navigation.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to correct the gentleman from Kentucky in one statement he made, doubtlessly by inadvertence. He says there was by the estimate over $400,000 recommended by the Chief of Engineers for the Green and Barren Rivers, as being the amount that could be profitably expended in the next fiscal year. He is mistaken about that. There is not one dollar of estimates made by the Chief of Engineers for work on the Green and Barren Rivers for the next fiscal year. My friend has mistaken the estimates of the local engineer for those of the Chief of Engineers. That is the difference.

Since the Government purchased the franchises on the Green and Barren Rivers the Government has made no appropriation for new works upon those rivers, or for repairs of the existing work. The Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War never make estimates recommending appropriations for new works in the sense of putting estimates for them in the Book of Estimates. They wait until Congress enters upon the work by adopting it, before estimates for continuing the work are put in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. If the gentleman will allow me, I will state that I did not mean the Chief of Engineers, but should have said the local engineers.

Mr. BLANCHARD. We had before us the estimates of the local engineers for certain new work needed upon these rivers, and certain repairs to the existing works, and we placed $50,000 in the bill for new work on the Green River.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. That is right.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Further, Mr. Chairman, I disagree with my friend in the statement that he makes that the Government of the United States received a donation very valuable to it in these locks and dams upon the Green and Barren Rivers when they were turned over to the Government. The Government, as I said before, had to pay $135,000 for the lease franchise, and when the property was turned over to the Government these locks were run down very much and out of repair. Mr. Chairman, they were not valuable works of that character, were old and in such a condition that they had become a charge upon the State of Kentucky, and upon the corporation that operated them, and the burden of maintaining, repairing, and paying the running expenses of these locks was such that everybody concerned was only too glad to turn them over to the United States.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state that that has been the most paying stock in our section of country. There has not been a time for years when a dollar of it could be bought for less than $2.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Everybody connected with the business—and the same is true of the works upon the Kentucky River which were turned over to the Government—everybody connected with them was only too anxious to dump these improvements on the Government, so that it might pay the running expenses of these locks and dams and provide for their repair and rebuilding when that should be necessary. I do not consider that there has been anything in the way of a donation to the Government in these cases. It was simply a case of asking the Government to take charge of something that was a burden to the people concerned and pay the expenses of running and repairing and rebuilding.

Mr. PARRETT. That was proposed because of the earnest desire of the people interested to have better service up the river.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. I believe the gentleman himself [Mr. BLANCHARD] was chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors which recommended the purchase of these works from the Green and Barren River Navigation Company.

Mr. BLANCHARD. That is correct.

Mr. GOODNIGHT. If it was to be such a great burden to the Government, how could the gentleman reconcile himself to recommending the payment of $135,000 for the franchise?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Oh, I did not intend to say that at all, and the gentleman has no right to infer from what I did say that I think that was not a proper thing for the Government to do. I believe the purchase was a proper thing. It relieved the commerce of those highways from burdens which previously they had to bear, and it clearly was proper for the Government to make those rivers free just as it has made free the Monongahela River in Pennsylvania and in West Virginia; but that the Government was given anything of value I deny entirely.

The Government took those works and assumed all the expenses connected with them, and what I deny is that there was in any sense a donation to the Government of anything of value. If those locks had not been there and the Government had been called upon to improve those rivers, it would undoubtedly have built the locks upon a different plan and a different scale from that on which they were built. The works were not such as the Government would have constructed; they were inadequate for the purposes for which they were used; but the Government took them and is making the most of them that is possible.

Now, Mr. Chairman, another point. We have heard the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PARRETT] speak about his observation of these locks, and about having passed through there and inspected them; we have heard my friend from Kentucky [Mr. GOODNIGHT] tell us that he has inspected them, and that the rebuilding of this lock No. 2 is necessary; we have had my friend from Kentucky [Mr. ELLIS] tell about the necessity for rebuilding this lock.

Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt but that a great deal more money than the committee recommend to be appropriated could be advantageously expended upon this river; but that is true of two hundred and fifty other rivers which are in part provided for in this bill, and, within the limits of a $21,000,000 river and harbor bill it is not possible to provide for them all according to their merits.

A MEMBER. Where is the necessity for confining the bill to $21,000,000?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. ELLIS. I renew the pro forma amendment, not for the purpose of detaining the House, because I want a vote on my proposition; but I wish to emphasize what I said in the beginning. The proposition now submitted is to rebuild this lock, which is indispensable to navigation on the Green, Rough, and Barren Rivers. Unless this is rebuilt, in the judgment of the engineer whose report has been read, navigation on those rivers will necessarily cease.

I call attention again to the fact that you have appropriated $50,000 for lock No. 5, 150 miles above this lock. You have appropriated $30,000 for Rough River, which empties into this river 10 miles above this lock. Now, as a plain, practical, business proposition, I ask this House whether or not you are going to throw away $80,000 and suspend commerce on that river, or whether you will accept the recommendation of the engineer and make this appropriation, thereby straightening and perpetuating this whole system of navigation.

It is admitted by the chairman of the committee that since the Government has had control of this stream—now more than four years—it has not appropriated a dollar for it. The Government took charge of it, and ought to maintain commerce upon it; to do less is to violate the terms of the grant under which it acquired control of it. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that my amendment ought to prevail. I ask a vote upon it. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. ELLIS to add at the end of line 10, page 43, the words, "For rebuilding lock No. 2 at Rumsey, McLain County, Ky., $60,000,"

The CHAIRMAN said: The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I call for a division.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 56.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let us have tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BLANCHARD and Mr. ELLIS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CARUTH. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after line 12, page 43, the words:
"Improving Salt River, Kentucky, by removing obstructions therein, $3,000."

Mr. WASHINGTON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question; does he think that $3,000 is enough for removing the obstructions in Salt River? [Laughter.]

Mr. CARUTH. I think it is, under the circumstances. This is a river very greatly navigated—probably more than any other river in the country. [Laughter.]

Now, when the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] talks about the rivers in the State of Kentucky—when he refers to the Licking River, the Kentucky River, the Green and Barren Rivers, and even the Ohio River—he forgets the most important stream in that grand old Commonwealth, Salt River.

A MEMBER. How about the river Jordan?

Mr. CARUTH. This river rises just beyond my district, in the district represented by my friend, Judge MONTGOMERY.

A MEMBER. Are you interested in improving the navigation of Salt River?

Mr. CARUTH. I am. I propose to send a Republican up Salt River next fall, and I want him to have easy sailing.

A MEMBER. Can you do it?

Mr. CARUTH. I have done it three times already, and can do it again.

Mr. PAYNE. We have heard you make this same speech several times on this appropriation.

Mr. CARUTH. No; you have not. I would not be a bit surprised if the gentleman should be in pain himself this fall as he sails up this stream. [Laughter.]

Mr. WASHINGTON. Will it pay for the Government to spend $3,000 for the sake of having you beat a Republican?

Mr. CARUTH. Now, Mr. Chairman, speaking seriously, the great difficulty in getting the House to consider properly this amendment arises from the fact that a great many people believe that Salt River is a myth. That is not so. This is a tributary of the Ohio River—an important tributary. There is considerable commerce upon this stream. And right at the mouth of that river are obstructions that ought to be removed in the interest of commerce, in order that the steamers from Louisville may go up and bring down the rich products of the fertile lands on both sides of that stream.

But not only that, Mr. Chairman; not only for the improvement of that commerce is this desirable, but also that the sailing of those persons who are forced to go up that stream may be made as smooth and pleasant and easy as possible under the circumstances. [Laughter.] While I believe in speaking all that is good of the dead, I believe also in doing no evil to the living that can possibly be helped. I am willing to back them up, to help them all along to the best of my ability; but when they are finally disposed of I desire to insure them as smooth and easy sailing as possible.

But the $3,000 which is asked for this improvement is a mere bagatelle. I understand that twenty-one millions are covered by this bill.

A MEMBER. Twenty-three millions.

Mr. CARUTH. Well, twenty-three millions; all the more; and shall it go out to this country, shall it be known of all mankind throughout the length and breadth of this land of ours, North, East, South, and West, that out of $23,000,000 of appropriations for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of this country not one dollar is given to that classic stream, Salt River? [Laughter and applause.] I say forbid it, my friends. Let the appropriation in this case be made, not only for this political commerce, but for the business commerce of Kentucky which uses that river.

Give me that $3,000; it is a small sum to ask. Kentucky has come up appealing here and asked you a good deal of money; but up to this time I fail to see that my friend from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, has allowed a single solitary cent. If it were not for the fact that most of the people around me have "pork in this pot" I could obtain votes against the committee; but when I rally my hosts and ask them to come to the rescue of that grand old Commonwealth, Kentucky, and her water ways, they sit still in their seats because they are afraid of offending the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana. I congratulate him on his power and success. But here is a little sum. I only ask $3,000. I have not asked a single cent more.

I do not purpose in this bill to offer another amendment to a single solitary line of the bill, but I ask you now in behalf of my district, in behalf of the commerce of the State of Kentucky, as well as of the defeated candidates for office all over the land, that all obstructions be taken out of Salt River and that the navigation be made as pleasant as possible under the circumstances. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, it is a sufficient answer, I desire to state, to the entertaining speech of my friend from Kentucky that there is no plan of improvement of the Salt River before the committee and no estimates for it.

Mr. CARUTH. I want to ask my friend whether or not I did not speak to him as chairman of the River and Harbor Committee in favor of improving the navigation of the Salt River?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Well, Mr. Chairman, so many gentlemen have spoken to me during the session about the improvement of various rivers that I do not recollect whether the gentleman from Kentucky did or not. But if he says he did, I do not gainsay his statement.

Mr. CARUTH. Why, of course I did.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I simply stated, sir, that there is nothing at all before the committee in the way of plans or estimates on which we could have acted in reference to Salt River.

Mr. CARUTH. Well, that is the very reason I asked to have it done here. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will state that some gentleman of the Kentucky delegation, I do not now remember who, has asked if I would accept an amendment proposing a preliminary examination and survey of the Salt River, and I have agreed to do so when the proper part of the bill is reached to let an amendment for the preliminary examination and survey be made, and if hereafter the object is believed to be feasible the plans and estimates can be prepared for the relief of that people.

Mr. CARUTH. Well, will you not get it finished by the November election? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky unless it be withdrawn.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, there is one portion of the argument made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARUTH] that has not received an answer, nor any consideration. So far as the material feature of it is concerned, it has been considered by the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors [Mr. BLANCHARD]. There is a suggestion in regard to the need of improvement for political purposes. Now, in view of the fact that our Republican friends during the last Congress did not make any appropriation for the improvement of Salt River, and in the ensuing autumnal voyages, successfully and without obstruction, reached its highest waters, I think it is hardly necessary for us now on their account to make this appropriation. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARUTH. I thought you were going to make a speech in favor of the amendment.

Mr. DE ARMOND. No.

The question being taken on the amendment offered by Mr. CARUTH, the Chair announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. CARUTH demanded a division, but, pending the count, withdrew his demand.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. CARUTH. I see they are afraid of Salt River. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Ohio River, Ohio: Continuing improvement, $350,000, of which sum $13,000 may be expended in completing the embankment on the south side of the Great Miami River near its junction with the Ohio River, to confine the waters of said Miami River in great floods to the general course of its channel at or near the Ohio, to the end that the formation of the bar in the Ohio now obstructing navigation may be arrested; and of said sum $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be used in improving the navigation of the river at Mound City, Ill., and $7,000 in completing the work at Shawneetown, Ill.

Mr. PARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 16, page 43, strike out the word "three" and insert the word "four," and at the end of line 2, page 44, add: "And that $100,000 of said appropriation, under the direction and discretion of the Secretary of War, may be expended in improving the river between Indiana Chute Fall and Cairo, Ill."

Mr. ENOCHS. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ENOCHS. I presented an amendment to this entire section yesterday, and it has been pending, as I understand, ever since.

The CHAIRMAN. This item was not reached yesterday, and therefore it was not open to amendment.

Mr. ENOCHS. But I offered an amendment and stated that it would be pending, and desired to have it understood that when it was reached it would be in order. It has been pending since yesterday. In the general debate I offered it and spoke upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did not have the floor to offer an amendment yesterday, but the Chair will entertain the amendment at the proper time. The Chair does not understand that it matters whether it is offered before or after the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ENOCHS. I certainly offered the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will understand that the section was not open to amendment yesterday. This is the first time that an amendment could be offered to this section.

Mr. PARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in good faith. The bill now carries $350,000 for continuing improvement in the Ohio River, etc. The amendment proposes to increase that to $450,000, and provides that of that extra sum $100,000 shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, between the Indiana Chute Falls in Indiana and Cairo, Ill.

I want to suggest to the committee here that I do not understand what is the intention of the words "improving the Ohio River;" unless it relates to the improvement of the river exclusively within the bounds of the State of Ohio. If so, there are 500 miles and more of the Ohio River for which not a dollar can be used to keep the sand bars out of the way.

I want to say further, that I can not understand why these gentlemen wish to draw the line at points like this, when they have made such appropriations as I do not complain of, for the Mississippi River, both upper and lower. I do not see why it is that this great river, the Ohio, the greatest of all rivers in point of the reception of freight, a river 943 miles in length by the channel; a river that bears on its bosom more of the freight of the great Northwest by a considerable amount than any of the other rivers of the whole Mississippi Valley, should be thus neglected.

I mean to say that it receives in tonnage, as original freight, a greater amount than any of these other rivers; and I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors [Mr. BLANCHARD] why it is that this pitiful amount of $350,000 only has been set aside to this river? Why is it that justice, and, in my opinion, fair dealing has not been had in apportioning this $21,000,000, if there was a line to be drawn beyond which they could go no further? I never heard of that line until I came upon this floor. Here are works of immense importance and necessity. Why improve the Lower Mississippi if you are going to block up or permit to be blocked up the great feeder of the Lower Mississippi, the point from which it receives its freight.

If by the neglect of the Ohio River you are going to drive this tonnage and this freight upon the railways, and break down competition in the transportation of the commodities of the country, what use have you for such improvements upon the Mississippi River, unless it be to protect your lowlands from overflow. And as I understand, that is not the purpose of the Government; but the purpose of the Government in granting money upon river and harbor bills is for the improvement of the rivers and harbors.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STORER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PARRETT], and I only ask the House three minutes in which to do it. There are few people in this country who understand how important the Ohio River is in the way of its tonnage and its traffic. I do not believe there are many gentlemen in this House who know that the Ohio River carries nearly seven times as many vessels as the Missouri and all its tributaries and the Mississippi and all its tributaries combined.

I do not believe that many gentlemen of this House know that the yearly tonnage coming down the Ohio River is 33 per cent greater than that going in and coming out of the port of New York. I do not believe that many gentlemen of the House know that the Ohio River tonnage exceeds that of the whole of the rest of the Mississippi Valley put together, including the Missouri and other tributaries of the Mississippi River, except the Ohio. Now, I am not against improving the Mississippi River or the Missouri River, but I must say that Ohio has a right to demand for the river that is named after it a full and equal share in the benefit of this public distribution of wealth.

We carry on the Ohio River, Mr. Chairman, more tonnage in a year than goes in and out of the port of Liverpool, and we carry more upon it than goes on the Hudson River, and yet you have cut the recommendation of the engineers to less than half. I do not think it is right and fair. I for one had not the benefit of appearing before the committee. That may be my fault; it certainly has been my loss, and I ask gentlemen of this House, and the committee to yield, so that a reasonable amount may be added, under the recommendation of the engineers, to carry out the recommendation and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. STORER. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I simply wanted to question the accuracy of one of the expressions which the gentleman made. I do not know whether it was purposely made or not. The gentleman called this river and harbor appropriation bill a bill for the "public distribution of wealth." Is that what it is for?

Mr. STORER. I was trying to make myself understandable even to the understanding of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood it, and I think the gentleman stated it correctly.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, every gentleman on this floor will admit the importance of the Ohio River as one of the highways of commerce in this country. It, the Hudson, and the Mississippi River are the three rivers which accommodate the greatest volume of commerce, and stand next to the Great Lakes in this respect. It is true that more steamboats are credited to the Ohio River than to the Mississippi River proper. It is true that in the census report of 1890, touching the commerce on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, that the Ohio River is credited with a greater volume of commerce than the main channel of the Mississippi River is; but one important point in making up that statement, Mr. Chairman, was overlooked.

The census officials failed to credit the Mississippi River with any part of the commerce which originated on the Ohio River, came down it, and then used the Mississippi channel as a highway. They credited the Ohio River with all the commerce originating on it.

Mr. PARRETT. That is the way, I understand, its receipt and origin there.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Notwithstanding the fact that three-fourths perhaps of that commerce, certainly two-thirds of it, used also in the main channel of the Mississippi River, no part of that commerce was credited to the Mississippi River. So the statement of the census in that respect is entirely misleading—but that is immaterial.

Mr. PARRETT. My statement was, the receipt and origin of the shipments.

Mr. BLANCHARD. That is immaterial, Mr. Chairman. The Ohio River is one of the greatest rivers in our country, and should always have an adequate appropriation made for its improvement. But let us see. My friend is mistaken when he says that this bill only appropriates $350,000 for the Ohio River.

Mr. PARRETT. I said for general purposes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, the amount that this bill carries for the Ohio River, all told, instead of being $350,000, is $545,000. It carries in it four separate items: Improvement of the Ohio River, $350,000; improving Ohio River at or near Beaver River in Pennsylvania, $100,000; improvement of the Ohio at the Falls of the Ohio near Louisville, Ky., $60,000, and the improvement of what is called the Indiana Chute of the Ohio River, $35,000, making a total of $545,000 for this river.

Mr. PARRETT. Let me state to you, if it will not interrupt you—

Mr. BLANCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. PARRETT. That all of that money is spent before you reach the falls. Now, you leave 500 miles of that river without anything except $6,000 or $7,000 for the little town called Shawneetown.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, the last river and harbor bill, the bill of 1890, appropriated less for the Ohio River than this bill appropriates, and this bill is nearly $4,000,000 smaller in amount than that bill. Now, let us see if the Ohio River had an inadequate amount appropriated for it in the last bill notwithstanding that amount was smaller than in this bill. I hold in my hand the report of the engineer, and I will read from page 288.

There was appropriated for the general service on the Ohio River in the bill of 1890 $300,000. For the same reach of the Ohio River there is appropriated in this bill $50,000 more. Here is a financial statement made by the engineer up to July 1, 1891, from which it appears that "of the unexpended appropriation made prior to 1890 they had on hand July 1, 1890, $136,648. To that he adds the appropriation of $300,000 made in the act of 1890. These two sums together foot up $436,648, which was the amount on hand on the 19th of September, 1890, when the river and harbor bill last passed became a law. Of that amount on hand September 19, 1890, they had expended up to June 30, 1891, only $119,590. To that the statement shows: Unexpended balance, $317,057; outstanding liabilities, $9,240; amount covered by uncompleted contracts, $178,820. Leaving an available balance on July 1, 1891, of $138,000.

Gentlemen say that the appropriation in this bill is not sufficient; yet it appears from this statement that a smaller appropriation made in the bill of 1890 was found to be quite sufficient.

Mr. ENOCHS. Is not that accounted for by the water being so high that the work could not be carried on?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am just stating the facts as they exist. Now, Mr. Chairman, the Ohio River has not fared badly at the hands of Congress in the past, as will be shown by this statement which I read from the report of the Chief of Engineers:

The first appropriation for the improvement of the Ohio River was made in 1827, and the total sum thus far appropriated for "Ohio River" is $5,790,000. This total includes the appropriations for the movable dams at Davis Island and Beaver, but it does not include the appropriations for "Falls of the Ohio." In addition to these direct appropriations, a portion of several combined appropriations for the Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, and Arkansas Rivers, aggregating $1,997,940.68, was expended on the Ohio River.

That is not too much; perhaps it is not enough; but I merely cite these figures to show that there has been no neglect of that river.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PARRETT].

Mr. PARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "Ohio," after the word "River," in line 15, page 43. I make this motion for the purpose of eliciting an explanation of the reason for making this appropriation in this way—"Improving Ohio River, Ohio." The question in my mind is whether the name of the State inserted there after the word "River" is intended as a limitation upon the expenditure of this money.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is correct. The word "Ohio" should be struck out.

The amendment of Mr. PARRETT was adopted.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 16, on page 43, down to line 23. I should not, under ordinary circumstances, expect to prevail, even upon a slight matter like this, against the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; but I am quite sure that after I state the facts I shall have the powerful assistance of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], whose sense of economy will undoubtedly be such that he will not be willing to make the expenditure provided for in the language which I have asked to have erased from the bill. The committee will notice that the striking out of the words proposed saves this money for the general object of improving the Ohio River for purposes of navigation, which I know, from the speech the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] made yesterday, is dear to his heart.

Upon looking at the map and the engineer's report I find what seems to me to be a very singular condition of things. An asseveration is made that a bar is forming in front of the Great Miami River in the Ohio, and that it is necessary to expend this money for the purpose of removing that bar to navigation. Therefore, a levee or dike is built for the purpose of increasing the flow of the Great Miami River; but, singularly enough, when you come to examine the construction you find that that levee commences 2 miles from the bank of the river, and as it gradually approaches the town of Lawrenceburg (which it finally encircles) it reaches a distance of from 2½ to 2½ miles from the Miami River. It would seem as if this dike commenced a great way off for its purposes and continued a great way off in order to produce its results. [Laughter.] Between the dike and the river lies 2½ miles of rich bottom land which is always overflowed at any rise of the river.

In order to make this of sufficient height to protect the town of Lawrenceburg against great floods in the Ohio it would be necessary to expend some eight or ten million dollars. But I am quite sure the gentleman from Indiana would not permit such an expenditure of the public money for any such purpose; and when he discovers, as he does now from the statement I make, the location of that levee, he will undoubtedly help me to stop further expenditure upon it.

It is a very singular thing that this bottom land, instead of rising from the bank of the Miami, slopes downward, so that it will be perceived there is no possible way in which this embankment, constructed two miles or two miles and a half from the river, can have any tendency to increase the flow of the Miami, or to increase its scouring properties, or its ability to remove a bar from the Ohio River.

The sole object is, first, to conduct some railroad tracks out of the reach of the ordinary flood rise; and, second, to protect the town of Lawrenceburg. Now, those things have nothing to do with navigation; those things have nothing to do with the proper objects of a river and harbor bill. Therefore, I feel confident that I shall have the assistance of the gentleman from Indiana; and with that assistance I shall be able to convince the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of their duty in this matter, because they are not in the slightest degree to blame. This thing seems to have originated some time back. This provision seems to have been in an earlier river and harbor bill, for which probably this committee was not responsible; and it may have originated at a time when the gentleman from Indiana himself was not a member of the House; it may have occurred during that unfortunate period when we had not the benefit of his economic assistance in stopping such things. Now, I trust I shall have the assistance of the gentleman from Indiana.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will have more time.

Mr. REED. Oh, no.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, I insist on it.

Mr. REED. Oh, no. I want the help of the gentleman from Indiana. His assistance is of more importance to this country than my having five minutes additional. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is as usual pleasant and funny; and we all laugh as a matter of course. Indeed, the pleasant face of the gentleman from Maine excites us to pleasant emotions. We are always glad to hear him talk; and he always talks very well.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a very simple statement will show that the Government engineer who has had this matter in charge has not made any great mistake.

It has been heralded around the Capitol during this forenoon that somebody was to be literally "chawed up" by the gentleman from Maine; all of us, of course, have been on the lookout, and I thought possibly it might be myself.

Mr. REED. Why, I notified the gentleman. "I thought possibly it might be myself!"

Mr. HOLMAN. No. After I heard the rumor I went to the gentleman and inquired whether he was after me. I had heard the report; it was rumored around even amongst the boys that there was to be a great onslaught, and I presume that most members here who have had anything to do with rivers and harbors were trembling in "their boots." I went to the gentleman and inquired what he was after? The suspense was becoming terrible. And he told me he was going to pitch into the little city of Lawrenceburg, Ind., or words to that effect. I do not pretend to quote him exactly.

Now, the gentleman is mistaken about one thing. I was present when the first appropriation was made for this object [laughter]; and it was made a number of years ago. If there is anything about it, the Chief of Engineers and the Representative from that district (Lawrenceburg is in my district, and I live on the Ohio River hills some miles below), and other persons connected with the public service and connected with this work are responsible for it.

From the statement made by the gentleman it would look as if the levee ought to be nearer to the Great Miami River. But that shows the gentleman's want of knowledge of the local geography. If he understood the geography of the Great Miami River, which, of course, he ought to know all about, he would know that a levee on the bank of that river would not stand against any great flood. You can not construct a levee there strong enough, I think, for such a purpose without a great expenditure. If now it had happened that the levee had been constructed on the banks of the Miami River and had protected that vast body of land, the Great Miami Valley (the finest and most fertile body of land, perhaps, of equal extent north of the Great Delta), I should then have seen the point of the gentleman's remarks. For he knows very well that I have during this session of Congress, and at other sessions, steadily objected to the policy of the Government entering into great enterprises of constructing levees simply for the purpose of preventing the overflow of lands or for reclaiming lands from the floods. I have steadily maintained that Congress could appropriate money for the improvement of the navigation of rivers, and levees if necessary to aid in navigation, but not solely to protect lands from the floods. That is the position I take now; that is the position I have always taken. If, however, the improvement of navigation incidentally relieves the adjacent lands from overflow, that is a benefit which I am glad shall follow. So that if a considerable body of land in the Great Miami Valley has been incidentally included in the advantages which might accrue from the removal of the bar at the mouth of the river it would be a matter of congratulation, I think, to the people of the whole country; but the Great Miami Valley was not embraced in this levee; it would require millions of dollars to do that. I of course had nothing whatever to do with the location or construction of the work in question.

It was the Engineer department of the Government that determined on the location of the levee to control the course of the waters of the Great Miami in great floods. I presume that the engineer selected the most available and desirable location under the provisions of the law.

The appropriation was not imperative in the beginning. There have been three appropriations made for this work, one of $18,750, one of $15,000, and the other $13,250. This proposed appropriation for the completion of the work so far as the Government is concerned is $13,000. The language of each appropriation has been the sum (naming it) "may be expended," etc., for this work.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana may be allowed five minutes longer.

Mr. REED. I hope his time will be extended.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. The engineer, for reasons that he could doubtless explain, but which I can not, thought proper to select the present site, about 2 miles below the mouth of the Miami River, for this levee. I presume the reason was that the spreading water, because the river is very wide in great floods, enabled the work to be safely located there, because being contracted somewhat above this point there is a tremendous force in the current, or because of work already done. The levee is just above the city of Lawrenceburg, and leaves of course the great valley subject to overflow, and it is often covered with water to the depth of 6 or 8 feet. The levee has nothing to do with the Miami Valley. That work has been in process of construction for several years, and, as I have said, three different appropriations were made for it.

Now, I can not for the life of me perceive what trouble there is in the matter. Col. Merrill furnished a statement when the matter was first before the committee, and when this first appropriation of $18,750 was made; and he was of opinion that that bar could not be affected by confining the flood to the Miami River in its course to the Ohio, and was not caused by the great floods.

On the other hand, engineers just as competent and river men on the Ohio River have asserted time and time again that in great floods the Ohio River deflects to the north and turns up into the mouth of the Great Miami, as it were, pouring the great flood of the Ohio and Great Miami through the city of Lawrenceburg and into an ancient channel, and right below the point of deflection is where, it is asserted, the deposit occurs which forms the bar in question. In the judgment of the engineers, the line where the levee was constructed, which was to confine the waters of the Great Miami to their natural course and confining the great body of both rivers to their channels, was the best selection for that purpose, and that by confining the waters of the Great Miami to its natural course, as well as the Ohio, would prevent the enlargement of this bar that interfered with navigation and tend to its removal.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. In a moment. And that the bar would gradually be removed by the natural erosion of the river itself. The correctness of that judgment is shown in this: This levee is not all the way round the town of Lawrenceburg, but on the north and east. It is constructed to the extent of reaching just below the upper point in the city of Lawrenceburg.

Mr. REED. Does it not surround Lawrenceburg?

Mr. HOLMAN. Not at all. Most of the work was constructed by the people themselves through an extended series of years at great expense. Gentlemen will remember that this is the city which excited the sympathy of the people of the United States in 1883 and 1884, when the whole city was overwhelmed by tremendous floods, the Ohio leaving its natural channel and with the Great Miami pouring in resistless force through the city, carrying universal ruin in their course. There was scarcely a town or a city in the United States that did not come forward promptly to the relief of that community. And yet this levee was not based on that ground. The movement was on foot before. But, as I have said, protection from flood was not the object of this improvement. It was made in the interests of the navigation of the Ohio River.

It was found, I am told, that in the last flood the bar did not increase with the deflection of the current, but that there was a gradual erosion or washing away of the bar. This bar has been a serious obstruction to navigation. I have seen, looking down at this point from the hilltop where I live, boat after boat aground at this point in former years. With this levee completed it is claimed that in time, even when the river is low, the navigation will be comparatively free. And I am sure that the river people of that whole region are thankful to Congress that these small appropriations are being made, year by year, for the purpose of securing through this levee better navigation of the river, and doing incidentally humane and beneficent service to the enterprising and intelligent people whose prosperity is assured when they shall feel safe from the overwhelming floods. They are rapidly by persistent energy recovering from the former disasters.

I now yield to the gentleman from Louisiana for a question.

Mr. BOATNER. I understand from the gentleman's argument that the levees are constructed for the purpose of concentrating the waters at that point and removing the bar by the action of the water itself?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; or rather it prevents a deposit, and the bar will gradually wear away by the erosion of the current.

Mr. BOATNER. Why, then, will not the construction of levees on the Mississippi have the same effect upon sand bars forming in its channel? Why does the gentleman advocate levees on the Ohio, and object to levees for the same purpose on the Mississippi?

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask one minute in which to give my answer to that. The tendency of the testimony is that in the Mississippi River the deposit occurs as the river goes up. The washing does not happen until the river gets within its banks. That is the difference. With the hard, substantial banks of the Ohio the case is somewhat different. I hope that the House will make this appropriation in the interest of navigation of the Ohio River, even if it gives some protection incidentally to the enterprising people who have displayed for years unsurpassed energy in building up their city after overwhelming disaster.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana has illustrated very thoroughly in his speech how good a reply can often be made without giving any facts or making any statements or producing any figures. By an earnestness of manner which is peculiar to him, I have no doubt the House is under the impression that somehow or other there is a defense in this matter, but I beg to assure the House that there is nothing of the sort. [Laughter.] It is a very simple affair, just as plain as can be. Here the Ohio River comes on its way, like that great aisle in front of the Chairman; the great Miami, like the aisle by the gentleman from Indiana, and the supposed bar being at the end of the gentleman's aisle; here where I stand would represent fairly well the place where the dike is. [Laughter.]

From the great Miami River the country slopes downward and not upward. Anybody can see that when the Ohio River is on what the river men call a "big high," the effect is simply to back up the water, to overflow these bottom lands; and instead of increasing the scouring properties of the swiftly flowing Miami, the dike absolutely stops it for 9 miles. And yet that is what the gentleman from Indiana supports, upon the ground that it helps navigation.

Now, of course the moral effect of this thing is that while the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is entitled to occupy a great eminence of virtue as being in favor of economy, retrenchment, and reform, yet I want to point out to this House that he has in him the redeeming fact that he is so human that when his district is involved these great principles are no more applicable to him than they are to the weakest of us. [Laughter.] Hence you see my idea here is to help us a little, so that we may not be consumed with envy of the gentleman from Indiana. It is the reason that we all have for pointing out the defects of those who are truly good. Now, in order to give the House an idea of what this situation actually is, I will read what the engineer says about it. You will notice the guarded language of the Chief of Engineers. He says:

The river and harbor acts of 1890 and 1888 state—

He does not state it, but throws the responsibility of that statement on Congress, and hence what he says is almost in the nature of a sarcasm. The river and harbor acts state—that the object of this work is to confine the waters of the Great Miami in great floods, to the end that the formation of the bar in the Ohio River, now forming and obstructing navigation, may be arrested.

In other words, just as if a great dike were built on Florida avenue, on the boundary of this city, away back from the river, in order to increase the navigable power of the Potomac River. [Laughter.] That is what it is.

Now, what do they actually do with this money when they get it? I am sure that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is not intending to be a friend of corporations. And yet the act of 1890, allotting $13,250 for the completion of the Grand Miami embankment, had a residue of $10,000 additional, and they contracted with the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad Company where it crossed the line of the proposed levee. A contract for this purpose was made with the railroad company at 40 cents a cubic yard. Hence another great social duty which this embankment performs is to keep a railroad out of the wet. Now, I do not object to that, but I have no doubt the gentleman from Indiana does. [Laughter.] The next step in order was to extend the levee on the east side of the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad until it reached a point where the levee merged into the roadbed to be raised of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis Railroad.

Now, there is another railroad to be benefited by this particular appropriation. So that it seems the total effect of this is to protect the country more or less—not the town of Lawrenceburg. And notice how skillfully the gentleman put in the melancholy condition of the town of Lawrenceburg; how he drew upon your sympathy and tried to get behind that town. See how skillfully that was done. He also stated the fact here that the town of Lawrenceburg had built its own levee; and, consequently, this appropriation has nothing to do with saving from further disaster the inhabitants of that unfortunate town; and the only effect of it seems to be that it lifted two railroads in out of the wet. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REED. Moreover, if I may be allowed but one moment, the Engineer department, when they make their recommendation on page 2340 of the Report of the Chief of Engineers, do not make any specific appropriation for this purpose, do not recommend any further action. Now, there are facts for the House to consider.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Upon whose official plan and specification was this dike put where it is?

Mr. REED. I can not, for the life of me, say. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. I only asked that question as a basis for another. We have as an excuse for all these improvements in this bill the fact that the engineers have given plans and specifications and saying that they are recommended. Now, if this is a sample of the kind of plans and specifications they give us, I think I would be justified in voting against the bill in its entirety.

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit me to say that his proposition is not practical. What I want to get at is this particular amendment; and if he attempts to spread it all over the bill he may find too large a force arrayed against him, which would not be desired. [Laughter.] I want to get at this sinful river and harbor bill in the way gentlemen say they would get at the "wicked tariff act"—gradually. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has demonstrated what he said the gentleman from Indiana had exemplified before him—how easy it is to make an answer without stating any facts or figures or giving any reasons for his statement. A mere slur as to what kind of a force there is in favor of this river and harbor appropriation bill is not an answer. The question that I asked was upon whose plans and specifications this dike was built. Of course we know it was built on plans and specifications, and if this is the class of specifications we are asked to vote upon it is certainly proper to question some of the plans and specifications given; and it is no answer whatever to say that there are nine-tenths of the members of this House in favor of the river and harbor bill.

I know, as the gentleman knows, that men who are right are almost always in the minority in the beginning, but they bring to them afterwards a majority which approves principles that are right; and although I am in the minority to-day, and I know that I am in this case and have been on each feature of this bill, it is no answer to say that my position would involve a large opposition and is not practical for that reason. I suppose the gentleman cares more for majorities than he does for truth and principle.

Mr. REED. Yes, that is a sad fact. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I had not completed my answer to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER]. I intended to have added when my time expired an answer to his question as to the effect of levees on the Mississippi River as producing a scouring effect upon the bottom, an erosion deepening the channel. I intended to have added this, that always when this question has been up, I have agreed to the policy of levees if necessary and proper to improve the navigation of the Mississippi River. I have contended that as a rule a levee had not that effect; but wherever in the judgment of the engineers the construction of levees was proper to benefit navigation they should be constructed. We of the Mississippi Valley all have an interest in the navigation of that great river, and if the dike or levee is necessary to improve the navigation, why of course an appropriation for that purpose should be made, or the general appropriation to improve navigation ought to be made applicable to that purpose, but not solely for the reclamation of lands.

One further fact as to the gentleman from Maine. I gathered from his statement that he had never been at Lawrenceburg, and that he was speaking about a matter he knew nothing about and has not taken time to study. He drew a diagram as remote from the case as it is possible for a gentleman of genius to devise, and we all know that he can devise a great many things—

Mr. REED. How far is it from the Great Miami River?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have said it was about 2 miles.

Mr. REED. Is it two miles and a half?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think it is 2 miles, but I put it at 2 miles in my statement. I do not know the exact distance.

Mr. REED. Then there is no mistake about that part of the diagram.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is far enough and near enough, I suppose, to accomplish its purpose. The levee was put at a place where the engineer in his judgment thought it would best accomplish the purpose. The expenditure of the money was subject to the action of the Secretary of War. In drawing up the provision originally I used the language as it occurs here, "And so much of the money for the Ohio River may be taken," leaving it in the discretion of the Secretary of War; and as a matter of course he would act entirely on the judgment of the Chief of Engineers.

Now, the fact is that the Great Miami River strikes the Ohio River nearly, I think, at a right angle, and, in view of that situation, the engineer would naturally seek a point where a levee would stand, and he selected the situation of the present levee, which was located, I think, on the track of the railroad to which the gentleman from Maine refers, where the city of Lawrenceburg had constructed years ago a partial levee. I did not say that the city of Lawrenceburg had surrounded itself with a dike. That is not correct.

The city has been engaged in this work more or less for perhaps fifty years, although it is a small city of only about 4,000 or 5,000 inhabitants. Its situation is somewhat similar, except as to the Miami River and change of currents in the Ohio in great floods to that of Shawneetown, Ill. The gentleman from Maine knew that an appropriation was made by this bill of $7,000 for the levee at that town for it is in this same paragraph with the Great Miami provision—a levee fronting the river. He could not have overlooked this item in the bill for Shawneetown, Ill. Why does not the gentleman from Maine assail that? Is this matter personal with him? He must have known that there was an appropriation for Shawneetown immediately following this Great Miami provision to aid navigation and incidentally to protect that town.

Mr. REED. Is that an objection to my amendment as to this item?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am inquiring as to the spirit in which you are acting, sir. You did not see proper to move to strike out the item of the same general character following.

Mr. REED. You will do it, will you not, if you do not think this sort of appropriation is proper?

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not do it, sir, for the reason that I do not propose to imitate your example. I do not allow my conduct as a legislator to be controlled by personal considerations.

Mr. REED. I will give you the benefit of that statement.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would not move to strike out that appropriation because I do not know the facts. The gentleman from Maine may think it is eminently proper and dignified and becoming a member of Congress to move to strike out an appropriation about which he knows nothing. In the face of the action of the Government engineer, who has been superintending the expenditure in making this great Miami River improvement, or rather providing protection against the effects of its floods, the gentleman from Maine denounces it as a mere cheat, a mere trick, as though the people of Indiana and of the community of Lawrenceburg, where this work is in progress, were base enough to ask public money for an improper purpose! If I were to assail a town in Maine, if I were to sneer at the misfortunes of its people, overwhelmed by the floods or overwhelmed with other misfortune, as you have sneered at the unfortunate people of Lawrenceburg who are to derive an incidental benefit from this work you could find no words sufficiently mean to express your condemnation and contempt. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I must say that I am amazed at the gentleman from Indiana endeavoring to take refuge in the assertion that I have said anything unkind about the inhabitants of Lawrenceburg. This House knows to the contrary. And by that act we can mark the gentleman's present condition of mind, as also by another statement he has made, that he is never actuated by personal considerations in his legislation. I do not say that he is, but I do say that I have been in this House for fifteen years, and I have never yet seen him vote against an Indiana project. That is a matter of fact as to which this House can bear me witness.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, yes, you have, over and over again. You have seen me stand in this House for hours opposing the swamp-lands bill, which would largely inure to the benefit of Indiana, and there are other instances which I might name.

Mr. REED. Possibly the gentleman is right about that one bill, if that bill affected Indiana.

Mr. McRAE. No, he is not right as to the interest of Indiana.

Mr. REED. He is not right. I supposed not. That settles the matter in the only instance which the gentleman has mentioned. Now, the gentleman from Indiana has been kind enough to say to this House that I have talked about a subject that I did not know anything about.

Mr. HOLMAN. I said so on the strength of your statement of the situation.

Mr. REED. This House has listened to my statement of the facts connected with this case. It has also listened to the statement of facts made by the gentleman from Indiana, and I ask this House, and I ask even those gentlemen who applauded the gentleman from Indiana when he sat down, from whom did they get an idea of the real condition of things there? Did they get from him even the slightest definite idea of the conditions surrounding this levee business at that point? I ask those who applauded the gentleman from Indiana if they got any clear idea from his statement? Yet the gentleman says I do not know anything about the facts. I leave this House to judge. I have described the situation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; you have not.

Mr. REED. The gentleman has not denied a fact that I have stated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I deny it now.

Mr. REED. He has admitted every item, and yet he says the total is not correct. He admits the distance of the levee from the river; he admits the character of the neighboring territory; he admits the effect of backing up the water there—

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not.

Mr. REED. He has admitted everything I have stated from first to last. I repeat, he admits every item, and yet he undertakes to dispute the total. That is his method of argument. And he appeals to you as if he had been personally attacked. He has not been. It is simply a plain showing of a transaction which has taken place in this river and harbor bill with which he was concerned; and I began this by asking his assistance to remove this thing which is contrary to his own principles and his own ideas. I am sorry to say I find him just like the rest of us—moved by local considerations. [Laughter.] I had hoped he would rise above them, and I still hope so, although now it is hoping against hope. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, a single word. Truth is a valuable commodity—one of the most valuable; indeed I do not know anything so valuable as truth. Yet the gentleman from Maine deliberately stands up in his place and says that I admit everything he states. I have had no occasion to make any admissions. I stated that this dike or levee was located by the engineer officer below the Miami River, in the neighborhood of 2 miles, for the reason, as I supposed—though I do not know personally the reason—that you can not construct a levee at any ordinary cost near the Miami River. The Great Miami comes down with tremendous force; it is a stream that rises rapidly and falls rapidly; and perhaps to avoid the expense of a costly levee the work was put farther down the valley instead of upon the banks of the river, or to take advantage of more favorable ground.

I have stated further—a fact which the gentleman entirely ignores—that I am informed experience confirms the theory upon which this improvement was commenced, that instead of there being an increased deposit on this bar the navigable condition of the river has been improved, so that, as I understand, during the low water of last year boats were not impeded in passing from Louisville to Cincinnati, the stretch of the Ohio River having the largest amount of navigation. I speak of this from information only. I do not live in the neighborhood of the work.

I have mentioned the fact that in former years small appropriations have been made for this purpose; and this bill contains an appropriation of $13,000 to complete the work. I ask the House to make that appropriation; and I assure gentlemen that no money is carried by this bill which will be more honestly and legitimately applied to public use, in my judgment, than this item of $13,000 will be if you think proper to make the appropriation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, with the quarrel between the gentleman from Maine and the gentleman from Indiana over this appropriation the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has nothing to do. But it is proper I should state why the appropriation which the gentleman from Maine has moved to strike out was incorporated in the bill.

The appropriations for the building of this embankment at the mouth of the Great Miami River commenced in 1886. An appropriation for this purpose was incorporated in the river and harbor bill of that year. It passed Congress without challenge. In 1888 another appropriation to continue the work was incorporated in the bill; and that passed Congress without challenge.

In 1890, when our friends on the other side controlled the House, still another appropriation was embodied in the river and harbor bill for this particular purpose; and that passed both Houses without challenge—

Mr. HOLMAN. It was challenged in the Senate.

Mr. BLANCHARD. But it became a law.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Here were three appropriations which had been made for this work. When the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of this House had in preparation this bill my friend from Indiana appeared before us and made a statement that this work at the mouth of the Great Miami River, to which the Government had committed itself, was not yet completed; that it would take $13,000 to complete the work; and he asked us to incorporate the appropriation in the bill to be taken out of the appropriation for the Ohio River, as had been done in previous bills.

The gentleman stated in the beginning, in 1886, when he appeared in behalf of the appropriation, again in 1888, and again in 1890, and again in 1892, that there was a bar formed at the mouth of the Ohio River—

Mr. HOLMAN. Just below.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And that it was believed this bar had resulted from the overflow of the Miami River and the consequent dispersion of the current; that if this overflow were prevented by confining the waters of the Great Miami River in time of flood, thereby augmenting the force of the current and the abrasive power of the water, this bar would be washed out. In support of that view he presented maps showing the location of the bar and the results of soundings there. This map and this statement of soundings were accompanied by a statement perhaps of an engineer (I do not know who) in writing, showing that this bar was still there; that this embankment had not yet been completed, and that this additional sum of $13,000 was needed to complete this embankment to the end that this bar might be removed.

Now, on the Mississippi River we believe thoroughly in the principle of concentration of waters to scour out bars; and I am sorry to say that my friend from Indiana has not been in sympathy with that policy upon the Mississippi River, though he is in thorough sympathy with it when it comes to the Ohio River and the Great Miami River. The principle that we invoke upon the Mississippi River is identically the principle that he has invoked at the mouth of the Miami River. So we find him in the case of the Miami River upholding the principle, while in the case of the Mississippi River we find him in sympathy with Mr. Cowdon and other gentlemen who believe in the outlet theory, or dispersion of the waters.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED. Can the gentleman from Louisiana inform me if he ever received any information as to the bar at the point indicated from the engineers or their reports?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I do not recollect any reports of the engineers relating to this bar. As I stated, we followed the law of former Congresses in making this appropriation; and thought if it was worthy of three appropriations, one in 1886 and one in 1888 and one in 1893, the small sum of $13,000 to complete it would be sanctioned by this Congress.

Mr. REED. Then another question, with the gentleman's consent. Is this recommended by the engineers, this $13,000?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Specifically not, by the reports before us on this question; but the justification of the committee in placing it lies in the fact that we merely are completing a work which three Congresses had appropriated for.

Mr. HOLMAN. I thought amongst the papers submitted to you was a statement or report from the engineer having charge of the work under Col. Merrill referring to this matter?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Well, as I stated formerly, there was a statement from an engineer accompanying the maps, a statement, too, of soundings there, and, as I am now informed by the gentleman from Indiana, it was from an engineer under Maj. Merrill, the local or subordinate engineer engaged in Government work on the Ohio under Col. Merrill.

Mr. REED. Does the gentleman remember what engineer? I am really curious to know the facts in reference to this matter and how it all came about.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have stated all that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of this Congress had before them.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman from Maine is anxious about the inquiry, let me say that before anything was done in regard to this matter, back in the year 1885, perhaps, I asked the House to make an appropriation of some money to make a preliminary survey or to put it in the list of work to be surveyed. That was done, and the survey was made as far back as 1885. Or I think the first appropriation was made in 1886. I have not examined the papers, but I take it that the work has been carried on under the recommendations of the engineers since that time.

Mr. REED. It is a matter that I would like to be informed about in some way.

Mr. RAINES. Mr. Chairman, I believe that this bill is one in which the House has at different times taken a very deep interest. I come from one of those districts which unfortunately has no "pork in this barrel," and consequently I have been rather a disinterested listener, desiring to form a candid judgment and vote as the thing seems to be right or wrong. I have observed closely the debate with that view.

I have been inclined to sympathize with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in his effort at retrenchment and reform on this bill, and rather to criticize my friend from Maine, and more especially the gentleman from Missouri for the very bitter attack he made on the gentleman from Indiana yesterday. It is another illustration of the fate of reformers, their unfortunate fate.

There has been called to my attention, however, a statement from a Democratic newspaper in regard to the gentleman from Indiana, and in connection with these other assaults upon him I want to extend to him my sincere sympathy for these attacks made upon him by the gentleman from Maine and the gentleman from Missouri. I read in this newspaper extract—

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the gentleman proceeds will he excuse me to ask him a question?

Mr. RAINES. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend says that I was attacked on yesterday. I was not conscious of being attacked. The gentleman must have meant somebody else.

Mr. RAINES. There is no mistake about it, and the gentleman has my sympathy.

Mr. HOLMAN. Who made the attack on yesterday to which you refer?

Mr. RAINES. The gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not hear his remarks.

Mr. RAINES (reading):

There is no doubt now that Mr. HOLMAN of Indiana is one of those conscientious but limited obstructionists against whom the generous and enlightened sentiment of a community always has to make its most obdurate fight in any scheme of improvement or any effort to keep abreast of the advancing interests of the time.

In the debate on the naval appropriation bill he evinced all the stubborn pugnacity of the rural hardshell who opposes the introduction of the railroad, the macadamizing of the highway, and the proper lighting of the main street.

This estimable order of personage abounds in all insular communities, and he does more from a mistaken frugality and an eight-by-ten conservatism to hamper enterprise and worry intelligence than all the other latent forces in society.

Snatched from his environment to face the gigantic interests of the Republic, he brings the penny-wise sagacity of the village economist with him. He thrashes out great questions with an old-fashioned flail. No new international reaping machines for him. He spins his time-honored arguments with the jenny his grandmother used. He holds up the stocking in which his family have saved their dimes as the only American example for the United States Treasury. He objects to a navy for very much the same reason that he objected to painting his barn when at home: it costs too much. He insists that the Republic should do without store goods unless it can get them without paying cash for them. If the country wants a navy it should wait till it gets eggs enough to trade off for it. What does the country want with store goods, anyway, when there are salt pork and molasses in the house. "No, sir," says Mr. HOLMAN, "I am not one of those fellows who want a lock for their stable after the horse is stolen. I am one of those fellows who don't believe in having any horse at all. I believe in walking. You can't steal my horse if I don't have any."

That this kind of argument should continue to thrive in legislation after it has left the town pump is almost incredible in our day, but it does make a show of function in Congress in the person of Mr. HOLMAN, who represents in the lawmaking body that narrow penuriousness which was first nationalized and formulated by "Poor Richard," and which has since become a sort of religion in Vermont and Indiana among certain deacons who put 5 cents on the contribution plate and take 4 cents change off.

Historically these "forehanded" men have stood across the path of human progress everywhere with their pockets buttoned, and everywhere they have claimed some kind of pious superiority in being mean. They rose up when it was first proposed to light the public thoroughfares with gas and threatened the mephitic vengeance of heaven against the rash innovators; they fought the locomotive in favor of the canal boat; they have left their protest on record against the expense of public sewers; they stood manfully shoulder to shoulder in this city for the town pump and the public cistern against the introduction of Croton water.

They opposed the National Guard in favor of the trained band of their fathers, and they contrast to-day the sinful expense of an organized police against the pastoral serenity and cheapness of the leather-headed watchmen. They kept song out of the church for generations, because it was sinful to pay for a cottage organ. They delayed education because good teachers would no longer board around and eat salt pork and molasses. They shut beauty out of their private and public domain because it is a foolish waste of money.

Mr. HOLMAN, with his fist clinched on a quarter of a dollar, tells the American people that it doesn't want to protect itself, for it costs money to do so. The best protection for our coast and our commerce is to save up our pennies.

This argument may have some weight in Indiana, where patriotism can hide behind a row of States in case of invasion. It may be of no consequence that the country is unprotected. But it may be of some interest, even in Indiana, to know that the Democratic party is unprotected, so long as it has no better bulwark than Mr. HOLMAN's picaresque economy.—Commercial Advertiser, April 22.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

This is from a Democratic newspaper, gentlemen, and Democratic newspaper editorials should be interesting to you. Now, Mr. Chairman, between the attacks of a Democratic press in New York, the New York Commercial Advertiser, and the attack of his own friend and colleague from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL], I want to say, and I think I speak for Republicans on this side when I say, that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has our deepest sympathy.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAINES] in his essay thought proper to refer to me. Now, during all my experience on this floor I have never made a personal attack on any member, and certainly I did not attack the gentleman from Indiana, and to that extent the gentleman from New York is in error in using my name in connection with his own attack.

Mr. RAINES. I did not make any attack.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. I did criticize the attitude of certain members on this floor in regard to certain public questions, which I had a right to do; but I did not make any personal reference to the gentleman from Indiana, for whom I have the highest respect, nor would I.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PARRETT. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That $25,000 of the sum appropriated for continuing improvements on the Ohio River may be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War to protect the banks and confine the waters of the Ohio River to the present channel and to prevent any cut-off or change in the channel of said river at a point on the Kentucky side between the mouth of the Green River, in the State of Kentucky, and the city of Evansville, in the State of Indiana. And should the Secretary of War be unable to obtain such land along the bank of said river as may be necessary in the prosecution of such work, according to the plan and recommendation of Lieut. Col. Merrill in his report of September 19, 1890, upon reasonable terms, by agreement, purchase, or voluntary donation and conveyance, he is hereby authorized to apply to the circuit or the district court of the United States for the State of Kentucky, and in the name of the United States Institute and carry on proceedings to condemn such lands as may be necessary for the completion of such work, and in such proceedings said court shall be governed by the laws of the State of Kentucky so far as the same may be applicable to the subject of condemning private property for public use.

Mr. PARRETT. Mr. Chairman, as a result of two examinations made at the instance of resolutions that passed this House, one in 1886 and one in 1889, the engineers have recommended the work that is intended to be commenced by this sum as necessary, worthy, and proper. The city of Evansville stands just at the end of a peninsula. In time of flood the water crosses over this peninsula, and it is to prevent the water from making a new channel, by which great commercial interests of the city of Evansville would be injured, and the navigation of the river dangerously injured that this amendment is offered. I have sought to get an arrangement with the committee, and know that it is useless for me to press this amendment unless I can have their consent.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The difficulty with this amendment is that it diverts from the Ohio River money that is absolutely necessary to keep that river in condition, and to keep it navigable. The amount asked by the engineers for this purpose was $706,000. Only $350,000 has been appropriated. Fifty thousand dollars of that has been applied to special purposes and that leaves only $300,000. Now the estimate is as follows:

Low dams and dikes	$600,000
Davis Island dam	11,500
Rock bar at mouth of Licking River	20,000
Dredging	20,000
Removal of rock reefs in channel	20,000
General administration, inspection, engineering, and contingencies	35,000
Total	706,500

The amendment, while it might otherwise be proper, diverts too much of the money which is absolutely necessary to keep this great river in condition, a river that is 1,000 miles in length, and that has more commerce upon it than any other river in the United States. If the gentleman's amendment had passed, increasing the amount of the appropriation, I would not have objected to it; but the purpose of this amendment is to take from the money appropriated this amount, which will leave too little to keep the river in condition to float this immense commerce, and therefore I am opposed to it and the committee are opposed to it.

Mr. PARRETT. Then, believing that it would be useless to submit this amendment, believing that I can get the amendment put in in the Senate or have a special bill passed for that particular purpose, it being a deserving object, I am inclined not to encumber this bill with it and will withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Rouge River, Michigan; completing improvement, $11,690.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what trade and commerce there is on Rouge River?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, the river Rouge, in the State of Michigan, flows into the Detroit River. The lower part of the river is within the limits of the city of Detroit, steamboats navigate it for several miles up, and there is much commerce on it. There are large mills and large manufacturing establishments upon it, and a turning basin was needed there. It is within the Congressional district of my friend from Michigan [Mr. CHIPMAN] who is more familiar with the subject than I am, and I will turn the gentleman from Kansas over to him for further information.

Mr. SIMPSON. It occurred to me that the river is not wide enough to turn a boat in, and it seems to me that the trade and commerce on that river would hardly be worth such an appropriation. I would be glad if the gentleman would explain the necessity for this appropriation.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I will tell my friend that since he sailed upon the lakes very great changes have occurred on the river Rouge, which flows into Detroit River below Fort Wayne, and is as large a river as the Chicago River was originally. The banks are lined with mills, gas works, pulp works, and other kinds of works. All the principal lines of railroad have come in there; the Exposition buildings are there.

Instead of asking that the channel be widened all the way up, there being plenty of depth of water inside, we have simply asked that the stream be widened at one point, in order that the largest vessels may be turned around. Vessels two or three hundred feet long can not clear it and have to be towed stern foremost down the river. We want a place where such vessels can be turned around. We might have been less modest and asked to improve the whole river, but we have only asked what is necessary. There are 40,000 people there now.

Mr. SIMPSON. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Mississippi River, from the mouth of the Ohio River to St. Paul, Minn.: Continuing improvement, $1,500,000: Provided, That on and after passage of this act additional contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to carry on continuously the systematic improvement of the Mississippi River between the points mentioned, or said materials may be purchased and work may be done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $1,500,000 per annum for three years, commencing July 1, 1893: And provided further, That of the amount herein appropriated $700,000 shall be expended from the mouth of the Ohio River to the mouth of the Missouri River, and $800,000 from the mouth of the Missouri to St. Paul; and the amounts for which additional contracts are authorized to be entered into shall be expended in like proportion. The Secretary of War is hereby directed to pay, out of the sum allotted to the river between the mouth of the Missouri River and St. Paul, to M. J. Adams, $5,000, in full of all claims and demands growing out of the test made by him of what is known as the Adams flume on the Upper Mississippi River, the said test having been authorized by Congress; and the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, use a portion of said sum of $800,000, if necessary, to further protect the east bank of the river from erosion, and thus prevent the destruction of the embankment of the Say Island levee, and a further portion, in his discretion, in the rectification of the river at Clarksville, Mo., and in repair of harbors of refuge at Stockholm, Wis., and Lake City, Minn., on Lake Pepin.

Mr. HATCH. I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 23, page 48, insert, as another proviso to the paragraph, the words:

"Provided, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay out of said appropriation the value of work actually done by the Hannibal Ferry Company, not exceeding the sum of $2,107.50, on the Mississippi River Government dike opposite Hannibal, Mo., during the months of September, October, and November, 1891."

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I will simply explain to the committee that it does not increase the appropriation. This Government dike which was built as a part of the system of improving that portion of the river, had formed such a bar above it and below it that it was absolutely necessary that this work should be done at a time when there was no money appropriated for it, during the lowest water last fall. When an appeal was made to the officer in charge, Maj. Rufner, at Quincy, to do this work, after promising repeatedly to do it, he finally said that the funds in his hands were exhausted; and although it was important and ought to be done, he could not do it. The work was actually done by the Hannibal Ferry Company. It is part of the permanent improvements of the river. It is a Government work itself, and this is simply to authorize the Secretary of War, after investigation, to pay for the actual work done on that Government dike. I hope there will be no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out on page 47 all after the word "dollars," in line 17, to the word "and" in the second line on page 48.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chairman, in offering this amendment I do not desire to be understood as being unfriendly to appropriations to the Mississippi River. I favor the largest possible appropriations to that river the public good will justify. Now, if I had my way about it I would make the subject of Government appropriations to the Mississippi River a separate and independent matter. I would not weigh down appropriations to that river with appropriations to the various creeks and points throughout the country that in my judgment are not legitimate subjects of Government aid. I would much more cheerfully vote for all the appropriations in this bill proposed for the Mississippi River if they stood alone than I would vote for them in connection with the other matters of appropriation in this bill.

The part of the paragraph in question which I move to strike out reads:

Provided, That on and after passage of this act additional contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to carry on continuously the systematic improvement of the Mississippi River between the points mentioned, or said materials may be purchased and work may be done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $1,500,000 per annum for three years, commencing July 1, 1893.

It will be seen, Mr. Chairman, that this language not only fastens this large charge upon the Government in cases where contracts are made, but also in cases where no contracts whatever exist. Again, there is no limitation in this bill from first to last directing what improvements or works shall be constructed, or where or in what manner they shall be constructed. In the other cases of contracts, the bill provides for some sort of specific plan or direction for the prosecution of the work, but there is none whatever in this case.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption for a moment?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. The work in all these places is to be done in accordance with the plans and specifications of the local engineers in charge.

Mr. BROWN. There is no such statement in the bill.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Of course not.

Mr. BROWN. That may be the law. Whether it be or not my friend from Mississippi is better advised than I am.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I fear the gentleman does not understand me. Take, for instance, the Hudson River. There is nothing in the bill which specifies just what work shall be done there. Now, I understood the gentleman [Mr. BROWN] to say that there was, and that is the point on which I wish to correct him.

Mr. BROWN. My friend is talking about appropriations that are now available.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I am talking about the contract system. The Hudson River improvements are placed under the contract system by this bill.

Mr. BROWN. If the gentleman will be patient a moment I will show him that I am right about this matter, and that he is wrong. In every case where the appropriation is at once available the bill itself gives some specific direction as to how the work shall be prosecuted, but in the cases to which I refer in some instances it does, and in others it does not.

For instance, take Savannah, Ga.: the bill says that "contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the present project of improvement." In that case the "present project of improvement" contains the plans and specifications. So with Mobile, Ala., Charleston, S. C., the harbor of refuge in Rhode Island. In the case of improving the Hudson River, New York, the contract must be "to carry out the plan recommended by Board of Engineers, United States Army, dated October 1, 1891." In the case of the Lower Mississippi River the contract must be "to execute the work in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved by the Chief of Engineers."

In the case of the ship canal, the work must be done "to carry out the plans proposed by Gen. O. M. Poe, the army engineer, of the date January 20, 1891." In every case mentioned where the contract system is to be applied, except the case in hand, the bill gives specific directions as to how the work is to be done and places some one in charge of it. But not so with this case. This paragraph provides for the expenditure of $4,500,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague be allowed five minutes more.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BROWN. As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, there is contained in the language which this motion proposes to reach a provision for the expenditure of $4,500,000, every dollar of which may be expended with or without contract; and I submit to this House whether that is a safe way to legislate. And the money may be expended without Congress having given any certain direction as to the course of the expenditure, or the plans to be followed in the work, or the character of the work to be prosecuted. This contract system, as it has been called, and I suppose properly called, embraces a good deal in this bill. The bill carries appropriations immediately available amounting to $21,702,321. It fixes a liability upon the Government which must be met by future appropriations, commencing one year hence, of $26,702,321.

This aggregate appropriation of $26,000,000 applies to ten places, as follows: Harbor of refuge, Point Judith, R. I., $1,075,000; Charleston (S. C.) Harbor, $1,878,000; Savannah (Ga.) Harbor, $2,792,000; Mobile (Ala.) Harbor, $1,515,000; the Hudson River, New York, $2,197,906; Upper Mississippi River, $4,500,000; Lower Mississippi River, $7,500,000; ship canal, Great Lakes, $2,840,000; canal, Columbia River, Oregon, $1,310,500; making a total exceeding $47,000,000; nearly one-half of which must be appropriated now and the liabilities for the rest fixed to be paid annually. It does seem to me that this appropriation is extravagant, especially that portion of it which proposes to involve us in expenditures in the future.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. BROWN was rejected.

Mr. CASTLE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 18, page 47, strike out "St. Paul," and insert in lieu thereof "Minneapolis."

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment is to extend the improvements on the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Ohio to Minneapolis, instead of stopping at St. Paul, as proposed in the bill. My amendment conforms to the language which has been used in the appropriation made in the Fiftieth and Fifty-first Congresses; and I can see no good reason why the River and Harbor Committee should have made a change at this time.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will state to my friend from Minnesota [Mr. CASTLE] that the work on the Mississippi River between the cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis is entirely different from that on the Mississippi River below St. Paul. Between Minneapolis and St. Paul the river is a series of rapids; and the character of the work is necessarily different. While it is true that in the bill of 1890—

Mr. CASTLE. And 1888 also.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Perhaps in 1888, too, we designated Minneapolis as the high point of the river to which the appropriation should extend, yet prior to that time the terminus had always been St. Paul. In 1888 and 1890, in order to do certain work between Minneapolis and St. Paul, we struck out St. Paul, which had been the former terminus of the work, and put in Minneapolis. But when we came to put under the contract system the stretch of the river from Cairo up, we concluded it was better to stop at St. Paul. From St. Paul down the work is all of one character, while from St. Paul to Minneapolis, which is as high as the work of improvement can be extended, there is required an altogether different character of work. That was the reason which influenced the committee, and I think the provision ought to stand as it has been reported. Whatever work may be needed on the Mississippi between Minneapolis and St. Paul should be provided for in a separate appropriation, and I will remark, as I am reminded by my colleague on the committee [Mr. STEPHENSON], that there was on hand for the work between Minneapolis and St. Paul $50,000 unexpended from a former appropriation, and for this reason we did not incorporate a specific appropriation in the bill for the work between Minneapolis and St. Paul.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. CASTLE was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Mississippi River from Head of the Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River, including salaries, clerical, office, traveling, and miscellaneous expenses of the Mississippi River Commission: Continuing improvement, $2,500,000, which sum shall be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved by the Chief of Engineers, for the general improvement of the river, for the building of levees, and for surveys, including the survey from the Head of the Passes to the headwaters of the river, in such manner as in their opinion shall best improve navigation and promote the interests of commerce at all stages of the river: Provided, That on and after passage of this act additional contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to carry on continuously the plans of the Mississippi River Commission as aforesaid, or said materials may be purchased and work may be done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law not exceeding in the aggregate $2,500,000 per annum for three years, commencing July 1, 1893.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. The Clerk has been reading so rapidly, he may have passed the paragraph to which my amendment more directly applies. I desire to offer an amendment to come in at line 8, page 48.

Several MEMBERS. Too late.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will say to my friend from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] that we have passed that paragraph and the succeeding one.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. I have been waiting here to offer the amendment, and have been trying hard to keep up with the Clerk in his rapid reading. I hope the chairman of the committee will not be technical in this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that not only has the paragraph commencing on page 43 been read some time ago, but amendments were offered to it and discussed. The amendment of the gentleman will not be in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. I hope the chairman will not object.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I can not agree to going back.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Well, I will get the amendment offered; the gentleman will not gain anything.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am simply pursuing a policy—

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent the Chair will submit the request.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. I will offer the amendment so as to come in at the end of the subdivision in regard to the Mississippi River.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has finished reading the paragraph beginning with line 7, page 49, and ending with line 4, page 50.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Very well, I will offer the amendment at this place. It may involve some slight change in the language.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman, to come in at the end of line 4, page 50.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized to purchase or have constructed self-moving dredge boats of large capacity, at a cost not exceeding $100,000, said sum to be taken from the appropriation for river improvement between the mouth of the Missouri and the Ohio Rivers, and said boats to be kept employed between said rivers in removing bars and other obstructions to navigation.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask the serious attention—

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, is that amendment germane?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make a point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will reserve my point of order. It is that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri. I do not like to have a point of that kind hanging over my head.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana reserves a point of order.

[Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri) there were—ayes 23, noes 70.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to add the following words to the paragraph just read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That no money appropriated by the foregoing provision shall be expended in the construction of levees unless in the opinion of the Secretary of War such levees shall be necessary and proper to aid in improving the navigation of said river.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not desire to discuss the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For ship channel 20 and 21 feet in depth and a minimum width of 300 feet, in the shallows of the connecting waters of the Great Lakes between Chicago, Duluth, and Buffalo, $500,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to carry out the plans proposed by Gen. O. M. Poe, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, dated January 20, 1891, and printed as House Executive Document No. 207, second session Fifty-first Congress, for such ship channel, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $2,840,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated.

Mr. WHITING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 50 strike out lines 23 to 25, and on page 51 strike out lines 1 to 8, inclusive, and insert:

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to appoint a board of engineers to whom the report of Col. O. M. Poe, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, dated January 20, 1891, upon the subject of a 23-foot channel from Duluth and Buffalo through the Great Lakes and connecting waters, shall be referred. Said board of engineers shall make a thorough examination of said subject, and shall report what extent the said improvements will have on the general level of the water in the Great Lakes, and the harbors connected therewith, and also what sums of money will be required to deepen to 20 feet of navigable water the harbors of the Great Lakes system now under improvement by the General Government. Said board shall also report as to the practicability of raising the water level of the lakes and connecting harbors by damming the Niagara River."

Mr. WHITING. Mr. Chairman, I hope the committee will give this amendment consideration. There is no great demand or urgent necessity that this appropriation should carry at this time. No one can deny the fact that the freight rates of last season were lower than in any previous year, and the freight rates this year are lower than they were last year. The object of the bill is to secure low rates of transportation. I repeat that to-day the freight rates are lower than at any other time in the history of transportation upon the lakes, and I also claim that a majority of the vessel interests upon the lakes are not anxious that this work should be entered upon at this time. It was stated yesterday by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CASTLE] that the railroads owned the vessels which carried 90 per cent of the grain.

Mr. CASTLE. The gentleman is in error. I did not state anything of the kind.

Mr. WHITING. That the railroad boats and the boats known as the whalebacks carried 90 per cent of the grain.

Mr. CASTLE. Nothing of the kind.

Mr. WHITING. You will find it in the RECORD of yesterday.

Mr. CASTLE. All right; go ahead.

Mr. WHITING. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LOCKWOOD] stated that the steamboat interests, in order to compete with the railroads, had built and completed and had now larger steamers to carry 90 per cent of the grain. One of these two statements is wrong. The fact is that both of them are wrong. The real fact is that the railroad companies, desiring to continue and increase the amount of their business over the railroads from Buffalo east, found it necessary to build large steamers. This, with the fact that they were very rapid steamers, enables them to make rates low enough to compete with the so-called tramp boats, which are those that are not owned by railroad companies. They wish to compete with them in carrying the grain to Buffalo, and to ship the grain by rail instead of by canal. Now, these large boats do not find water enough to load to their full depth.

Last year a number of these large boats unloaded part of their cargo at Port Huron. There is 21 feet of water until you pass the St. Clair River. They unloaded part of their cargoes there and went on their way. They loaded partially again and came back to where the Grand Trunk road enters the United States or crosses the St. Clair River, and there completed their cargo. So that this demand for this money comes to-day from the railroads at Buffalo. They want the Government to spend this money for them, and I claim that there is not another port on the lake besides Duluth and Buffalo that is asking for this great appropriation. You take all the harbors on Lake Erie, Fairport, Ashtabula, Cleveland, Black River, Huron, Sandusky, and Toledo, and none of those have 21 feet of water. At Cleveland there has been $100,000 spent for a breakwater, and to-day the water is so low that the harbor inside the breakwater can not be used.

I do not see the propriety of appropriating over $3,000,000 and starting upon the work at this time, making contracts for that great work, when there has not been a demand from the vessel interests; and this House ought to appreciate the fact that it is never aggregated capital that gives low prices. It is the competition of the great number of small boats that go into Buffalo that, in connection with the Erie Canal, make the low rates. The railroads running from there east are anxious to cut off this competition. They build these large boats to do it. Last year a large amount of grain went into Georgian Bay ports. A large amount of grain stopped at Port Huron and went east by the Grand Trunk. There they have a 21-foot channel. The commerce can be carried on in that way, and all that this resolution asks is that a committee be appointed by the Secretary of War to investigate what this cost will be.

Some have estimated that the cost will be $100,000,000, and that all these cities lying along the shores of the lakes will be damaged; that the value of property will be damaged. It is a quite common belief. The question was asked me yesterday, "Why did not these men protest?" There are very good reasons why they have not protested. The men that own the tramp boats, boats of 2,000 tons and less, appeal to the shippers of ore for their business, and if they oppose anything that the ore shippers want they are fearful that their propositions will not be accepted.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUSHNELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that this is a new appropriation, entering upon a new scheme for the improvement of navigation in the Great Lakes. The Northwest is desirous of having just as good facilities for water communication with the Atlantic coast as can be had; but for one I am not in favor of jumping into the middle of that pond of improvement until I know something more about how deep it is. We have in the last few paragraphs of this bill, including this one, provisions for money to be paid out of the public Treasury to the amount of $15,340,000 for three schemes of improvement only. We ought to be a little careful how we launch out gold by the ton into these lakes without knowing whether or not we are going to have the benefits that are sought to be derived from the expenditure.

Now, I perceive that this bill refers to a report of an army engineer as the basis upon which the appropriation is recommended, one Gen. O. M. Poe.

I have procured that report, and it is far from satisfactory to me as a justification for entering upon this scheme of improvement. That engineer bases his ideas simply and solely upon the reason that the commerce will justify it; and he makes no survey, makes no pretense of giving such facts and figures as, it seems to me, every business man ought to know about as a justification for entering upon such a scheme.

I sincerely hope that I am wrong in this matter, and that the chairman of the committee or some other gentleman upon this floor can show to me that I am wrong; but it does appear just as I have stated, and in justification of my statement I desire to call the attention of the committee to these words of the engineer, on page 2 of his report:

I am of opinion that the waters referred to in the act are worthy of improvement by the General Government to the full depth named. This opinion is based upon the magnitude of the commerce using them.

That is all the basis he gives for it; "the magnitude of the commerce."

He goes on and estimates its cost, and tells us how much the cost would be to excavate to that depth at the foot of Lake Huron, and between Lake Huron and Lake Erie, and figures up the cost of the depth of 21 feet at $3,339,567.96.

There is not in that report one word as to the fall of water from Lake Huron down through these improvements—the difference in altitude between Lakes Michigan and Huron and Erie, the rate of flow and volume of water, the extent of the reservoir, its capacity, and the effect of emptying it faster. It was stated on this floor yesterday that the deepening of the channels and the making of this depth of water for navigation would lower the upper lakes. If so, it might not improve navigation at all, and would surely injure all their harbors. It was said here yesterday, and not disputed, that there were only two ports on the lakes that vessels drawing that depth of water could now enter. Thus, it amounts to this, that it is for the benefit of two ports on the lakes, not one of them in the State of Wisconsin. These two ports are Buffalo and Marquette. We are asked to begin this scheme of improvement and authorize contracts for the expenditure of this vast sum of money, tons of gold, absolutely and literally, tons of gold to be poured into this scheme of improvement, without anybody knowing how much its completion to make it fair to all ports will cost.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BUSHNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my time may be extended a few minutes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will not object to that; but I wish to
